V. Laſtly, I ſay that Dr. Hyde owns that there are yet ſome Sects, which by acknowledging God and the Devil to be two coeternal Natures, agree with the Aſſerters of Zoroaſter's Oromazes and Arimanius. His Words are: (d) Dualiſtæ Diaboli coæternitatem aſſerunt. Sunt enim ex Indo-Perſis & Dualiſtis Manichæi aliiſque Hæretici (ut quidem ſunt in omni Religione,) qui opinantur Diabolum à ſeipſo proceſſiſſe, ut loquuntur, i. e. æternum fuiſſe, & malos Angelos ſibi creâſſe: ſed eſt Hæretica opinio, eaque ignorantium quorundam hominum qui peculiariter vocantur ——— Thanavîa, i. e. Dualiſtæ ſeu ——— Domini duorum, ſcil. Aſſertores ſeu Autores duorum principiorum; qui (inquit Shahriſtâni,) Lucem & Tenebras ſeu Deum & Diabolum ſtatuunt duo Principia coæterna, in contrarium Magorum qui Lucem æternam & Tenebras creatas ponunt. Iſti tales fuerunt, qui Oromazen & Arimanium duos eſſe Deos aſſerebant ut Plut. lib. de Iſide & Oſir. There are ſome Particulars which are very extravagant concerning the Syſtem of the Zoroaſtrian Magi in the Book of a Mahometan. From which I ſhall cite what relates to the Dualiſts, who hold ſtill the coeternity of the Devil, and with great importunity aſk whence Evil could proceed, if the Evil Principle was not Eternal? (e) Addit Shahriſtâni, Quod Magorum peculiaris ſit ——— Doctrina, ubi ut ſtatuant ——— Doctores ſeu Gubernatores duos æternos, qui dividuntur in Bonum & Malum, & Probitatem ac Improbitatem, Emolumentum ac Nocumentum. Horum unus nominatur Lux, & alter Tenebræ, ſc. Yezdan ſeu Deus, & Ahreman ſeu Diabolus. Eorumque Religionem eſſe ſec. hanc diviſionem ſeu diſtinctionem; & quod omnes Magorum Quæſtiones verſantur ſuper duobus Cardinibus quorum unus eſt Explicatio cauſæ Miſtionis Lucis & Tenebrarum, & alter eſt Explicatio Liberationis Lucis à Tenebris. Et quidem, quod Miſtionem ſtatuant ——— Initium ſeu ſtatum à quo, & Liberationem ——— Reditum ſeu ſtatum ad quem. I ſhall further cite what follows; Supradictus Shahriſtani pergit narrare, Quod Magi ſtatuant ——— Principia duo, ſicuti diximus: ſed quod ——— Magi originales non exiſtiment expedire ut ambo ſint ——— æterna ab initio; ſed quod Lux ſit ——— æterna ab initio, & Tenebræ ——— productæ. Et quod tum, differunt de modo ſeu cauſa productionis ejus: cùm à Luce producitur tantùm Lux, quæ non producit ullum Malum; & quomodo ergo productum Principium Mali aut alius cujuſvis rei, cùm nihil adjunctum (ſeu par fuerit) Luci quoad primam ejus productionem & æternitatem. Some of the Magi aſſert that Arimanius, or the Evil Principle was Created by an Evil thought which aroſe in the Divine Intellect. This thought was, What will happen, if I meet with no oppoſition? What can be ſaid more deteſtable? Would it have been more Blaſphemous to allow this Arimanius to be Eternal, than to aſcribe ſuch an original to him? (f) Aſſerentes Yezdân fuiſſe ——— ſine initio æternum, & Ahreman fuiſſe ——— productum & creatum. Yezdân cogitaſſe ſecum, Niſi fuerunt mihi controverſiæ, quomodo erit? Hancque cogitationem pravam naturæ Lucis minus analogam, produxiſſe Tenebras dictas Ahrenam, qui naturâ diſpoſitus ad malum & diſſidium & improbitatem & noxam & omnia nocumenta: & prodiens contra Lucem, eam oppoſuit tam naturâ (ſeu facto) quam dicto. They add, that a War aroſe betwixt the Army of Light, and that of Darkneſs, which at laſt ended in an Accomodation, of which the Angels were the Mediators, and the Conditions were that the Inferior World ſhould be wholly left to Arimanius for the ſpace of ſeven Thouſand Years, after which it ſhould be reſtored to light. Before the peace Arimanius had extirpated all the Inhabitants of the World. Light called Men to its aſſiſtance whilſt they were yet but Spirits: Which it did either to draw them out of Arimanius's Territories, or in order to give them Bodies to engage againſt this Enemy. They accepted the Bodies and the Fight, on Condition that they ſhould be aſſiſted by the Light, and ſhould at laſt overcome Arimanius. The Reſurrection ſhall come when he ſhall be vanquiſhed. This, they conclude, was the (g) cauſe of the Mixture, and ſhall be the cauſe of the deliverances. The Greeks (h) were not ignorant that Zoroaſter taught a future Reſurrection.

(G) That he was no Idolater either with reſpect to the Worſhipping of Fire, or the adoration of Mithra.] Dr. Hyde (i) affirms that the Aſſerters of the Ancient Religion of the Perſians deny that they ever paid any Divine Adoration to the Stars. They maintain that they do not adore the Sun, but only turn towards it when they pray to God. He has found amongſt Zoroaſter's Precepts that the Sun ſhould be ſaluted, and Praiſes beſtowed on him, but not that there is any obligation of Worſhipping him religiouſly. He proves that their Ceremonies might very juſtly paſs for Civil Honours, and to this purpoſe he makes ſome extraordinary curious Obſervations. He applies to the Fire what he ſays of the Sun; the bows and proſtrations of the Perſians before the holy Fire were not a religious Adoration, but only a civil ration of Mithra. What appears least uncertain amongst so many things as are related of him, is that he was the Introducer of a new Religion into Persia, and that he did it about the Reign of Darius the Successor of Cambyses. He is still in great Veneration amongst those Persians, who are not of the Mahometan Religion, but retain the Ancient Worship of their Country. They call him Zerdursht, and several believe that he came from China, and relate an infinite Number of Miracles on that Head. A Specimen of which you may see in Mr. d'Herbelot's * Bibliotheque Orientale, and in the History of the Religion of the Benjans, Written in English by Mr. Lord, and Translated † into French by Mr. Briot. Consult also Mr. Huet's Evangelical || Demonstration, and Dr. Hyde's Book. Many Authors believe that all the Works which have gone (H) under the Name of Zoroaster, some of which are yet in being, are supposititious. But Dr. Hyde is not of that Opinion.

(a) Herbe- lot, Bibl. Orientale pag. 931. col. 1.

(b) Ibn ... in libro de ... & ... apud Hyde supra cap. 9. pag. 163.

(c) This seems to signify that Zoroaster ...

(d) Id. ib. pag. 164.

(e) Id. ib. cap. 22. pag. 295. ponit Shahriſtani de religionibus Orientalium.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Ejuſmodi fuiſſe cauſam Miſtionis, hanc vero cauſam liberationis, Id. ibid. pag. 296.

(h) See what Diogenes Laertius in prooem. n. 8. relates concerning the Doctrine of Magi.

(i) Hyde ubi ſupra cap. 1. pag. 5.

* At the word Zer-[illegible]. † This [illegible] Printed at Paris in the Year 1666, in 12. || Pag. [illegible] & seq. & pag. [illegible].

ZUERIUS BOXHORNIUS (MARK) Professor at Leyden, the Son of James Zuerius Minister at Bergen-op-Zoom, and Anne Boxhorn the Daughter civil one. (a) Idem quoque dicendum est de eorum cultu Ignis, quem (ut supra vetigimus,) imitando Judæos in Pyreo servârunt. Nam quamvis ei exhibuerint Reverentiam quandam, eamque per Prostrationes, hæ tamen non fuerunt Adoratio divina, sed tantum civilis, prout se habet mos Orientis erga quosvis Magnates, & olim fuit erga Angelos tanquam Dei Legatos ejus personam repræsentantes; cujus rei exempla affatim suppetunt non tantum in Vet. Test. sed & in Novo, ubi fœminæ ad veram Fidem conversæ (visis apud Christi sepulchrum Angelis,) adorârunt procidentes faciebus in terram: eique quamvis probè scirent non esse Deum, sed Angelos, ut constat ex verbis earum profitentium se vidisse visionem Angelorum. He concludes (b) That the World is to blame to call them Idolaters, and Worshippers of Fire, and will have it that (c) Zoroaster was an Instrument to oblige them to persevere in the true Faith. He was a Man educated in the knowledge of the true God, whom he peculiarly Worshipped in a Natural Cave, in which he placed several Symbols representing the World. Mithra representing the Sun filled the Master's place. But it was not to Mithra, but to the true God that he paid his Adorations: (d) Is cùm esset insignis Philosophus, Religione austerus, & totius Matheseos peritissimus, hac ratione Persas sui admiratione perculit, & suâ Doctrinâ attentos reddidit. Præsertim coluit Deum in naturali quodam Antro, quod ille Mithriacum effecit & mirificè ac mathematicè comparavit, ubi scil. Mithra præsidens, hæc inferiora Regio modo regens, eaque imprægnans sedebat: adeo ut omnes postea non tantum in summis Montium jugis antiquissimo more Deum colebant, sed & subinde illius exemplo, Sacra sua Mithriaca in tali Antro præstare & peragere didicerunt. In eo erant Mithra & hujus Mundi Symbolica philosophicè & mathematicè spectanda & contemplanda, non autem colenda; quâ itaque in re falluntur Autores; nam Persæ tunc talia Simulachra non colebant. Consult this Learned Man in the 4th Chapter of his Work, where besides other excellent Learning you will find these Words of Porphyrius: (e) Referente Eubulo, Zoroastres primus omnium in montibus Persidi vicinis Antrum nativum, floridum, fontibusque irriguum in honorem Creatoris, & omnium Patris Mithræ, consecravit: ita ut Antrum conditi à Mithrâ Mundi figuram ei repræsentaret: ea verò quæ intra Antrum, erant certis invicem intervallis disposita, ut Elementorum Climatumque mundanorum symbola seu figuras gererent.

It is observable that in this Book of Dr. Hyde there are some Observations which may be serviceable to the Jesuits, on Account of the Charge brought against them concerning the Honours paid to Confutius, which they affirm to be purely Civil. Father le Comte who hath been so much (†) blamed for asserting that true Religion or the knowledge of the true God hath been in China for several Ages, will find a very good Second in this Learned Oxford Professor.

(H) Many Authors believe that all the Works which have gone under the Name of Zoroaster —— are supposititious. But Dr. Hyde is not of that Opinion.] Suidas affirms that there were extant 4 Books of Zoroaster περὶ φύσεως de natura; a Book περὶ λίθων τιμίων de gemmis, and five Books of judiciary Astronomy, ἀστροσκοπικὰ ἀποτελεσματικὰ prædictiones ex inspectione stellarum. It is very likely that what Pliny relates (f) as quoted from Zoroaster was taken from these Books. (g) Eusebius cites a passage, which contains a magnificent Description of God, as the proper Words of Zoroaster, ἐν τῇ ἱερᾷ συναγωγῇ τῶν Περσικῶν in sacro Persicorum rituum commentario. I know no Body who doth not believe that Clemens Alexandrinus says, that (h) Prodicus's Followers boasted of having Zoroasters's occult Books. But perhaps his Words are intended in another sense, and mean that they bragged of having the occult Books of Pythagoras. They have Printed, together with the Verses, of the Sibyls at Amsterdam in 1689. according to Opsopeus's Edition, oracula magica Zoroastris cum Scholiis Plethonis & Pselli. Those pretended magical Oracles are but two Pages. Let us see Mr. Huet's Judgment on all the Books in general which go under Zoroasters's Name. He calls them all supposititious. (i) Ex cujus (Zoroastris) famâ & existimatione provenit eorum fallacia qui sub ejus nomine Oracula quædam magica Græcè scripta incautis obtruserunt. Edita illa sunt cum Pselli & Plethonis scholiis: sed si nares admoveris fraus subolebit. Vetustiora quidem illa sunt, nihilo tamen γνησιώτερα (sinceriora) Oracula, quæ Crœsi temporibus extitisse narrat (1) Nicolaus Damascenus. Insinceros quoque eos dixerim libros, quos Chaldaicè scriptos, & Chaldaicis commentariis illustratos, & effata ac sententias complexos Johannem Picum habuisse ferunt; insincerum & librum Zend, mihi de nomine solum cognitum, quo ritus magicos, & ignis colendi disciplinam ajunt contineri —— Insinceros & quos Hermippus, Plinio teste, ducentis versuum millibus sub Zoroastris nomine conditos indicibus quoque positis explanavit. Ex iisdem falsariorum incudibus profectus est supra memoratus Persicarum Legum codex Zundavastaw, quem vetustissimum tamen conjicio, & eumdem fortasse, qui ab (2) Eusebio Collectio sacra Persicarum rerum appellatur. Indidem profectus & quem se in arcanis habere jactabant, qui Prodici Philosophi doctrinam sectabantur, ut est apud (3) Clementem Alexandrinum; indidem & quos commemorat (4) Suidas; & qui de Magia, Zoroastris nomine, scripti circumferebantur, ut habet (5) Auctor Recognitionum; & quem tradit Auctor Astrologiæ cujusdam Persicæ, Ebraicè redditæ, ab eo lucubratum, & Regnum Dei fuisse inscriptum, & manibus Persarum assiduè gestari esse solitum. Mr. Huet adds, that (k) Porphyrius (l) reproached the Christians with the forgery of several Books, and boasted of having proved that the Apocalypse of Zoroaster was one of those supposititious pieces.

Dr. Hyde acknowledges that the Ancient Hereticks (m) alledged some supposititious Prophecies concerning JESUS CHRIST under the Name of Zoroaster; but he saith that they had not presumed to do it, if they had not known that there were Authentick

---

(a) Id. ib. pag. [illegible].

(b) Id. ib. pag. [illegible] See also pag. 22.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 16.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Porphyr. de Nympharum antro apud Hyde ib. cap. 4. pag. 118.

(†) The Sorbonne condemn'd that proposition the 18 of October 1700.

(f) Plin. lib. [illegible] cap. [illegible] p. m. [illegible] & lib. [illegible] cap. 10. pag. [illegible]

(g) Euseb. præpar. Evangelii. l. 1. sub fin. pag. [illegible]

(h) Clem. Alexandrin. Strom. lib. 1. pag. 304.

(i) Huet. ubi supra pag. [illegible]

(1) Nicol. Damasc. Hist. l. 7. in Exc. Const. Porphyr.

(2) Eus. Præp. Ev. l. 1.

(3) Clem. Alex. Strom. 1.

(4) Suidas in Ζωροάστρης.

(5) Auct. Recogn. l. 4. c. 27.

(k) Huet. ib. p. [illegible]

(l) Porphyr. in vita Plotini.

(m) Hyde ubi supra in epist. dedicat. See also chapt. 26. p. 340. 341.

ter of a Miniſter at Breda (A) of whom I ſhall ſpeak hereafter, was Born * at Bergen-op-Zoom in September 1612. He was but ſix Years Old when his Father dyed. Sometime after he followed his Mother to Breda, and was there Educated by Henry Boxhornius his Grand-Father by his Mother's ſide, till the Spaniards became Maſters of that City in 1625 when he was carried to Leyden by Henry Boxhornius, who having no male Iſſue obliged him to take his Name. This Young Scholar made ſuch great and haſty progreſſes, that he publiſhed ſome very good Poems in 1629. on the taking of Boiſleduc, and ſome other Victories obtained by the Hollanders. He was then aged but 17 Years: And but 20 when he (B) publiſhed ſeveral conſiderable Works. Whereby he got ſuch a great Reputation, that the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden the ſame Year 1632. conferred on him the Profeſſorſhip of Eloquence. Which he ſo very worthily diſcharged that Chancellor (C) Oxenſtiern, then Ambaſſador extraordinary from Sweden in Holland, offered him an Honourable Poſt, in the Name of Queen Chriſtina; but Boxhornius preferred his Station in his own Country to all thoſe (D) Honours: and continuing as well by his Lectures as Books to give frequent Proofs of his excellent Learning, and of an Exquiſite knowledge in Politicks and Hiſtory, he was made Profeſſor of thoſe two Sciences in the place of Daniel Heinſius who was declared Emeritus. He diſcharged this employ in a manner very Advantageous to his Auditors, and very Glorious to himſelf. He was for ſome time embroiled with

* He was [illegible] Breda was the [illegible] Henry, he was a Miniſter, and died in 1643, being but little above 33. Years of Age, and a very Learned and hopeful Man. Jacob. Expoſitio in vita Marci Zuerii Boxhornii, epiſtol. Boxhorn. præfixa. See alſo epiſt. Boxhornii pag. 168. edit. Francof. 1679.

Authentick Works of Zoroaſter in which were contained ſuch Propheſies. He believes (a) that God revealed to Zoroaſter the coming of the Meſſiah, and that he inſerted this Miraculous Revelation in his Works. He takes the Zundavaſtaw, which Mr. Huet rejects, to be an Authentick piece: He gives us the true Title and Analyſis of it, and is perſwaded (b) that this Author's Works were written in the Ancient Perſian Language, and are preſerved to this preſent time.

(A) The Daughter of a Miniſter at Breda, of whom I ſhall ſpeak hereafter.] His Name was Henry BOXHORNIUS or BOXHORN, and he was Born in Brabant. He run through his courſe of ſtudies at Louvain, and after having obtained the Degree of Licentiate in Divinity, he was promoted to the Deanry of Tillemont, and expreſs'd ſuch a warm Zeal for the Romiſh Religion that he was made Inquiſitor. But he changed his Opinion, and embraced the reformed Religion. He was firſt of all a Miniſter in the Dutchy of Cleves, afterwards at Woerden in Holland, and then at Breda (c). He left this laſt place when the Spaniards took it in 1625. and retired to Leyden, where he took care of the Education of his Grandſon, (d) who affords the Matter of this Article. Henry Boxhornius wrote ſome Books of Controverſy. His Antagoniſt was Henry Cuyckius, who accuſed him of falſely pretending himſelf of the Family of the Boxhorns. This Cuyckius Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Louvain, Grand Vicar and Official to the Arch-Biſhop of Mechlen, and at laſt Biſhop of Ruremonde, publiſhed in 1596 an epiſtola paranetica, in which he exhorted Henry Boxhorn to return into the Pale of the Church. To which Boxhornius anſwered that he would have nothing to do with ſuch a Corrupt Church. Cuckius returned to the Charge: And Boxhorn replyed by an Anti-Cuyckius Printed at Leyden, in 1598. Boxhorn was Attacked on his Gentility; for Cuyckius would not admit of his pretenſion of being deſcended from the Houſe of Boxhorn, a Noble Family in Brabant (e).

(B) And but 20. when he publiſhed ſeveral Works.] As Theatrum Urbium Hollandiæ; Scriptores Hiſtoriæ Auguſtæ (f) cum animadverſionibus ac notis; Poetæ ſatyrici minores cum commentariis; Plinii Panegyricus. He deſerved a place amongſt the illuſtrious Youths, of which Mr. Baillet hath drawn up ſuch a Curious Liſt; for to ſay nothing of the Verſes which he publiſhed at the Age of 17, and which were very much (g) applauded, it is certain that in 1631. he publiſhed an Edition of Suetonius with Notes, which engaged the Profeſſors of the Univerſity to adviſe him to put in for the Greek Profeſſor's Chair then Vacant (h). He was therefore an Author at 19. and how many Books did he publiſh the following Year? There was no occaſion for an Officious Lye to make him an early Author; the ſtricteſt Truth was ſufficient for it: Wherefore I wiſh Valerius Andreas had been more exact, and had not ſaid that Boxhornius publiſhed Books at the Age of 16, and that he was made Profeſſor of Eloquence and Literature before he was 19 Years of Age. The firſt of his Productions appeared in 1629. and he was not Profeſſor before 1632. Add to this that he was 13 Years old when he left Breda to go to Leyden: Wherefore they are miſtaken by one Year who make (i) him but twelve Years old when he was matriculated at Leyden. It happened to Boxhornius as to ſeveral others; when Age increaſed his Learning he grew ſomewhat aſhamed of his firſt Productions, and accordingly diſcovered a ſort of deſire to diſown them. Tho' withal it appears that he had ſtill a Tenderneſs for them, ſince with this ſort of diſinheriting he took care to publiſh the Praiſes which Salmaſius gave them in his Letters to him. Claudius Salmaſius juveniles hoſce conatus ſibi adeo probari tum temporis literis ad Boxhornium datis ſignificavit, ut maxima quæque ab ipſo non tantum ſperare, ſed ſibi & eruditorum orbi & quidem ex vero promittere adeoque præſagire fuerit auſus: quæ illius Herois verbis ipſis publice (k) alibi leguntur, eo nempe loco quo Boxhornius ipſe poſtmodum hæc ipſa aliaque Juvenilia damnavit, ac proinde inter ſcripta ſua vix numeravit. This is what we find in Boxhorn's Life. Which brings into my mind what Grotius wrote to Scriverius (l).

(C) Chancellor Oxenſtiern —— (m) offered him an Honourable poſt.] Boxhornius's Hiſtorian doth not mention in what Year this Chancellor came into Holland; which if he had taken the pains to expreſs, he had avoided an Error in Chronology: He had not ſaid that a little after Boxhorn's refuſing to go to Sweden, he refuſed to go to Dort, whither he was invited by the Magiſtrates to teach in their College which they re-eſtabliſhed in 1634. Non diu poſthac cum Reip. Dordracenæ proceres illuſtre ſuum & vetuſtiſſimum a Reformatione in fœderato Belgio Gymnaſium anno quidem unde octogeſimo ſuperioris ſeculi erectum, ſed collapſum reſtaurarent an. 1634. omnium calculis Boxhornius dignus judicatus & habitus eſt cui res literaria in copromovenda committeretur. The Dates are confounded; for it is certain that the Chancellor of Sweden did not come into Holland before 1635. The Magiſtrates of Dort offered Boxhorn a better Penſion than he had at Leyden, and yet he did not accept their Offers; which procured him an Augmentation of his Sallary at Leyden. This is the common conſequence of theſe ſorts of refuſals, when Men either are willing, or know how to make the beſt of them.

(D) Boxhorn preferred his ſtation in his own Country with Salmaſius, but that Quarrel (E) which obliged him to take Pen in hand againſt that formidable Critick, was at laſt Compoſed. He freely communicated his knowledge to other Authors, as Valerius Andreas confeſſes in his Bibliotheca Belgica. He died after a tedious ſickneſs at Leyden on the 3d. of October 1653. Aged 41 Years. He wrote on ſeveral Subjects (F) and particularly on the Invention of (G) Printing. On which head he Advanced an Opinion very different from that of Mallinkrot, and yet his Diſſertation procured him the Friendſhip of that Learned Man. He very cloſely ſtudied the (H) Antiquities of Gaul, which led him to dive into the Scythian Tongue, and the Antiquities of that Nation, on which he wrote very ingeniouſly in Dutch and in Latin. He alſo was about a Bibliotheque (I) of Women, illuſtrious for their Learning, and Writings; but this Work never appeared. Some have pretended * that the Publication of a ſmall Tract, which he dedicated to his Scholars, and which explained the Conſtitution of

---

(a) [illegible] Huet [illegible] pag. 158. [illegible]

(e) [illegible] Valerius Andreas has committed the ſame fault as to the Hiſtoria Auguſta.

(g) Omnium applauſu [illegible] ſe non ſemel audivi. [illegible] Bæclius in ejus vita.

(h) Suetonius tanto omnium favore exceptus eſt, ut clariſſimi hujus Acad. Profeſſ. ad linguæ Græcæ profeſſionem quæ jam vacat adſpirare me voluerint. Boxhornius in epiſt. p. m. 15. edit. Francof. His Letter is dated the 29. of September 1631.

(i) As Valerius Andreas does. Hankius de Roman. rer. ſcript. pag. 295. has tranſcribed moſt of his Faults.

(k) In apologia pro commentario ad Agricolam Taciti adverſus Dialogiſtam.

(l) See the Article Thomæus,

(m) Ab Axelio Oxenſtierna regni Cancellario Fœderis Germanici Directore, ad Fœderatos Belgas legato extraordinario Reginæ & eorundem Procerum nomine ad amplissimas dignitates in Sueciam evocatus fuit. Bæclius ubi ſupra.

* Ex ejus vita conſcripta a Jacobo Baſelio, quæ extat in limine epiſtolarum Boxhornii.

Country to all theſe Honours.] Before his Hiſtorian publiſhed this, Valerius Andreas ſpoke of it: Whence then proceeds it that Mr. Moreri ſays that Boxhornius went into Sweden, where his Merit preferred him to conſiderable Poſts? Is it thus that theſe Words ought to be Tranſlated? Evocatus ſuperioribus annis a Suecorum ad Ordines fœderatos Legato, Reginæ & Procerum nomine ad ampliſſimas dignitates in Sueciam illi ſeptentrioni amorem prætulit patriæ (a).

That quarrel with Salmaſius was at laſt compoſed.] This muſt be underſtood with ſome Diſtinction: The Acts of hoſtility ceaſed, they ſeem'd outwardly to be good Friends, but their Hearts remain'd the ſame, and could not ſuppreſs their Sallies and eruptions on all occaſions. Boxhornius a Year before his Death, when already ſeized by his Mortal Diſtemper, diſdainfully received the viſits of ſtrangers recommended to Salmaſius. Eos qui a Salmaſio venerant faſtidioſe excipiebat, jam tum nimio tabaci uſu corrupta valetudine quæ altero poſt anno eum cum vitâ deſtituit. Theſe two Facts I find in the Funeral Orations (b) of John Caſpar Lentzius. And what relates to Tobaco puts me in mind of what I have heard, that Boxhorn had a Hat with a hole in the Brim to hold his Pipe, ſo that he could ſmoak whilſt ſtudying or Writing.

(a) Valerius Andreas Biblioth. Belg. pag. 641. Valeſius addit, Quare eas recuſavit, & apud ſuos mediocri in conditione eſſe maluit, quam apud exteros alto in faſtigio collocari.
(b) In Theatro Pauli Freheri pag. 1180.

(F) He wrote on ſeveral Subjects.] He muſt of neceſſity have been not only very Laborious, but alſo have known a great many things, and have been indued with a very great Facility in writing: for without that a Life ſo ſhort as his would not have ſufficed for all the Works which he publiſhed. I have already mentioned ſeveral of his Commentaries on the Ancient Authors, but have ſaid nothing of his Notes on Juſtin, Tacitus, and Pliny's Epiſtles, nor of his Commentary on the life of Agricola publiſhed in 1642, and a little while after defended againſt the Attacks of an anonymous Writer. I have not mentioned his Annals of Zealand and Holland, which he publiſhed in Dutch with large Additions, and better digeſted; thoſe of Zealand in 1644. and thoſe of Holland in 1650. He Attempted to obtain the Title of (c) Hiſtoriographer of Zealand, and then that of Hiſtoriographer (d) of all the United Provinces: But I believe he obtained nothing; for if his requeſts had ſucceeded, the Author of his Life would have touched on this head; I don't find that he ſaith one Word of it. The Index to his Epiſtles notes that he obtained his requeſt with regard to Zealand; but when one conſults the Page to which it refers us, nothing like it appears. His Hiſtory of the Siege of Breda is written in good Latin. He wrote ſeveral Tracts on political Subjects, as an Apology for the Navigations of the Hollanders. Diſſertatio de trapezitis vulgo Longobardis qui in fœderato Belgio fœnebres menſas exercent: Diſſertatio de ſucceſſione & jure primogenituræ adeundo principatu ad Carolum II. magnæ Britanniæ Regem: De majeſtate liber ſingularis adverſus J. B. cogitationes ſubitaneas in præcedentem diſſertationem. It appears by this laſt piece that what he publiſhed in Favour of Charles II. King of England when fled from his Kingdom, had diſpleaſed ſome Republicans. There is a Collection of his diſquiſitiones politicæ, id eſt, 60. caſus politici ex omni hiſtoria ſelecti, printed in 1651. in 12. He publiſhed a great Number of Orations on ſeveral Subjects, and after his Death came out his Idea orationum ex ſelectiori materia moderni ſtatus politici deſumptæ, his Inſtitutiones politicæ, and his Latin Letters and Poems. The laſt Printed in 1659. was Reprinted in Germany in 1679. with a Preface written by James Thomaſius Profeſſor at Leipſick, which very well deſerves Reading.

(c) Boxhorn. in epiſtol. pag. 219. 226.
(d) Ibid. pag. 308.

(G) On the Invention of Printing.] He aſſerts that the Glory of this Invention is due to the City of Haerlem, and not to Mentz, as he formerly believed. Cujus inventæ gloriam Harlemenſibus, non Moguntinis, ut olim, nunc denuo aſſertum imus (e). His diſſertation on this Subject was Printed in 1641.

(H) He very cloſely ſtudied the Antiquities of Gaul.] Concerning which his Hiſtorian gives us the following information: Nunc hiſce finem imponerem, niſi pauca dicendum eſſet de iis, quæ ſuper Dea Nehalemia (f) 1647. primum in Walachria oris inventâ eſt commentatus, & inde ad Scythica gentis linguam, antiquitatem, & mores indagandos multa ingenioſe ſane ſcripſit & ſcripturivit non vernacule modo, prout inceperat, ſed & Latine: nominatim librum originum Gallicarum (g), in quo Gallos a Germanis ortos ex veteri ipſorum lingua aſſerere conatur, qui tamen non niſi a morte authoris & alia ejuſdem, prodiit in lucem, obſtetricante Georgio Hornio in profeſſione Hiſtoriarum non indigno ſucceſſore. It appears by Boxhornius's Epiſtles that his Origines Gallicæ were in the Preſs (h) in 1648. and continued ſo in (i) 1652. He ſpeaks of it only as of a ſmall Tract (k), but he had a good Opinion of his Syſtem. He hoped to (l) prove that the Greeks and Romans owed all to the Ancient Frieſlanders. His Treatiſe de Scythicis (m) Originibus was ended in 1647. but he had a hundred things to add to it; for in a Letter Written to Mr. de Zulychem in 1652. he hath the following expreſſions. (n) De originibus noſtris & ſepultis hactenus Scythicis Antiquitatibus (nam & de iis quærere dignatus es) hoc eſt, ut ego accipio, Aſiæ totius & Europæ, ſuperbius forte & jactantius reſpondeo. Multa excuſſi diligenter, conquiſivi multa, multa meditatus ſum, multa etiam ignorata, feliciter, niſi fallor, tandem deprehendi; quæ aliquando publicis judiciis ſiſtere ac exponere tuo imprimis, quod, ſcio eſſe & graviſſimum pariter, & æquiſſimum, audebo. He publiſhed a Latin diſcourſe in 1650. to ſhew the Affinity betwixt the Greek, Latin and German Languages.

(I) A Bibliotheque of Women, illuſtrious ——— but this Work never appeared.] Valerius Andreas is inſtead to blame for inſerting in the Catalogue of Boxhornius's

(e) Epiſtol. pag. 157.
(f) He wrote two Tracts in Dutch upon the Goddeſs; one of 'em was Printed in 1647. and the other in 1648.
(g) That Book is intituled Originum Gallicarum liber, in quo Veteris & nobiliſſimæ Gallorum gentis origines, antiquitates, mores & linguæ aliaque eruuntur aut illuſtrantur. Cui accedit antiquæ linguæ Britannicæ Lexicon Britannico Latinum, inſertis explicatiſque paſſim Adagiis Britannicis. Prodiit Amſt. apud J. Janſſ. 1654. 4. (h) Epiſt. Boxhorn pag. 291. (i) Ib. pag. 315. (k) Sub Prælo jam eſt opuſculum Originum Gallicarum. Ibid. pag. 315. (l) Ibid. pag. 289. (m) Ibid. (n) Ibid. pag. 314.

of the Republick of the United Provinces was (K) reſented in Holland. His Sacred and Profane Hiſtory, which extends from the Birth of JESUS CHRIST to the Year 1650, is well eſteemed, and is in one Volume in Quarto. The beſt part of it is that of the XVIth, and the beginning of the XVIIth Century. Boxhorn was ſomewhat ugly, and ſo ſwarthy, that he was one day taken (L) for a Spaniard, which drew from him an Anſwer * full of Zeal for his Country; but it is the (M) Caſuiſts buſineſs to determine whether it be conform to the Spirit of the Goſpel. Sorbiere ſeeing him ſomewhat angry with Grotius, had the Equity to excuſe him; and beſides, to declare this Language conform (N) to the Laws of Policy. Some Learned Germans had no great opinion of his Erudition, and have obſerved numerous Errors in

* See the Remark L.

Boxhorn's Works, Bibliothecam eruditione & ſcriptis illuſtrium fœminarum; and doubtleſs he was the cauſe of ſeveral Authors imagining, and publiſhing alſo that Boxhorn put out this curious Tract. (c) Voglerus affirms it as poſitively as if he had read it, and is not blamed for it by Meibomius (b). What is certain on this head is, that Boxhorn had this Project in his Head: He had good Collections on this Subject, which he offered (c) to Iſaac Pontanus who (d) had ſome thoughts of an Undertaking of that nature: But if you think no more of it, added he, and will be pleaſed to transfer to me this Commiſſion, I beg of you to ſend me your Memorials. Erneſtus Brinchius communicated to him a Liſt of Learned Women. Velim nobili viro Erneſto Brinchio gratias meo nomine agi, ob tranſmiſſum Syllabum eruditarum fœminarum. In quarum gratiam Bibliothecam meam, & amicorum ſcrinia nuper excuſſi. Deprehendi autem non pœnitendum earum numerum, quæ vulgo ignoramur. Si tibi animus ſit pergere in eo, quod aliquando cœpiſſe te intelligo, lubens qualiacunque mea tranſmittam, ſin verò tibi viſum lampada mihi tradere, ut tua non deneges, unice rogo. I ſhall here occaſionally ſay, that Father Jacob, a French Carmelite, compiled a Book of the like nature; which abundance of Authors cite and refer to, and yet it never was Printed, nor ever will, for the Manuſcript is loſt.

(K) Was reſented in Holland.] Sorbiere writes this to Patin; his words are: (e) "I have ſent you "a very curious little Book intitl'd: Commentariolus de Statu Provinciarum fœderati Belgii, on "account of the Publication of which, they are "very angry in theſe Provinces, by reaſon it gives "a very accurate Deſcription of the Government "of that Republick, which ought to remain inter "Arcana Imperii. Boxhorn drew up this Commentary for us Scholars, and dictated it "to them in private; but the Secret took wind, "and there has been ſo many Copies of it handed about, that at laſt a Bookſeller put it to the "Preſs without putting his Name to it; and the "Impreſſion was ſold before the Publick had time "to find fault with it." I do not certainly know whether Sorbiere was in the right to ſay this, but I know that this ſmall Tract was Printed at the Hague for John Verhoeve in 1649, and in 1650, and that the Edition of 1650 was reviſed and enlarged. There were alſo other Editions. I have ſeen the 6th Printed at the Hague by Hadrian Vlacq in 1659.

(L) So ſwarthy that he was one day taken for a Spaniard.] This was in 1637, when the Spaniſh Garriſon left Breda according to the Capitulation. Boxhorn being then in the Prince of Orange's Camp, and ſeeing that Garriſon paſs, heard a Dutch Soldier take him for a Spaniard: Upon which, You miſtake, ſaid he, don't judge of me by my Hair and my Aſpect; if you knew the candour of my Heart, you would not doubt me to be a true Hollander. And if I were able, I would throw the King of Spain into a Fever, fix him ſo cloſe to his Bed, and ſo terrify him that he ſhould never more be capable of unjuſtly attacking our Liberty. Thoſe who had rather read the Original Latin, ſhall ſoon be ſatisfied. (f) Statura corporis ipſi fuit longa & erecta, & quam cum ſubfuſca facie crines efficiebant qualemcunque deformem: nigredinem cum candore animi ſui albicantem reddere ſolebat. Unde cum Bredâ captâ inter exeuntium Hiſpanorum ſpectatores & ipſe eſſet, & a noſtrate quodam milite ipſo audiente pro Hiſpano ob iſtam nigredinem haberetur, illi homini facete non minus quam vere reſpondebat, "Tu me ex vultu & crinibus Hiſpanum "judicas, ſed male: nam ſi candorem animi Belgici mei noſſes, qui tam magnus eſt ac nigri ſunt "mei crines, & in mea eſſet poteſtate, pro amore "in communem patriam vel hodie Hiſpaniarum "Regem febri affligerem lectoque alligarem, & metu "ſic terrerem, ut impoſterum abſtineret ab injuſta liberorum Belgarum oppreſſione & oppugnatione."

(M) It is the Caſuiſts Buſineſs to determine whether this Anſwer was conform to the Spirit of the Goſpel.] The Accuſation which appear'd (g) in March 1694, if juſt, would prove, that Boxhorn would eaſily obtain his Abſolution, and even a full approbation of the Caſuiſts who ſhould prove like the accuſed Preacher; for we are told that he preached that the Precept of loving and bleſſing the Perſecutors of the Church, doth not engage us to any more than to wiſh and procure their Heavenly felicity. The temporal (h) Evil which Boxhorn would have done to the King of Spain, would not have prevented his wiſhing the converſion of that Prince. Beſides, a Diſeaſe is no Aſſaſſination; but the ſaid Preacher hath told us (i) in one of his books, that beſides, Aſſaſſination, all other means are allowable and fair againſt a declared Enemy. He hath ſo imperfectly anſwered the Accuſation, and that with ſuch perplexed and ſophiſtical (k) turns, that his Reply, in conjunction with the induſtrious care he took to withdraw his Sermons from the Preſs, have convinced all reaſonable Men, that he was very juſtly accuſed. Conſult (l) Mr. Saurin's Book.

(N) Conform to the Laws of Policy.] Boxhorn was aged 30 years when Sorbiere (m) went to viſit him, and was known then by a great many, and perhaps too many Books. He, by degrees, grew warm againſt Grotius in this Converſation, and blamed him not only for his Method of re-uniting of Chriſtians, but alſo with reſpect to the political Affairs of Holland. (n) Is viſus eſt τῷ μάνυ Grotio minus amicus; nam ſenſim procedente, ut fit, ſermone ad quæſtiones tunc temporis volitantes docta per ora virum & nupera ſcripta, non ſolum diſſentire (quod faciunt multi boni & amici Grotio) ſe fſſus eſt circa initium conciliationis modum & tributam nimiam Rom. Pontifici authoritatem, ſed ipſum inſimulatus eſt circa politica patriæ negotia, una cum cæteris Remonſtrantibus. Sorbiere excuſes Boxhorn, becauſe it would not have been prudent in a Profeſſor, who intends to be ſucceſsful in his Affairs, and uſe his endeavours for the advancement of his demeſtick Proſperity, to expoſe himſelf to be diſgraced by the ruling Party. Quærens apud me rationem qua excuſarem Boxhornium; aut quia junior res geſtas audierat ab aliis non probatæ fidei teſtibus: aut quia profeſſorium munus exercens conductum mercede ſe putabat a Calviniſtis, quorum excidere gratia, clavum Reipubl. tenentium, non eſt hominis bene rem familiarem gerere quærentis. Perhaps there lurks a malignity in

(d) Ibid. pag. 120.

(f) Baſeli-... pag. ...

(g) With this Title Nouvelle hereſie dans la Morale touchant la haine du prochain, prêchée par Mr. Jurieu, &c.

(h) Note that the violence committed by Souldiers upon the Enemy by wounding or killing them, and the miſchief which a private man ſhould do them, by giving 'em a draught, that occaſions a Fever, &c. are different things. The firſt is not brought into queſtion here, but is ſuppoſed without any difficulty.

(i) See the Entretiens ſur la Cabale chimerique pag. 87. & ſeq.

(k) He reckons among the Propoſitions complain'd of many Conſequences, which the Accuſer ſays, might be drawn from the Hereſies charged upon him; but he does not ſay that the Miniſter preached thoſe Conſequences. 'Tis therefore a baſe Trick to complain that he is accuſed of having preached thoſe Conſequences.

(l) Intitl'd Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu, p. 807 & ſeq.

(m) Inviſi Boxhorn. juvenem annor. triginta . . doctum ſane, & multis ne nimiis dicam, libris notum. Soberiana p. 44 Dutch Edit.

(n) Ibid.

there

(O) in his Works; of which he was advertiſed, and reſolved to revenge himſelf by a Satyr, but I cannot tell whether he executed his Deſign.

ZUYLICHEM (Conſtantin Huygens, Lord of——) Secretary and Counſellor to the Princes of Orange, a polite Genius, and one of the good (A) Poets of the XVIIth Century, was born at the Hague, on the 4th of September 1596. He was the ſecond Son of (B) Chriſtian Huygens, Secretary to the Council of State of the Republick of the United Provinces, and was preferred to the Poſt I have mention'd under the Prince Frederick Henry, and continued in the exerciſe of it under his Succeſſors, 'till he reſigned it to his eldeſt * Son. In the Year 1661, he was ſent to the Court of France, to ſollicite the reſtitution of Orange which Lewis XIVth had poſſeſſed himſelf of. And in 1665, having at laſt obtained what he demanded, he took a Journey to Orange, in order to cauſe that Principality to be reſtored to its lawful Sovereign. Which † was performed with great ſolemnity. He lived to an extreme Old age, with the happineſs of retaining both the Solidity of his Judgment, and the vivacity of his Wit, and alſo to ſee his Family well ſetled, and the 62 Years Services he had done to the Houſe of Orange well approved. He kept a great (C) Epiſtolary Correſpondence with the moſt Illuſtrious Learned Men; and as he loved and underſtood the liberal Arts, he was a great Favourer of their Profeſſors. He dyed in 1687, aged 90 Years and ſix Months. He was Preſident of the Prince of Orange's Council, Mr. (D) Huygens, one of the greateſt Mathematicians of Europe, was one of his three Sons.

* See the Remark D.

† See the Relation Publiſhed by Chambrun Miniſter of Orange, in the year 1665.

theſe Excuſes; but ſince Sorbiere doth not deny that Boxhorn might ſpeak according to his Perſwaſion, we ought not to ſuppoſe that he applied to him the Saying, beneficium accipere libertatem vendere eſt: A well paid Salary prevents ſpeaking ones Thoughts.

(O) Some Learned Germans—— have obſerved numerous Errors in his Works, he—— reſolved to revenge himſelf by a Satyr.] This appears in a Letter from Rupert to Reineſius. (a) Videtur Boxhornius nimium tribuere ingenio ſuo, & ante tempus togæ brachium exerere. Quum olim vidiſſem Florum ejus, occurrebant multa valde putida; quæ privato ſtudio notata, ſed poſtea neſcio qua fraude in vulgus ſparſa, in ipſius Boxhornii manus veniſſe dicuntur. Etiam Satyram, ut audio, minatus eſt in literis ad quendam Dreſdenſem; quaſi pro meis agnoſcere debeam univerſa, quæ inimica manus tranſmiſit: Vivimus enim hic in Viperina ſocietate. Sed quicquid velit, agat, & typographica tuba proprium dedecus inſonet in eruditas aures: ego nullus trepido, quamvis illud poetæ inſuſurrare quiſpiam poſſit:

Occurſare Capro, cornu ferit ille, caveto.

Reineſius in a Letter to Hoffman, hath theſe words: (b) Tragocerotem Batavum qui neſcio quid Ruperto noſtro minatus fuerat, confidentiſſimum Criticum eſſe & in Antiquitate videre præ calore parum, oſtendam ex ejus Quæſtionibus Romanis, ubi circa Inſcriptiones nonnullas pueriliter hallucinatur. See alſo the 27th Letter (c) of the ſame Reineſius; where he treats Boxhorn with a great deal of Contempt.

(A) Of the good Poets.] There are of his an infinite number of Dutch Verſes; and he hath alſo Publiſhed ſome Latin Poems under the Title of Momenta deſultoria.

(B) The Second Son of Chriſtian Huygens.] This Chriſtian was the Son of Cornelius Huygens, a Gentleman of Brabant, and of (d) Gertrude Back. He was the firſt of his Family that ſetled in Holland. He became allied to (e) a very conſiderable Antwerpian Family, by eſpouſing Suſanna Hoefnagle, the Daughter of James Hoefnagle, and Elizabeth (f) Veſeler. This James Hoefnagle was ſo rich, that he gave three hundred Thouſand Florins for his redemption from the Spaniſh Garriſon when it mutiny'd in Antwerp in 1576. This large Ranſom ſecured him and his Family from the fury of the Soldiers, as well as the fine Houſe which he had built; but did not prevent their killing even in his Arms, one of his Relations who fled to him for Protection. The Country Seat which he built about a quarter of a League from Antwerp, is ſtill known by the Name of Lanternhof. Balthazar Hoefnagle his eldeſt Son, married the Daughter of the (g) Chancellor of Brabant. As for Chriſtian Huygens, he ſerved Prince William in quality of Secretary of the Diſpatches, from the Foundation of the Republick of the United Provinces. The Hiſtories of Reydanus and Hooft relate a great Action of his, when he was that Prince's Deputy, after whoſe death he was Secretary of the Council of State. He died at the Hague in 1624, leaving two Sons and two Daughters. Maurice Huygens his eldeſt Son, and God-Son to Prince Maurice, was born at the Hague the 12th of May 1595., and was Secretary to the States after the death of his Father, and left Poſterity. Conſtantin Huygens the ſecond Son of Chriſtian, is the Subject of this Article. He had two Siſters: Gertrude Huygens, the Eldeſt, married Philip Doublet, Lord of Saint Annelant, &c. Receiver general of the United Provinces. From which Marriage proceeded Philip Doublet, Lord of Saint Annelant, &c, who married Suſanna Huygens his Couſin German, the Daughter of our Conſtantine Huygens. The other Siſter of the ſaid Conſtantine named Conſtantia Huygens, was born the 2d of Auguſt 1602, and married David le Leu de Wilhem, as I have ſaid above (h).

(C) A great Epiſtolary Correſpondence.] Chiefly with Daniel Heinſius, Nicolas Heinſius, the Son of Daniel, Voſſius, Ericius Puteanus, (i) Balzac, Corneille, and yet much more with Father Merſenne, and (k) Mr. Deſcartes. Obſerve alſo that he is frequently mentioned in the Printed Letters of ſeveral Learned Men. See amongſt others thoſe of Mr. de Wicquefort and Barlæus, lately Publiſhed in (l) Latin and French.

(D) Mr. Huygens, one of the greateſt Mathematicians of Europe, was one of his three Sons.] His Name was Chriſtian; he died on the 8th of July 1695 at the Age of 66 Years, without ever marrying. Hymen could not well agree with a Perſon like him, wholly Conſecrated to the enquiry after what was moſt profound in Mechanicks, Aſtronomy, Geometry, &c. See his Elogy in the Hiſtoire (m) des ouvrages des Savans. To draw up which, Mr. de Beauval had no occaſion for any thing elſe beſides a Catalogue of the Writings and Inventions of this great Man. You will alſo find his Elogy, as well as that of Mr. de Zuylichem his Father, in a Letter written by (n) Sorbiere the 13th of July 1660. when Mr. Huygens was but (o) 31 Years of Age. His eldeſt Brother, named Conſtantine, was Secretary to the Prince of Orange, by the reſignation of his Father, and continued in the occupeſſion of that Poſt after the acceſſion of that great Prince to the Throne of Great Britain. He died at the Hague in November 1697. Mr. de Zuylichem left a third Son who died at Rotterdam in the beginning of July 1699. He had the office of Deputy of the Admiralty of the Maeſe for life. He left a very eminent Family. His eldeſt Son poſſeſſes the Lordſhip of Zeelhem, of which Mr. Huygens the Mathematician bore the Title the laſt years of his Life.

(a) Epiſt. 21 Reineſii ad Hoffmannum & Rupertum pag. 64, 65.

(b) Ibid. epiſt. 26. pag. 99.

(c) Ibid. pag. 111.

(d) The Daughter of Chriſtian Back, & Lucy Back de Weelden, of the ſame Family with thoſe of Aſten.

(e) Being 26 years of Age.

(f) The eldeſt daughter of George Veſeler Intendant General of the Mints of the King of Spain.

(g) Call'd Theodore van Liefvelt Lord of Hamme, Ste. Anne Opdorp. &c.

(h) In the Article Wilhem, At the [illegible] extracted out of a Memorial imparted to the Bookſeller.

(i) Having inſcribed to him his Critique upon Heinſius's Herodes Infanticida. Several Letters he writ to him are Printed.

(k) See Mr. Baillet in his Life of Deſcartes paſſim.

(l) At Amſterdam [illegible]

(m) For Auguſt 1695. art. 9. p. 542. & ſeq.

(n) Sorbiere, Lettres & relations pag. 143. & ſeq. Paris Edition 1660. in 8.

(o) Sorbiere ſays he was but 24. He is miſtaken.

17 JY 63

A DISSERTATION
Concerning the Book of STEPHANUS JUNIUS BRUTUS,
Printed in the Year 1579.

'TIS univerſally agreed, that he who compoſ'd under this Name the Book Entituled, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, ſive de Principis in populum, populique in Principem legitima poteſtate, was not call'd ſo; but there are ſtill different Opinions concerning his true Name. The moſt virulent of all the Libels (A) that were ſent us from France by the Poſt in 1689. on account of the Revolution of England, attributes Junius Brutus's Book to Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai: which is ſomewhat ſurprizing; for after the Proofs that the Author of another (a) Libel has taken from ſeveral very common Writings, no Body ought to be ignorant that Hubert Languet and Junius Brutus are the ſame Perſon. See here ſome miſtakes concerning this famous Book.

(a) Important advice to the Refugees.

I. Deckher's Error.

Mr. Dechker (b) Advocate in the Imperial Chamber of Spire, pretends, That if the Author had ſtyl'd himſelf Lucius Junius Brutus, he had aſſum'd a more proper Name, and better founded on Livy's Hiſtory, than is that of Stephanus Junius Brutus, which he has taken in the Hanaw Edition of the Year MDVC, and he obſerves, that (c) Boeclerus has cited him Lucius Junius Brutus. But firſt, this is to be ignorant that the Prænomen Stephanus had appear'd in the preceding Editions, and even in the firſt, which is pretended to have been made at Edinburg in 1579. The French Verſion printed in 1581 in Octavo, bears alſo the Name of Stephen Junius Brutus. 2*dly*, Why muſt the Author have had more regard to Brutus, who deliver'd Rome from Tarquin's Tyranny, than to Brutus, who deliver'd it from Cæſar's? If there was no reaſon for his preferring one of 'em before the other, there was no reaſon for his calling himſelf Lucius rather than Marcus; he might therefore as juſtly take the Prænomen Stephen, as any other. Let no one ſay, that the manner of Marcus Brutus ſetting up againſt the Tyrant, is not as conformable as that of the other Brutus to the Author's Principles; nor let him add in confirmation of it, that he allows Perſons in any Office, as Lucius Junius Brutus, who was Tribune of the Celeres, to excite the People to take up Arms, but that he denies that Privilege to private Perſons, and much more, that of Aſſaſſinating the Tyrant, except in caſe of a Divine Inſpiration, in which he will have a Man to examine himſelf very exactly. Let no one uſe theſe Arguments, I ſay; for the Author has clearly (d) declar'd, that Brutus and Caſſius are in the Caſe of thoſe Murderers of Tyrants, to whom the Laws promiſe Rewards, and erect Statues. He has rank'd Cæſar in the number of Uſurpers, againſt whom it is lawful for any one to Conſpire. And ſo, Mr. Deckher's Criticiſm is falſe, and little better than the pitiful and inſipid Jeſt of ſome People, who have ſaid, that Hubert Languet diſguiſed himſelf, amongſt other Names, under that of Stephen, not with reſpect to that Stephen, who Aſſaſſinated the Emperor Domitian, to whom Apollonius (e) Tyanæus cry'd out at three hundred Leagues diſtance, Cheer up, ſtrike the Villain; but with reſpect to St. Stephen, the firſt Martyr of the Goſpel, and the firſt Victim of Chriſtian Patience.

(b) De ſcriptis adeſpotis, p. 89. edit. Amſtel. 1686.

(c) In Grotium de jure belli & pac. l. 1. c. 4. pag. 271.

(d) See his Queſtion 3. pag. 198. and 211.

(e) Xiphilin. in Domit. ſub fin.

II. arclay's rror.

But this Advocate's Criticiſm is nevertheleſs more tolerable, than the Argument us'd by William (f) Barclay, to prove Stephanus Junius Brutus's Work to be pſeudonymous, and that the Author only choſe the Name of Brutus, to take the Field with greater Diſtinction, on the Foot of Deliverer of the People; becauſe, ſays he, it is not probable, that the Poſterity of him, who expell'd Tarquin, continu'd to our Age, ſince one of the beſt Hiſtorians affirms, (1) that he dy'd the laſt of his Family, in the War againſt the Veientes. Certainly, this is racking one's Brain to little purpoſe; for it could never have enter'd into the Head of any Reader, that this Writer could have deſcended in a right Line from Junius Brutus, who deſtroy'd the Monarchy of Rome;

(f) Lib. 3. contra Monarchomachos c. 1. p. m. 311. Vide etiam pag. 189.

(1) Dionyſ. Halicarn. l. 5.

It was

(A) The moſt virulent of all Libels.] It's that call'd The new Abſalom, &c. 'tis aſcrib'd to Mr. Arnauld: this Opinion is Printed in a Book (*) intituled, The Hiſtory of the Troubles cauſ'd by Mr. Arnauld after his death; or Mr. Santeuil's Controverſy with the Jeſuits. This is found at the 29 Page. If the Author of this Hiſtory is not miſtaken as to the Author of the Libel, he is out at leaſt as to the place of the Impreſſion; for 'tis falſe that Mr. Arnauld Publiſh'd this Writing in Holland. Nay, I don't think he was there at that time. The Hiſtorical and Political Mercury of the Year 1696. has given occaſion to take notice of the Diſcovery of the Author of this Libel, ſpeaking of this Controverſy of Mr. Santeuil.

Rome; and I don't think, that in reading the Books of Modern Authors, whoſe true Names are Brutus, any one will be ſo ſilly as to believe they are deſcended from the Family of the Ancient Brutus's.

III. Hotman believed the Author of the Book.

The Error of thoſe, who father the Book on Francis Hotman, is nothing near ſo great as the fore-going (a). There are ſtill ſome Learned Men, who impute it to him. This is done by Mr. Conſtant (b), a famous Miniſter and Profeſſor at Lauſanne, in his Abridgment of Politicks (c).

IV. The Author of the News from the Republick of Learning confus'd.

He that compos'd the three firſt Years of the News from the Republick of Learning, having ſaid once accidentally, (d) that Hotman was thought to be conceal'd under the Name of Junius Brutus, gave ſome time after, (e) for his Authority, a Book printed at Paris in 1589. Intituled, A Treatiſe concerning the Power of Kings againſt the King of Navarre. But if he had been well acquainted with his d'Aubigné, he would have been able to inform us, at the ſame time, both that Hotman was reputed the Author of Junius Brutus's Book, and that it was without any foundation. I am going to ſhew what d'Aubigné has ſaid of it: I begin with an Author (f), who has been very curious in theſe ſorts of inquiries; whoſe Words are theſe: "Mr. Daille told me, that he was inform'd, that the Author of the Book Intituled, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, under the Name of Stephanus Junius Brutus, was Hubert Languet, a Learned Man, and a great Politician. Which I have had ſince confirm'd by M. Legoux of Dijon, who added, that M. de la Mare Counſellor of the ſame Town, had obſerv'd this in making Hubert Languet's Elogy. Others attribute this Book to Mr. du Pleſſis, to whom I could willingly aſſign it on this teſtimony of (1) d'Aubigné: There came out another Book, call'd Junius Brutus, or a Defence againſt Tyrants, written by a Learned Gentleman of the Kingdom, famous for many excellent Books, and ſtill living with great Figure. In another place of his Hiſtory (2) d'Aubigné ſays, that this Gentleman confeſs'd to him, that he was the Author of it." There was reaſon upon ſuch Paſſages to attribute the Book to Mr. du Pleſſis, as willingly as to Hubert Languet. But if this Author had known d'Aubigné's ſecond Edition, he could not have been in ſuſpence; for he would have ſeen that after the Year 1616, the date of the firſt Edition, d'Aubigné had diſcover'd all the Myſtery. Let us hear then what he ſays in the 2d Edition, which is of the Year 1626. "(g) Many Pens in all kinds of Writing were imploy'd both on account of Religion and Government. The firſt Point produc'd a great many Books; as for the ſecond, there was one in vogue, which I will obſerve amongſt others, call'd A Defence againſt Tyrants: In which, it was largely Stated how far Obedience to Kings extends, for what Cauſes, and by what Means People may take up Arms, and to whom it belongs to authorize them; whether Foreigners may be call'd in; whether they may lawfully give Aſſiſtance. Hotman was a long time wrongfully ſuſpected to be the Author of it; but afterwards a French Gentleman living when I write, confeſſed to me, that he was the Author of it. But it appear'd at laſt, that he was the Editor, it having been depoſited with him by Hubert Languet, of Franche Comte, (h) Agent in France for the Duke of Saxony." In another place of his (i) Hiſtory, he repeats the ſame thing in theſe Words: There appear'd another Book, which was Intituled, Junius Brutus, or A Defence againſt Tyrants, own'd by one of the Learned Gentlemen of the Kingdom, celebrated for many excellent Books, and living ſtill in great Repute; treating the Queſtions concerning the bounds of our Obedience to Kings; in what Caſes it is lawful to take up Arms againſt them; who ought to attempt it; whether Foreigners may juſtly give their Aſſiſtance; in what manner all things ought to be manag'd: All this he handles like a great Lawyer, and a great Divine. Since that, Hubert Languet is known to be the true Author of it.

COLOMIES cited, and a Reflection upon the Citation.

I ſhall obſerve three Things upon theſe two Paſſages of d'Aubigné.

V. Three Reflections on d'Aubigné.

The 1ſt. is, That I don't believe the Book in queſtion, was ever call'd Junius Brutus, and ſo, this Hiſtorian muſt have taken the Name of the Author for the Title of the Work; which at moſt, is but a little deviation a from rigorous exactneſs. Not but at the bottom, the Book might have been Intituled, Junius Brutus, and might be cited ſo. But that is not the thing in Queſtion; we know well enough that a proper Name has often been the Title of a Book, and that there is a Tract of Cicero Intituled Brutus; and we are ſenſible that Cuſtom gives great Privileges for the abridging of a Citation. 'Tis not therefore what we are in Diſpute about. The Queſtion is, Whether the Book we ſpeak of, had the Title, which d'Aubigné and Boeclerus give it.

My 2d. Reflection is ſomewhat more conſiderable. D'Aubigné was much in the wrong, to leave in his ſecond Edition what had been ſaid by him in the firſt, to denote Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai; for ſince he afterwards underſtood, that Hubert Languet was the true Author of the Book, and that the other only publiſh'd it, he ſhould no more have affirm'd ſo expreſly, that the other had confeſs'd to him, that he was the Author, and that the Book was own'd by the other. This was repreſenting Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai to all Europe as a Lyar, who adorn'd himſelf with borrow'd Plumes. But this will never appear true to thoſe, who know his Vertue, and the Glory he acquir'd. On the other-hand, there is no probability that d'Aubigné would have inſerted ſuch a Fact in his Hiſtory, if he had not firmly believ'd, he remember'd that du Pleſſis, who was ſtill alive, had ſpoken to him in thoſe terms. But this ſeems to me the unriddling of the Myſtery. Mr. du Pleſſis had own'd this Work in Expreſſions which equally agreed to the Compoſer and the Publiſher; as for inſtance, That he had oblig'd the Publick with the Book of Junius Brutus; that it was to him the Publick was indebted for that Preſent; and d'Aubigne, not taking ſufficient notice,

(a) See the Remark H of the Article Hotman.

(b) He is known by many good Latin and French Books, and laſtly by a Syſtem of Morality in Latin.

(c) At the 300 pag. of the Frankfort edit. 168

(d) In the News of Sept. 1684. art. 6. pag. m. 697.

(e) See a Latin Letter Printed at the end of the Treatiſe of Deckherrus de ſcript. adeſp. pag. 370. Amſt. edit. 1686.

(f) Colomies in his opuſcules pag. 130. Utrecht edit. 1669. the firſt edition is of Paris 1668.

(1) Tom. 2. l. 2. ch. 2. pag. 128.

(2) Tom. 1. liv. 2. ch. 15. p. 91.

(g) D'Aubigné, tom. 1. lib. 2. ch. 17. p. 124.

(h) D'Aubigné is miſtaken; Languet was of Viteaux in the Dutchy of Burgundy.

(i) Tom. 2. Book 2. pag. 672.

notice of it, determin'd theſe Expreſſions to the particular ſenſe of being the Author of the Book. Whilſt he had no other Information, it was a little fault to have limited that to a definite ſenſe, which was capable of another; but having at laſt publiſh'd the true Account, he could not leave his Text in its firſt ſtate, without making du Pleſſis Mornay paſs for a lying Plagiary. Such a negligence to recall his Memory, which probably might have ſhewn him, that this Gentleman expreſs'd himſelf no otherwiſe than the Editor of a Book would have done, is much leſs pardonable, than that we have obſerv'd elſwhere in the makers of Additions.

(b) Edit. of Gieſſæ Haſſorum 1687.

(c) In his Muſeum, where he ſays quiſ ſub Bruti nomine diſſimulet, ſive Mornæus is eſt, ſive Hubertus Languetus.

3*dly*, D'Aubigné ſeems to fall into a ſtrange Anachroniſm by the two Epochs he has fix'd for Junius Brutus's Book. By his firſt Paſſage, he will have it to have preceded the Conſpiracy of Amboiſe, and that it was one of the Writings that encouraged the Proteſtants; and by the other, that it appeared the Year after the Maſſacre upon St. Bartholomew's-day. Which ever of theſe two Dates we chooſe, no can Credit be given to the Account I ſhall extract hereafter from Simon Goulart's Funeral Oration, the moſt authentick Piece we have for the Hiſtorical Syſtem of Junius Brutus's Book. This is not the only fault d'Aubigné falls into with reſpect to the time, and the ſubject of the Libels of that Age.

VI.
Reflections upon Placcius.

Mr. Placcius Profeſſor at Hamburg, has inſerted in his Book, concerning Anonymous and Pſeudonymous Writers, all Mr. Colomies's Paſſage, without adding the Correction of d'Aubigné's ſecond Edition. He relates alſo a Paſſage of Boeclerus, which I find much alter'd in my Edition (b), though there is no Advertiſement in the Title-page that it is different from the firſt; but I find the ſubſtance of what Mr. Placcius relates intire in my Edition. viz. 1. That Grotius in his Apology againſt Mr. Rivet, attributes Junius Brutus's Work to du Pleſſis Mornai. 2. That, nevertheleſs (B) ſome Pages of this Book were ſeen at Lauſanne written both with Languet's own Hand, and as an Author writes. He means doubtleſs, that there were ſeen in it References and Razures, or ſuch other Characters as diſtinguiſh the Original of an Author from the Copies. Nevertheleſs, Boeclerus does not ſeem fully certain, in that Citation of Placcius, that Languet compos'd the Book; and he ſeems leſs ſo in another work cited by the ſame Placcius (c): But in his Political Diſſertations, printed after his Death (d) by Mr. Obrecht his Son-in-law, he expreſſes no uncertainty; but (e) poſitively aſcribes this Work to Hubert Languet.

(d) At Straſburg in 1674. with his Inſtitutiones politicæ.

(e) See the 2. diſſertation p. 322. and the 16. p. 209.

VII.
Du Pleſſis Mornay accus'd by Grotius of being Junius Brutus. How juſtified by Rivet.

The place where Grotius affirms, that Junius Brutus's Book was written by Mornai, is at the 91ſt Page of his laſt Work againſt Rivet. 'Tis a poſthumous Piece, printed in 1645. with the Title of Rivetiani Apologetici pro ſchiſmate contra votum pacis facti, diſcuſſio. In a precedent Writing, I mean, in his Appendix de Antichriſto, he would not name Mornai. Boucher's execrable Book, ſays he, (f) concerning the Depoſition of Henry III. King of France, was taken, both as to the Arguments and Expreſſions, not from Mariana, or Santarel, but from Junius Brutus, (I know him well enough; but let him be conceal'd, ſince he deſires it) and ſome other Learned Men of the ſame Sect. Liber flagitioſiſſimus Boucherii de abdicatione Henrici III. Galliarum regis non argumentis tantum ſed & verbis deſumtus eſt, non ex Mariana aut Santarello, ſed ex Junio Bruto (quis is ſit ſat ſcio; ſed quia latere voluit, lateat) & ex viris doctis quidem at factionis ejuſdem. In a Letter (g) that he writ from Paris the 28th of Feb. 1643. he does not uſe that reſerve. I think I have written, ſays he, that the Author of Junius Brutus is Philip de Mornai, and that Lewis Villiers was he who got it printed; I repeat it again, becauſe Des Marets advances, that it is an unknown Author: The thing however is known to a great many. (h) Puto ſcripſiſſe me antehac auctorem Junii Bruti eſſe Philippum Mornæum Pleſſiacum, editorem Ludovicum Villerium, Loiſelerium. Repeto id quia ignotum eſſe ſcriptorem dicit Mareſius, cùm plurimis ea res nota ſit: & idem Pleſſiacus teſtamento generos & amicos ſuos hortatus ſit, arma ut ſumerent, ſi Edicta à Rege non ſervarentur. In another Letter, (i) he ſpeaks of one Ruſdorf a German Writer, who has cited Junius Brutus under the Name of Mornai. The Printers have blunder'd; for inſtead of Ruſdorfius in Defenſione cauſæ Palatinæ, they have put cauſæ politicæ.

(f) Grot. append. de Antichr. pag. 59. edit. in 12. Amſt. 1641.

(g) 'Tis the 641. of the 2d. part.

(h) Grot. epiſt. pag. 949.

(i) The 645. of the 2d. part.

'Tis certain, that Des Marets in his Anſwer to Grotius's Appendix in 1642. ſtill maintain'd, that Junius Brutus was an unknown and obſcure Perſon, whoſe Work none of the Reform'd would maintain, nor had ever prais'd or approv'd. He went ſo far as to ſay, that perhaps it was a Papiſt, as King James had ſuſpected, who had publiſh'd this Work under the diſguiſe of a Proteſtant, in order to render the Proteſtant Religion

---

The firſt Edition of Junius Brutus. An Examination of what Voetius ſays of it.

(B) Some Pages of this Book were ſeen at Lauſanne, written with Languet*'s own Hand.*] The firſt Edition of it might have been Printed at Lauſanne. Mr. Rivet above cited certifies it was done out of France: no body believes the Title importing that it was at Edinburg. Barclay, according to Voetius *, ſays in Præfat. libri de Regno, &c. that he us'd a Copy printed at Edinburg in 1579. he takes to be a Trick of the Bookſeller. I don't find this paſſage in my Edition of Barclay which is of Hanaw in 1617, in which there is no Preface. Beſides what Boeclerus ſays here of ſome Pages of the Original ſeen at Lauſanne, Deckher Page 90. ſays he heard in 1667, that the Original was found in the ſame Town. I don't know why Voetius conjectur'd, that the firſt Edition of this Book was in 1587. I confeſs that Draudius's Catalogues make nothing againſt his Conjecture, tho' they ſay, that Junius Brutus was Printed at Edinburg in 1580; for as they have been brought down to 1610. in the Edition cited by Voetius (k), Junius Brutus might have been ſo mark'd, whether it was Printed the firſt time in 1587, with the antedate of 1580. or whether the firſt Edition was of 1580, without any antedate. But what will he ſay againſt the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque, Printed in 1583, where Junius Brutus is found as printed at Edinburg (l) in 8°. in 1580? What will he ſay of Francis du Verdier's Bibliotheque printed in 1585, where (m) we find the French Tranſlation of this Book, as printed in 8°. by Francis Stephens in 1581? Theſe are convincing Proofs, that if the firſt Edition be not of the Year 1579. as the Title imports, yet at leaſt, it preceded the Year 1587. by ſome Years.

* Voetius diſp. tom. 4 p. 233.

(k) According to Voetius, Draudius pag. 913. ſays, Stephani Junii vindiciæ contra tyrannos &c. Edenburge 80. & 81 Latinè & Gall. Draudius's edition that I make uſe of is of 1625. It mentions this Book four times, viz. p. 809. (where the Edinburg edition 1579. and the Straſburg in 12 are noted) pag. 1235. where the Edition of Amſterdam 1611. is mark'd: pag. 1275. where the Straſburg Edition is put again, & pag. 84. of the French Books, where we find the Title of the Tranſlation as in du Verdier.

(l) Pag. 766. and thereby it appears that Voetius ought not to take any advantage of du Verdier*'s omitting to ſpeak of* Junius Brutus in the Supplement to this Epitome, ſince this Supplement concerns only the omiſſions of the Epitome.

(m) Pag. 300.

em odious. (a) Quid quæſo ille ipſe Junius Brutus quem nobis exprobrat (homo anonymus, obſcurus, ignotus, cujus ſcriptum privata emiſſum autoritate Reformatorum nemo tueri velit; . . . . . (b) Junius Brutus quiſquis ille ſit . . . . (c) Nobis multa crimini dandum quod quæ ſecus quàm par eſſet ille (Junius Brutus) ſcripſerat, homo à nemine noſtrûm nec laudatus, nec approbatus, Boncherius ex malis peſſima fecerit & in virus tranſmutârit. . . . . (d) Qui vero poſſet conferri Junius Brutus, qui ſine Autoris nomine, ſine ulla approbatione prodiit, forte etiam confictus ab aliquo Pontificio in odium Reformatorum, ut ſuſpicabatur Rex Jacobus, cum hoc Santarelli Tractatu, &c.

Mr. Rivet anſwering Grotius's poſthumous Book, ſay, (e) indeed that no Proofs can be given of what is advanc'd againſt Mr. du Pleſſis; but that in caſe he was the Author of Junius Brutus, ſome regard muſt be had to his Age, and the circumſtances of time, that is, he ought to be excus'd on account of his Youth, and the horrible Perſecutions the Proteſtants ſuffer'd. From whence it follows, that if Mr. Rivet does not confeſs that Junius Brutus is the diſguiſe of Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai, he does not deny it neither. Which ſhews, that he was more inclin'd to believe it, than not. The only thing he very clearly affirms, is, that the Book was printed out of the Kingdom, during the heat of Perſecutions and Maſſacres, when Mr. du Pleſſis was very young. But this plainly ſhews, that Mr. Rivet was not initiated into the Myſtery, and that he knew little better than d'Aubigné, the true date of the Book. 'Tis ſurprizing, that neither Grotius, whom hardly any thing eſcap'd in the Republick of Learning, nor Rivet, nor Des Marets, whoſe Reading was very vaſt, ſhould know nothing either of what d'Aubigné had ſaid concerning Junius Brutus in his ſecond Edition in 1626, or of Simon Goulart's Funeral Oration, ſpoken and printed at Geneva in 1628. The Learned are a ſtrange ſort of People, they run after remote (f) and fleeting things, and neglect what they have as it were under their very Noſes. 'Tis much like a Hunter, (g) Tranſvolat in medio poſita & fugientia captat, VII. The Diſcovery made by Goulart's Funeral Oration.

At the Death of Simon Goulart, the Seals were remov'd for a full revelation of the Myſtery. Theodorus (h) Tronchin Divinity Profeſſor, making this Miniſter's Funeral Oration, declar'd, That his Memory and Reading were almoſt infinite; and that he was reſorted to as an Oracle, to know the truth of what was deſir'd to be known. A proof of which is, that King Henry III. being very paſſionately deſirous to know the Author, who was conceal'd under the fictitious Name of Junius Brutus, and all his expedients to this purpoſe having fail'd him, reſolv'd at laſt to effect it by a ſhorter way, as he ſuppoſed; which was to ſend to conſult Simon Goulart. But he, that he might not expoſe thoſe who were concern'd in it, was ſilent at that time; tho' he had ſeen the Original of the Author, and knew it was compos'd by Hubert Languet, and that du Pleſſis Mornai having got the Manuſcript into his Hands after the Author's Death, caus'd it to be printed by Thomas Guarin.

Hereby it clearly appear'd, 1ſt, That this Book at ſooneſt, was not printed till the end of the Year 1581. ſince Languet dy'd but on the firſt of October of that Year. 2dly, That all was fictitious in the Title of the firſt Edition, the time and place of the Impreſſion, as well as the Name of the Author; for the Book was ſaid to be printed at Edinburg (g) in 1579. Beſides, there was a Preface added to it in the Name of the Publiſher, in which, he took the fictitious Name of Conon Superantius, Vaſco, and a falſe Date both of Time and Place was us'd; viz. from Soleurre, the firſt Day of January 1577. It is eaſy to prove, that du Pleſſis was not in Swiſſerland in the interval between Languet's Death and the Publication of Junius Brutus; and I don't think, that any one will affirm, that Thomas Guarin was a Bookſeller (k) of Edinburg. It appears in the 3d place that the Excuſes alledged by Mr. Rivet are not good, ſince it is certain, that when Languet dy'd France was no longer in a condition of perſecuting the Proteſtants, except by Civil Wars, in which each Party ſuffer'd, and that Mr. du Pleſſis who was Thirty-two Years of Age, had already written ſome very excellent Books, the beſt perhaps he ever made, viz. his Treatiſe concerning the Church, and that concerning the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

IX. Voetius's Diſſertation cenſured by Placcius.

Voetius (l) Divinity Profeſſor at Utrecht, a Man of immenſe Reading, might perhaps, as well as Grotius, Rivet and Des-Marets, have been ignorant all his Life of this unridling of Theodorus Tronchin, had not the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos been reprinted at Amſterdam in 1660. in which to theſe Words Stephano Junio Bruto Celta, this was added, ſive ut putatur, Theodoro Beza Auctore. The Magiſtrates of Geneva underſtanding this, thought themſelves oblig'd to vindicate Beza's Name from this falſe Imputation. They fear'd it would be a blot upon his Memory, ſeeing Junius Brutus's Book treated with the utmoſt Ignominy: For when King James was to ward off the Reproach that was urg'd upon the Proteſtants by it, he anſwer'd, that probably, ſome Papiſt had father'd this Book on the Proteſtants with a deſign to make them odious. (m) Quem nobis objicit Junius Brutus, author eſt ignotus, & forte Romanenſis Eccleſiæ emiſſarius, ut per illum reformatæ religioni apud Principes conflarent invidiam. And when the Writers of the Party were haraſs'd upon the ſame Subject, they fail'd not to ſay, that they objected to them an unknown Perſon, a Man without any Name or Figure in the Church, or in the World, a Phantaſm. This was a new Reaſon for them to juſtify this great Servant of GOD; however, it was much better that the Reproaches ſhould fall upon Lay-men, the true Authors of the Opinions objected againſt, than upon innocent Divines. For theſe Cauſes, and other Conſiderations moving them thereunto, the Magiſtrates of Geneva writ (n) to the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam the Proofs of Beza's Innocence; and hereby probably Voetius came to the knowledge of the Myſtery revealed reviſed by Simon Goulart. Be it how it will, he (a) publiſh'd in 1661. an Anonymous Diſſertation, which he inſerted four Years after in the fourth Volume of his Theſes, in which he ſhew'd by many Arguments, that Beza was not Junius Brutus, and enlarged much upon Hubert Languet.

(a) Sam. Mareſius, Antichr. revel. lib. 1. p. 336, 337.

(b) Id. ib. lib. 1 p. 5[illegible].

(c) Id. ib. pag. 55.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 61.

(e) Rivet. operum tom. 3. p. 1163.

(f) See Maimb. Hiſtory of Arianiſm tom. 1. p. 247. edit. of Holl.

(g) Horat. l. 1. ſat. 2.

(h) See his Article above in its place.

(i) See the Remark B.

X. Beza accus'd before the time mention'd by Placcius.

Mr. Placcius has Criticiz'd one of his Proofs in Defence of Beza. For Voetius having ſaid, that before the Year 1660. no Body, either among the Friends or Enemies of Beza and Languet, or among the Editors of Junius Brutus, had aſcrib'd this Book to Beza, either expreſly, or by way of ſuſpicion; and that therefore the new Conjecture of an unknown Man given at random, (b) was of no weight; Mr. Placcius ſhews him, that in 1652. one John Philips an Engliſh Man affirm'd, that Beza was the Author of Junius Brutus's Book.

The thing might have been carry'd higher, ſince ſome French Jeſuits had a long time been before-hand with this John Philips; ſo that Voetius is out in taking advantage from the ſilence not only of Becanus, Gretſerus and Eudæmon Johannes, but alſo of the whole Society of the Jeſuits, totaque Jeſuitarum natio; for in 1611. we find that Father Coton (c) having collected ſeveral Paſſages from Proteſtant Authors, which he thought afforded an occaſion for Recrimination, and having not forgot Junius Brutus, put in the Margin Theodorus Beza: ſive Stephanus Junius Brutus in libro cui titulus, vindiciæ contra tyrannos, &c. The Jeſuit Richeome (d) with the very ſame view, and on the ſame occaſion, thus addreſs'd himſelf to his Adverſary: How will you excuſe Beza, who conceal'd under the ambiguous Name of Junius Brutus, as you under that of Anti-Coton, accompany'd with three Letters, writ a Book concerning the Lawful Power of a Prince, &c. A Miniſter of Gergeau call'd David Home, anſwering in 1612. the Apology of the Jeſuits, written by a Father of the Society of Jeſus of Loyola, denied what the Author of the Apology had aſſerted, that Beza had taken the mask of Junius Brutus. David Home's Book is Intituled, du contr' Aſſaſſin. It has theſe Words at the 329th Page: As for Stephanus Junius Brutus, whom he afterwards produces, we know no ſuch Man; but we ſay, that the Jeſuit in affirming him to be Theodorus Beza, without offering the leaſt Conjecture in the World for his aſſertion, Lyes Jeſuitically, that is, impudently, and like a Machiavelist, who holds that tho' a Lye be ſent about but for half an Hour, it ſtill does good in Matters of State, tho' GOD forbids us to bear falſe Witneſs againſt any one, as this Man does againſt Beza, in whoſe Writings there is not one word of Counſel to kill Tyrants, &c. After ſome Citations, the Author goes on thus: This is what Beza ſays, which ſufficiently gives the Lye to the Jeſuit, affirming him to be the Author of the Treatiſe produc'd under the Name of Junius Brutus, which has no conformity with that of Beza, and which is in all probability, the true Name of the Author, ſince there are many Learned Men, who are Surnam'd Junius. An Iriſh Jeſuit (e) cited Junius Brutus's Book as Beza's in 1614. I queſtion not, but many others, both before, and after the Anſwers to the Anti-Coton, have imploy'd this Calumny againſt Beza, and I expect to have quickly return'd to me what I have lent to Mr. Placcius; I mean, that I ſhall be ſhewn, that I might have ſtill gone higher; from whence it will ſtill be more apparent, how reſerv'd we ought to be upon general Affirmations, though we ſhould have the vaſt Reading of the famous Profeſſor of Utrecht; for in fine, that great acquaintance he had with all ſorts of Books, prevented not his being Ignorant: 1. That before the Year 1660. Beza had been often accus'd of writing the Book of Junius Brutus. 2. That two Years before the Funeral Oration of Simon Goulart, the Publick was inform'd by d'Aubigné, that Hubert Languet had taken that diſguiſe. 3. That Groitus had publickly named Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai as the Author of that Piece.

XI. The Proteſtants Apology for the Church of Rome by Brereley.

Expecting the return of my Loan, I will ſay here that one John Brereley an Engliſh Prieſt, in his (f) Apology for the Catholicks by the Proteſtants, cites an Author call'd (g) Sutcliffus, who had ſaid, that the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, was a Book written either by Beza or Hotman. Tho' I can't diſcover at what time this Apology was printed firſt; yet I doubt not but it was before the Jeſuits Anſwer to the Anti-Coton, ſince I learn from the Tranſlator, that as ſoon as it appear'd in Engliſh, Bancroft, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, order'd ſome Learned Divines, and particularly Morton, to anſwer it, and that Morton's Anſwer is call'd, Catholica appellatio pro Proteſtantibus. Now this doubtleſs is Morton's Work, which according to the Oxford Catalogue appear'd in 1606. under this Title, A Catholick Appeal for Proteſtants; and therefore I ought not to believe that this Catalogue notes the firſt Edition of the Apology in theſe words of the 107th Page, The Proteſtants Apology for the Roman Church 1608. Now, as Sutcliffus's Work, cited by Brereley, is an Anſwer to a Petition of the Presbyterians, and the Oxford Catalogue places the Impreſſion of this Anſwer in the Year 1592. with this Title, Anſwer to a Petition of the Conſiſtorian Faction preſented to her Majeſty, it is evident, that Junius Brutus's Book was attributed to Beza long before the Jeſuits anſwer'd the Anti-Coton.

It does not appear that Brereley, who produces a prodigious number of Proteſtant Authors upon all Subjects, had read Junius Brutus; for he cites nothing out of it: And for that reaſon the Biſhop (h) of Luçon did not cite it in the Book he publiſh'd againſt the Proteſtants in the Year 1618. wherein he objects to them ſome other Writers imbued with Hubert Languet's Maxims, whoſe Paſſages he had found in Brereley, as Mr. Rivet intimates, in anſwering the Jeſuit Petra Sancta. (i) A quo (libello Epiſcopi Luſſonenſis) video non pauca te mutuatum fuiſſe, quemadmodum ille, aut potius ſacerdos Anglus qui tum ei fuit à manu ex lacinius Anglo-papiſtarum. I have not ſeen this Book of the Biſhop of Luçon; but that which makes me think that he has not mention'd Junius Brutus, is, that David (k) Blondel anſwering this Prelate, ſays nothing to him concerning (a) He himſelf notes that Year in the 4th Vol. of his Theſes pag. 110. Placcius ibid. puts it in 1661.

(b) The Greek Phraſe he uſes is perhaps more emphatical. [illegible]

(c) Reponſe apologet. à l'Anticoton, & à ceux de ſa ſuite, pag. 173.

(d) At the 471 page of the categorical examination of the libel Anticoton printed in 1613. he puts in the margin. Junius Brutus de Beze de legitima poteſtate, &c.

(e) Henricus Fitz-Simon in Britannomachia Miniſtrorum, printed at Douai in 1614.

(f) Page 636 of the Latin Tranſlation done out of Engliſh by William Raynerius, and printed at Paris in 1615. in 4°. The Author is there call'd Brerleius, but in the Oxford Catalogue Brereley.

(g) 'Tis he who is call'd in Latin Matthæus Sutlivius (Raynerius ſhould have call'd him ſo) He was a good Proteſtant, but moſt oppoſite to the Presbyterians. I have given his Article.

(h) Since that time he was Cardinal Richelieu.

(i) Rivetus Operum tom. 3. p. 505. n. 5. Blondel in his modeſt declaration pag. 287. ſpeaks more expreſly: He borrows, ſays he, from the apology of John Brereley an Engliſh Prieſt, the invention of curtailing ſome paſſages.

(k) Modeſt declaration of the ſincerity of the Reformed Churches. Sedan 1619.

concerning this diſguiſ'd Author. 'Tis not hard to underſtand at preſent, why Petra Sanila (a) ſpeaks not of this Author; 'tis becauſe he borrow'd from the Biſhop (as Mr. Rivet taxes him with it) all the Citations of Anti-Monarchical Proteſtant Authors. Hence it appears, that the Author of the great Anſwer to Maimburg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm is miſtaken in ſaying, (b) That the Method attributed to Cardinal Richelieu, and the Jeſuit Sylveſter a Sancta Petra have furniſh'd Mr. Arnauld with the Objection he makes to us about the Royal Authority, in his Apology for the Catholicks: for firſt, it is not in the Method, which was not publiſh'd till after Cardinal Richelieu's Death, but in a Book he publiſh'd before his Cardinalſhip, that he objected ſuch Republican Writings: In the ſecond place, if Mr. Arnauld had drawn from theſe two Fountains, he would not have found there Hubert Languet's Work, nor the Magdeburg Writing, which make the ſtrength of his Attack.

XII. The Magdeburg's Writing. This Piece of Magdeburg is Intituled, de Jure Magiſtratuum in ſubditos, & officio ſubditorum erga Magiſtratus. Brereley (c) ſpeaks of it only in general, and upon the credit of Sutlivius, who attributes it to Beza. This Work was publiſh'd in 1550, under the Name of the Inhabitants of Magdeburg. I don't know whether it be the ſame that Sleidan (d) has given the Abſtract of. I know it only by the French Edition of 1578. in 12°. It is Intituled, Of the Right of Magiſtrates over their Subjects. A Treatiſe moſt neceſſary at this time to admoniſh both Magiſtrates and Subjects of their Duty. Publiſh'd by thoſe of Magdeburg, in the Year M. D. L. and at preſent reviſ'd and inlarged with many Arguments and Examples. This Edition came out after many others. Mr. Arnauld (e) made uſe of a Latin Tranſlation, printed in the Year 1576. apud Joannem Mareſchallum Lugdunenſem in 8°. and done from the French. The Author of the Commentaries de ſtatu religionis & reipublicæ in regno Galliæ, makes mention of a Book that came out in the Year 1573. which is the ſame with this. He owns that (f) the Author intended to make an Apology for the Proteſtants, who were then the 4th time in a Civil War againſt Charles IX. Thuanus (g) expreſly obſerves under the Year 1574. that there came out a new Edition of a Book which had been printed in Germany, at the time of the Siege of Magdeburg, and that this new Edition was enlarged with many Examples and Reaſonings. John Beccaria, who anſwer'd this Book in 1590. repreſented it as a very new Book; (h) Quum ſuperioribus diebus commentabamur aliquid de bello, liceret ne ſcilicet Chriſtiano bellare, vel non, prodiit libellus quidam cui hic erat titulus, De jure Magiſtratuum in ſubditos, & officio ſubditorum erga Magiſtratus. 'Tis a ſign there was lately a new Edition of it, and that he knew nothing of the preceding. Some ſuſpect that (i) John Beccaria is not the true Name of this Author. What is certain, is, that he was not a Catholick: He was perhaps a kind of a Socinian. He uſes his Adverſary very ill, and treats him as a Sanguinary Soul, and an Enemy to Peace. (k) Videri hominem eſſe vere ſanguinarium, bello, armiſque amicum, hoſtem capitalem paci, nomini regio infenſiſſimum, verſatum in literis humanis, præſertim hiſtoriis, atque ſi divinare licet leguleium, in divinis haud adeò multum: nihil prorſus habentem illius manſuetudinis & clementiæ illius pacifici, & mitiſſimi agni Jeſu Chriſti (qui quidem dixit: (1) Diſcite à me, quòd mitis ſum, & humilis corde: non autem dixit, Diſcite à me contendere, & litigare, multò certè minus bellare) ſed abundare ſpiritu contentionis, ambitionis, & ſuperbiæ: neſcire prorſus quid ſit vera concordia, quid pax, quid humilitas, quid patientia, quid ſit injuriam pati, ſed optimè ſcire quid ſit injuriam inferre, vel illatam vindicare: ignorare etiam omnino quid ſit proximus, illud bene ſcire, (2) Proximus ſum egomet mihi: Chriſti crucem nec ſcire, nec ſcire curare: omnia humana ad trutinam, id eſt, ad ſuum arbitrium ponderare. We muſt confeſs, that Mr. Arnauld had but little knowledge of this Piece of Magdeburg.

A Civilian of Bavarian nam'd John Baptiſt Ficklerus, knew only the Edition of 1576. which determin'd him to anſwer it by a Writing that was printed at Ingolſtad in 1578. with this Title: De jure Magiſtratuum in ſubditos, & officio ſubditorum erga Magiſtratus. Contra libellum cujuſdam Calviniani, ſub eadem inſcriptione, ſed reticito nomine authoris, & loci Typographiæ, ſuperiori anno editum: nunc autem veritatis ſtudio reformatum, retento quidem illius ſtylo, ſed pleriſque argumentis ad rei veritatem applicatis. Tractatus brevis & perſpicuus, hiſce ambiguis temporib. Chriſtiano homini lectu admodum utilis & NECESSARIUS.

XIII. Father Labbe's fault. Let me ſay by the by, that it is not good ſpeaking of Books that we have not ſeen. Father Labbe, who had an almoſt infinite Reading, and yet had not ſeen Brereley's Proteſtants Apology, heard it ſpoke of whilſt his Diſſertation upon Eccleſiaſtical Writers was in the Preſs; he had a mind to make an Addition of ſomething that was told him, which in three Lines coſt him two faults: The one is, (l) that he calls the Author Bretleium inſtead of Brerleium; the other is, that he aſcribes to him the Preface in which the Pope Saint Gregory is juſtified, whereas 'tis the Tranſlator, who has done it.

XIV. Beza's Adverſaries who could not accuſe him. What I have related of Sutlivius informs us, That the Proof Voetius has founded upon the ſilence of all the Epiſcoparians, is not better than that which he has grounded on the ſilence of all the Jeſuits. Beſides this, I obſerve that amongſt Beza's Adverſaries, who would not have ſpar'd him, ſays he, if they could have faſten'd Junius Brutus's Work upon him, he reckons at leaſt five, whoſe ſilence proves nothing. Theſe are they which he (m) names; Charpentier, Baudouin, Caſtalio, Eraſtus, Morellus, Saravia, Montaigu, Tilenus, Ladus, and Doctor Eramble. As for Charpentier, who ſpoke very ill of Beza, in the violent Satyr (n) he wrote to Francus Portus in 1572. he could not ſpeak of Junius Brutus, who did not appear (o) till ſome Years after. Baudouin and Caſtalio, who dy'd, the former in 1573. the latter in 1563. were ſtill leſs

(a) Videſ. Petrus Sanila not. in epiſt. Petri Molinæi ad Balzacum.

(b) Tom. 2. pag. 586. in 4.

(c) In Apologia Proteſtant. pag. 613.

(d) Sleid. lib. 22. init. See the Chimerical Cabal 2d. edit. pag. 139. & ſeq.

(e) See his Apology for the Catholicks 1. part. chap. 4. p. 50.

(f) Commentar. de Statu reip. & relig. ad ann. 1573. fol. m. 118. verſo.

(g) Thuan. lib. 57. pag. m. 50.

(h) Jo. Beccaria, refutat. cujuſd. libelli p. 1.

(i) Voetius, diſp. tom. 4. p. 158.

(k) Beccaria ib. pag.

(1) Matth. 11.

(2) Terentius.

(l) Tom. 1. pag. 786.

(m) Voetius ibid. pag. 234.

(o) I don't think Carpenter writ any thing after the impreſſion of Vindiciæ contra tyrannos.

able to ſpeak of him. Thomas Eraſtus, it is true, writ againſt Beza upon the Subject of Excommunication; but this was long before Junius Brutus's Book appear'd. Eraſtus's Anſwer is dated the 24th of December 1569. Beza's (a) Name was not in the Original; it being only inſerted by thoſe that publiſh'd it in 1589. after Eraſtus's Death. Theſe two Antagoniſts had been very civil to one another at Baſil after the Diſpute. As for Morellus, I don't think, that after the National Synod held at Nimes in 1572, where his Opinion was condemn'd, he appear'd in the Liſts. This Man had maintain'd from the Year 1562. That the Right of Excommunication belonged not to the Conſiſtories and Synods, but to all the Body of the Church. He was Excommunicated for this Notion; and the Writing he publiſh'd upon that Subject was burnt, and prohibited to be read by every Body (b). He nevertheleſs perſiſted in his Opinion, and in 1572. was one of the Members of the Cabal, who endeavour'd to make ſuch a change in the Diſcipline of the Churches, that thence forward the Power of the Keys ſhould be adminiſtred by the whole Body of the People (c). Ramus (d) was one of the Pillars of this Cabal. Beza, who aſſiſted in the National Synod of Nimes in 1572. oppos'd this Faction viva voce, and by Writing, and made it vaniſh into nothing. However it be, it can't be deny'd, but that before the Year 1660. Junius Brutus's Writing was often aſcrib'd to Beza in printed Books: never the leſs, he that publiſh'd it that Year at Amſterdam, knew nothing of it; for all the reaſon he gives why he would have the Title lengthen'd out with theſe words, ſive ut putatur, Theodoro Beza Autore, is, that he had ſeen a Copy upon which a Learned Profeſſor had writ that Beza had compos'd this Book. This deſtroys Mr. Placcius's Conjecture, viz. (e) That the Engliſh Author he cites, was the cauſe of Beza's Name appearing in the Edition of 1660. I wonder he did not quote Milton, who ſpeaks thus, in one of his Books: Doctrina hæc nobis haud magis quam Gallis, quos tu hoc piaculo cupis eximere, debetur: unde enim Francogallia illa niſi ex Gallia? unde vindiciæ contra Tyrannos? qui liber etiam Bezæ vulgo tribuitur (f). I ſhall obſerve that many believ'd Milton to be the Author of John Philips's Apology. Salmaſius (g) affirms it roundly. Others ſay, that he either writ it, or adviſed the publiſhing of it: (h) Eandem culpam commiſſam fuiſſe in reſponſione Philippi Angli ad Apologiam Anonymi cujuſdam, &c. aliquando Hartlibo ſcripſi, cujus libri authorem eſſe Miltonium, ſaltem ejus conſilio publicatum, firmiſſime creditur.

XV. Some late Authors have been ignorant who was Junius Brutus.

Since Voetius's Diſſertation, it has been eaſier to know what to depend upon, as to Junius Brutus; and yet Mr. Colomies, and the Author of the News from the Republick of Learning had but a ſuperficial Knowledge of this matter, the one in 1668, the other in 1686. Nay farther, Mr. Arnauld compoſing his Apology for the Catholicks in 1682. and drawing from Junius Brutus's Book all that he could find proper to render the Proteſtant Doctrine ſuſpected to Sovereigns, never attempted to ſtrengthen his Proofs with Conſiderations taken from the Perſon of the Author; which makes it evident, that he knew not who he was. I obſerve all theſe little things to ſhew that thoſe Proteſtants, who have ſaid (k) theſe laſt Years, that Junius Brutus was an unknown Man, without Name, Character, or Authority, might talk in this manner without any fraud, tho' one of the Libels I have mention'd at the beginning of this Diſſertation, would inſinuate the contrary: I mean, that kind of a Sermon wherein the Author cenſures a pretended inclination for Libels and Civil Wars, with as great vehemence, as ever any Miniſter expreſs'd in a Sermon on a Faſt-day, in decrying his Auditors as guilty of the tranſgreſſion of the Decalogue.

XVI. The Libels of ſome private Perſons diſowned.

And ſince occaſion offers, it will not be unſeaſonable to ſay, That this Man's violent Reproaches have had a good effect. Perhaps (C) they are not the true cauſe why ſmall Libels don't ſwarm ſo thick as before; but 'tis certain at leaſt, that they

(a) See Beza's preface in the Tract de vera excommunicatione.

(b) See Thomas Eraſtus's Book de excommunicatione pag. 69, 70.

(c) Ant. Fayus in vita Th. Bezæ, pag. 49. See also Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. lib. 6. pag. 34.

(d) Simler in vita Bullingeri fol. 45.

(e) Placcius ubi ſupra.

(f) Joannes Miltonus defenſ. ſecunda pag. 99. edit. Hag. 1654.

(g) Salmaſ. reſponſ. ad Jo. Miltonum pag. m. 19.

(h) Hadrianus Ulacq. in præfatione apologiæ ſecundæ Miltini edit. Hag. 1654.

(k) Daillon's examination of the oppreſſion of the Reform'd. 1687. Jurieu, Anſwer to Maimb. 1683.

(C) Perhaps they are not the true cauſe, &c.] This Perhaps is reaſonably inſerted, for 'tis very probable that two other things have leſſen'd their Numbers; Firſt. The Indignation that all worthy Men expreſs'd againſt them. Secondly, The Readers beginning to be tired with them; which never fails to happen when the ſame Diſh is ſerved in too often, and when amongſt the multitude of thoſe who pretend to cook it many of them make it very flat and inſipid. 'Tis a Maxim that Authors ought carefully to ſtudy; That the Publick's Voracity ought never to be abus'd, and that Satiety is to be avoided even in admiration: to which end one ought never to obey too freely, this Compliment of the Italian Academies, Di gratia, Signor, un' altra volta. This Compliment is doubtleſs a Teſtimony of Approbation, and 'tis univerſally us'd to a Muſician, who has charm'd more than ordinary; and then the Company is not ſorry to be taken at their Word: but he that ſhould abuſe the Courteſy ſo far as to exceed the Greeks Rule, δὶς ἢ τρὶς τὸ καλόν, bis & ter quod pulcrum, and even what a Latin Poet * has ſaid, that there are ſome Poems that pleaſe tho' ten times repeated, decies repetita placebit, would deſerve to be referr'd to the Old Proverb of the twice dreſſed Cabage, δὶς κράμβη θάνατος, crambe bis poſita mors. 'Tis not fit the Publick ſhould be expos'd to the miſerable condition of thoſe Rhetorick Maſters heretofore, who were forc'd to hear the Declamations of a whole claſs variouſly turn'd concerning the overthrow of Tyrants.

> Declamare (†) doces, ô ferrea pectora Vetti!
> Cum perimit ſævos claſſis numeroſa Tyrannos.
> Nam quæcunque ſedens modò legerat, hæc eadem ſtans
> Perferet, atque eadem cantabit verſibus iiſdem.
> OCCIDIT MISEROS CRAMBE REPETITA MAGISTROS.

The condition of School-maſters is not better at preſent. They dictate a Theme to a whole Claſs, to have it turn'd ſeveral ways by their Scholars; literally by ſome, paraphras'd by others; in Verſe or in Greek by a third ſort, and in two ſorts of Latin Proſe by a fourth. 'Tis ſtill the ſame Theme, ſtill the ſame thing under different words. The Publick not being paid for this, has no reaſon to ſuffer it ſelf to be reduc'd to it. Now 'tis certain our Ears have been ſo frequently dun'd with the ſame things, and the boundaries of the number ten have been left ſo far behind, that we need not wonder that theſe ſhowers fall not ſo thick as formerly. When every one ſets up (‖) for the ſame Trade, 'tis no wonder that it proves good for nothing.

* Horat. de arte poet.

(†) Juven. ſatir. 7. v. 150.

(‖) Exſpectes eadem à ſummo minimoque poeta. Juven. Sat. 1. v. 14.

(a) The Author of the Letters upon the Subjects of the time; that of the Hiſt. of the Works of the Learned; that of the defence of the Refugees againſt the important advice.

(b) Mr. Baſnage Miniſter of Rotterdam

they have oblig'd the moſt excellent writers of the Party (a) to inform the Publick, that it was unjuſt to make the Body of the Refugees reſponſible for theſe bad Books. So that our Poſterity will always have ſome contemporary piece to wipe off thoſe ſiniſter Imputations that ſhall be thrown upon this Cauſe. Let it not be ſaid that theſe excellent writers, who have made this diſclaim, have done it without Naming themſelves; for having anſwer'd for the generality, whilſt none has excepted againſt their Declaration, 'tis a ſign that the Body acquieſces in it. Add to this, that the Name of him, who writ every Fortnight upon the Subjects of the Time in ſo fine and judicious a way, is very well known to every Body. And as for him, who publiſhes the inimitable Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, is any Body ignorant of his Name? A Name, that has long ago made itſelf famous both at the Bar and in the Church, both viva voce, and in Writing; a Name, which two Brothers make more and more celebrated every Day; the one by his (b) eloquent Sermons, and learned Anſwers to the Biſhop of Meaux; the other by the incomparable Journal (c) I have ſpoken of. To ſay nothing of a Couſin, (d) who has Succeeded Caſaubon in the attack of Baronius's Annals. As to the Defence of the Refugees againſt the Important Advice, the Author of it muſt be a Perſon moſt worthy (e) of belief, when he affirms any thing in the Name of his Brethren. He fully anſwers the reproaches that concern the Satyrical Spirit, and he illuſtrates his Opinion upon the other Point, with a great dexterity of Wit. All things duly conſider'd, we muſt own that tho' a Diſclaim that ſhould have preceded the horrid Reprouches of the Adverſaries, and that ſhould have been made by Perſons charg'd with a Synodal Deputation, would have been much more glorious and authentick; yet nothing but an extravagant Spirit of Wrangling, can puſh a Man on to renew the Attack. But to return to my Subject.

XVII. The Funeral Oration of Goulart leaves ſome doubt.

Voetius had not that confidence in Simon Goulart's Teſtimony, as to think it ſtrange, that any ſtill ſhould be Scepticks, as to Junius Brutus; and for my part, I confeſs, that I ſtill perceive ſome difficulties and intricacies, tho' I ſeem ſo ſtrongly to declare for Hubert Languet, who is the Perſon to whom Mr. de la Mare adjudges the Book. 'Tis in a Work (C△) not yet printed, and I don't know whether the thing be there particulariz'd, as in the Oration of the Geneva Profeſſor, or otherwiſe; nor what Proofs are given. If it could be prov'd that Junius Brutus's Book was publiſh'd before Languet's Death, farewell Goulart's Depoſition. This will perhaps excite ſome one well-furniſh'd with Books and Time, to ſeek for ſome light upon this Subject; and I hope, that Mr. Baillet will exhauſt the matter in the great Work the Publick expects from him, concerning Authors under diſguiſ'd Names.

XVIII. A Fault in the continuation of the Menagiana.

There is in the Continuation of the Menagiana a Fault which I ought not to omit. "Languet's Letters are an excenllet Book. Mr. Languet was Counſellor in the Parliament, "and a Man of great Merit. 'Tis he, who was the Author of that admirable Work "Intituled, Vindiciæ regiæ contra Tyrannos. He writ this Book in Defence of Henry "the IVth's Cauſe. As the declaring himſelf the Author, would have endanger'd his "Life, he took ſo good meaſures with his Printer, and the Secret was ſo well kept, "by the mutual Intereſt they had in it, that it was not known to be his Book till long "after his Death, and the Printer, who declar'd he had printed it, after the Peace, "diſcover'd alſo to Henry IV. how the thing was order'd." 1. This expreſſion, Counſellor in the Parliament, ought to ſignify that Hubert Languet had that Place in the Parliament of Paris. But it is certain, he had it not in any Parliament of France. 2. His Book had not the Title of vindiciæ regiæ, nor ought to have it. 3. Mr. Menage would never have call'd it admirable, if he had known what Subject it Treats, and upon what Principles it goes. 4. Nothing could be more pernicious to Henry IV. than Languet's Book, ſince it authoriz'd the French to depoſe Henry III. and to place the Crown on

---

(*) Vita Huberti Langueti pag. 123.

(†) Ibid. pag. 124.

(††) Ibid. pag. 12

(C△) Mr. de la Mare adjudges the Book. 'Tis in a Work not yet Printed.] I ſpoke thus in 1696. but at preſent I muſt ſay that it has been Printed at Hall in Saxony in 1700. I have not found what I expected in it; but am left in all the uncertainty I was in before. Mr. de la Mare (*) ſays, that the Year 1580. abounded with Political Writings, ſince beſides the Treatiſe of voluntary ſlavery compos'd by la Boetie, and the Franco Gallia of Hotman, there came out vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, written by Hubert Languet. This is moſt certain, ſays he, I have a great many proofs for it, and had I only this I am going to mention, it would be ſufficient. (†) Ad vindicias redeo, quas etſi nonnulli tribuere videantur Franciſco Hottomano, certiſſimum tamen eſt illarum auctorem eſſe Languetum, cujus rei quamvis alia me deficerent argumenta, ſunt autem quam plurima, unum inſtar omnium hoc erit, quod modo ſum prompturus Antonii Vioni Herovallii fide. This great Proof, the only one that Mr. de La Mare would Communicate to the Publick, conſiſts in this, that he had heard Mr. Vion d' Herouval ſay that Henry III. Underſtanding that Simon Goulart knew the Author of the Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, immediately ſent for him, and ask'd his Name; that Goulart only anſwer'd that his Oath obliged him to conceal it, during the Author's Life; that the King in vain added threatnings to entreaties; and that nothing was capable of ſhaking Goulart's Conſtancy, who by a rare inſtance of Fidelity and Friendſhip, perſiſted to conceal the Myſtery which was only truſted to him during Languet's Life. (††) Cui (Henrico III.) cum Gulartius præfracte reſpondiſſet, non niſi poſt auctoris obitum nomen illius revelare ſibi licitum eſſe, quod ſolemni ſacramento obſervaturum ſe promiſerat, Rexque precibus minas adderet, perſtitiſſe tamen in propoſito Gulartium, neque precibus neque minis adduci unquam potuiſſe, ut priuſquam fato functus fuiſſet Languetus, quod ſibi ſoli commiſerat arcanum proderet, raro conſtantis fidei & amicitiæ exemplo. Now here's a proof that's good for nothing: For tho' Mr. Vion d' Herouval ſhould have better known the circumſtances of the Fact, he would have taught us only what we knewn before. 'Tis plain that he had mediately or immediately the particulars he related to Mr. de la Mare, from the Funeral Oration of Simon Goulart: He could not therefore be a New Witneſs. Now either for want of Memory or becauſe others had miſinformed him of Theodorus Tronchin's Account, he related it very ill, ſince it is falſe that Henry III. ſent for Goulart, and entreated and threatn'd him, and that Goulart anſwer'd, His Oath engag'd him to be ſilent, and that the Secret was committed only to him. I wonder Mr. de la Mare believ'd that a Miniſter anſwer'd Henry III. thus, with impunity. I ſay nothing of the falſe Dates he gives of Stephen de la Boetie's and Francis Hotman's Books.

(D) to

on the Head of the Duke of Guiſe. 5. And Laſtly, all the reſt of the Account, the ſecret of the Printer, and the diſcovery of the Myſtery after the Peace, are Diametrically contrary to Truth, and all Probability. I don't deny that in ſome Senſe, Mr. Menage might have thought that this Work of Languet is an admirable Piece: He might have found in it Learning and Wit, a great Order and Method, and the beſt and moſt ſolid Arguments that can be offer'd for the Rights of the People, which is a very Problematical point. It has many (a) fair ſides, and may be maintain'd with ſo many Plauſible Reaſons, that it ought not to be thought ſtrange, that not only factious, turbulent and reſtleſs Men ſhould have eſpous'd it, but alſo many Perſons of great Judgment and of an Exemplary Virtue. I may reckon amongſt the latter Stephen de la Boetie, who wrote the Diſcourſe, Intituled de la ſervitude volontaire, ou du CONTRE-UN. (b) There never was a better Citizen, nor a greater Enemy to Commotions than he, and he had been more willing to uſe his skill and Learning in order to pacify them than to raiſe them. That which is to blame is, that frequently the ſame Perſons who write for the Rights of the People, would write for Arbitrary Power, if Affairs ſhould change; that is, if a Deſpotick Power came to be exercis'd in their favour, and to the great prejudice of a Party they ſhould hate. When the Catholicks of France in the XVI. Century ſaw the Wars of Religion ariſe, they wrote ſtoutly for the Right of Kings; but when they ſaw the Right of ſucceſſion devolved on a Proteſtant Prince, they chang'd their Principles (c), and wrote ſtoutly for the Right of the People. We have ſeen this ridiculous caprice in the Article of Claudius de Saintes. I queſtion whether after the Death of Henry III. Arnaud Sorbin would have Written what he Publiſh'd (d) in 1576. Would Peter Carpentier have written againſt the Civil-wars in 1590. what he writ a little after the Death of Charles IX? He receiv'd a ſmart Anſwer, Intituled, Petri Fabri reſponſio ad Petri Carpentarii famelici Rabulæ ſacrum de retinendis armis & pace repudianda conſilium ad V. C. Lomanium Terridæ, & Sereniaci Baronem. It was Printed at Neuſtad in 1575. and Publiſh'd in French the Year following with this Title. Traitté duquel on peut apprendre en quel cas il eſt permis à l'homme Chreſtien de porter les armes, & par lequel eſt reſpondu à Pierre Charpentier, tendant à fin d'empeſcher la paix, & nous laiſſer la guerre: par Pierre Fabre, à Monſieur de Lomanie, Baron de Terride & de Seriniac. It was neceſſary, I ſhould ſet down this French Title; for the Readers had never believed by the Latin (e) Title that Charpentier exhorted the People to lay down their Arms, and only propos'd to them an Evangelical Submiſſion. In all Parties there are ſome indiſcreet Perſons who Publiſh Books, which are afterwards upbraided to the whole Body. An Engliſh; Man nam'd William Allen, under Cromwell's Uſurpation, Publiſh'd a Book Intitul'd Killing a Tyrant no Crime. A Canon of Aneci quickly put this Doctrine on the Account of the Reform'd, in a Work that was Anſwer'd by the late Mr. Turretin. Was not this a ridiculous reproach? Can the wiſeſt and the beſt Regulated Communions reſtrain the unruly Pen of all private Members? Guy Patin ſpoke judiciouſly of this Engliſh Book, but he was ill inform'd of the Circumſtances. They have Printed in Holland, ſays he (f), a little Book Intituled. A Political Treatiſe, &c. That the killing of a Tyrant is no Murder. 'Tis ſaid to be Tranſlated from the Engliſh, but that Book was firſt written in French by a Gentleman of Nevers, call'd Mr. de Marigni, who is a great Wit. This Doctrine is very dangerous, and it were better to be ſilent about it. I don't love that there ſhould be ſo many Books de venenis, for the ſame reaſon: I have always had the Publick Good in View, and I don't love thoſe that oppoſe it. 'Tis not true that the Engliſh Piece was Written by Marigni: An Engliſh Man is the Author of it, and Marigni was not able to Write ſo grave, and ſo ſerious a Book.

XIX. Another Book publiſh'd under the falſe Name of Junius Brutus.

Languet is not the only Perſon who diſguis'd himſelf under the Name of Junius Brutus The Famous Socinian Crellius did it alſo in a Book concerning Liberty of Conſcience. The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library mentions it in this manner: Junius Brutus Polonus; Vindiciæ pro Religionis libertate, and refers us to Val. Magnus. But if you conſult the Article of Father Valerian Magni, you'll find nothing relating to this Junius Brutus Polonus, except that there is mention made of a Book (g) Printed like his at Eleutheropolis; and there alſo the Catalogue refers us to Pet. Haberkornius, tho' Dr. Hyde has not put under that Name any thing relating to Father Valerian, or Junius Brutus Polonus. We are referr'd ſtill from the Article Petrus Haberkornius, to that of Feurbornius, where we find nothing that has any Affinity with the other Articles. I am not ignorant of the Relation that is between the Capuchin Valerian Magni, and the Profeſſor Haberkorn; they diſputed one againſt another viva voce, and Haberkorn has Publiſh'd amongſt other Books an (D) Anti-Valerian, which Mr. Baillet has not forgotten in his Curious Collection (h) of Anti's. But ſince Dr. Hyde ſhews no ſuch thing, methinks his references are to no purpoſe, and that 'tis a little want of exactneſs, in one of the moſt exact Works that have been made in that kind.

The

(a) We have here a notable inſtance of the uncertainty of Humane knowledge; for that ſame cauſe, which has ſo many fair ſides, has others that are frightful.

(b) See Teiſſier Eloges tirez de de Mr. de Thou tom. 1 pag. 116. He quotes Montagne chap. 27. of the 1 Book of his Eſſays, and Thuanus Book 57.

(c) See the Article Hotomanus.

(d) He publiſh'd a Book Intitul'd, Le vray reſveille-matin des Calviniſtes & publicains François, où eſt amplement diſcouru de l'autorité des Princes & du devoir des ſujets envers iceux.

(e) The French Title does not clearly expreſs the poſition which Charpentier had maintained.

(f) Patin letter 154. page 604. of the 1. Vol. It is dated the 21. of Novem. 1659.

(g) The ſame Bibliotheque of the Anti-Trintarians, which ſays p. 117. that Crellius writ a Book under the Name of Junius Brutus ſays pag. 133. that this other Book was written by Joachim Stegman with this Title, Brevis, diſquiſitio quomodo vulgo dicti Evangelici Pontificios ac nominatim Valeriani Magni de Acatholicorum credendi regula judicium, ſolidè atque evidenter refutare queant. Eleutheropoli apud Godfridum Philalethium. 1633. in 12.

(h) Tom. 1. n. 39. pag. 255.

(D) An Anti-Valerian.] Mr. (*) Baillet ſays that the Anti-Valerian was Written againſt a Book of Controverſy of Father Valerian Magni, Printed at Vienna in Auſtria in 1641. with the Title of Judicium de Acatholicorum & Catholicorum regula credendi. This is true; but I obſerve that this Capuchin's Work is Compos'd of two Treatiſes which are not Twins. That which concerns the Rule of Faith of the Non-Catholicks is ſome Years Older than the other. It was Publiſh'd at Prague in 1628. Many Proteſtants Anſwer'd it. John Major in 1630. James Martini, and John Botſac in 1631. Conrad Bergius in 1639. The Socinian Joachim Stegman, whom I have mention'd (†) above, engag'd him in 1633. without naming himſelf. He did more injury to the cauſe than good. This Capuchin's Book was Re-printed at Vienna in 1641. with the Author's Replies to thoſe five Antagoniſts, and with the Treatiſe Intituled Catholicorum regula credendi.

(*) Baillet tom. 1. of the Anti n. 39. pag. 257.

(†) Letter I.

The end of this Dissertation will be a passage of the Preface to the Sorberiana. "I "have not been able to know what's become of (a) his little Tract de pace & concordia inter Christianos conciliandâ, nor of the Translation he made of a Book Print-"ed in 1657. and Intituled Junii Bruti Poloni vindiciæ pro religionis libertate, which "was not Written, as some have thought by the Learned Hubert Languet, tho' he "formerly disguis'd himself under that Name in his Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos; and which "ought to be look'd upon as a Continuation of the Treatise de libertate Ecclesiastica "Printed in 1607. which is doubtless Casaubon's, who speaks of it plainly enough in "his 539. Letter of the Hague Edition, though he had spoken of it in ambiguous "words in two or three other foregoing Letters."

(a) That is Sorbiere's.

SINCE the first Edition of this Dictionary I have learn'd a thing (b) which I thought very curious. It is in an English Book which was Printed at London in 1649. as an Apology for a Book which the Ministers of that great City had lately Publish'd, and as an Answer to the Invectives dispers'd in a Book of John Price. The Book, in which the thing in question is to be found, is Intitled, A modest and clear vindication of the serious representation, and late vindication of the Ministers of London, from the scandalous aspersions of John Price, in a Pamphlet of his, Intituled, Clerico Classicum or, The Clergies Alarum to a Third War. John Price had tax'd several Ministers with Publishing Books, that were good for nothing but raising Rebellions, and he had put Beza in the fourth rank, as being the Author of the vindiciæ contra Tyrannos. You are much in the wrong, says the Answer, to follow in this the Popish Writer of a Book Inticuled, Imago utriusque Ecclesiæ, Hierosolymæ & Babylonis, per P. D. M. This Writer, who is thought to be Tobias Matthews, said in the 105. Page that Junius Brutus's Book was of Beza's Writing: Can you deal equitably with so Orthodox a Divine as Beza, when you take up the Calumnies of the Papists against so zealous a Protestant? Does not the same Author, who accuses him of Writing the vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, accuse him also of having usurped the Parish and Wife of another Man? The first accusation is as false as the last. 'Tis easy to prove that he's not the Author of that Book: Would so wise and so Learn'd a Man have affirm'd in a Book the contrary to what he had taught in another? He makes it his business in all his Writings to shew the Obedience that is due to Magistrates; he says nothing of the Deposing or Murdering of Kings, which is the only end of Junius Brutus's Book. A great many passages directly opposite to Brutus's Principles might be drawn from Beza's Works: Here is one or two. Private Persons, says he (1), who are the Subjects of a Tyrant, have no remedy allowed them, besides amendment of Life, Prayers, and Tears. He will have them indeed to disobey the Orders of a Prince that are contrary to the Law of GOD, but not to take up Arms against him. (2) Aliud esse non parere quàm resistere, vel ad arma se comparare quæ à Domino non acceperis. He writ a Book de Hæreticis à Magistratu puniendis but he has not said a Word de Magistratibus ab Hæreticis puniendis. This Work of Junius Brutus, continues he, which good Authors, as you say, ascribe to Beza, was certainly written by a Jesuit. We know from good Hands that the Jesuit Parsons was the Author of it; some Persons still alive can witness that one Rench a Book-seller was Condemn'd to be hang'd for Printing this Book with another that the same Author Writ under the Name of Doleman. There is a Parliament-man, now sitting in the House of Commons who has caus'd Junius Brutus's Work to be Translated into English by the same Walker who has Written the Monthly Mercuries. This Translation has been Publish'd; but lest it should be known that it is the Jesuit Parsons's Book, Junius Brutus's Name has been left out, and an other Title put to it.

(b) Mr. Hill Minister of the English Church of Rotterdam was pleased to acquaint me with it, and to lend me the Book.

(1) Nullum aliud remedium proponitur privatis hominibus tyranno subjectis præter vitæ emendationem, preces & lachrymas. Beza in confessione fidei Christianæ cap. 5. circa finem.

(2) Id. ib.

This is the substance of the Latin Extracts I caus'd to be made out of this English Book. 'Tis a curious thing, in my opinion, that Robert Parsons the Jesuit (z) should pass in England for the Author of Stephen Junius Brutus's vindiciæ contra Tyrannos: But I don't believe there is any reason for Fathering it upon him. It does not seem possible that an English Jesuit should write at that time upon such a Question, without saying any thing relating to England, and nothing but what bespeaks him a Good French Protestant.

(z) Mr. Hill told me that Christopher Love Minister of London, who was Beheaded in Cromwell's time, maintained in a Book that Parsons is the pretended Junius Brutus

A DISSERTATION

Concerning Defamatory Libels.

On Occasion of a Passage of Tacitus, which I have mention'd in the Article Cassius Severus, and which informs us that Augustus was the first, that proceeded against those Libels by the Law de Majestate.

I. A New thing under the Empire of Augustus concerning Libels.

I would fain know what reasons the Emperor Augustus went upon to Involve Defamatory Libels under the Crimes of High-treason; for as Tacitus observes, before this, Treacheries which had weakned the Armies, Seditions which had weakned the People, and lastly an ill Administration of Offices which had weakned the Majesty of the Republick, were only comprehended under this kind of Crimes: And Actions indeed were punish'd, but not Words. (a) Legem majestatis reduxerat; cui nomen apud veteres idem, sed alia in judicium veniebant: si quis proditione exercitum, aut plebem seditionibus, denique male gesta Rep. majestatem populi Romani minuisset. Facta arguebantur, dicta impune erant. Primus Augustus

(a) Tacit. Annal. l. 1. c. 72.

Auguſtus cognitionem de famoſis libellis ſpecie legis ejus tractavit, commotus Caſſii Severi libidine, qua viros feminaſque illuſtres procacibus ſcriptis diffamaverat. For which reaſon another (a) Hiſtorian obſerves, that it was a Novelty to ſee a Lady of the Family of the Claudii accus'd before the People, as guilty of High-treaſon, for having ſaid in the hearing of a prodigious multitude, that ſtopt her Coach, would to GOD my Brother would return into the World, and loſe another Fleet, that there might be fewer People at Rome. The Commentators obſerve here a Two-fold Novelty; one in the Sex of the accus'd, the other in Intituling a ſimple wiſh, a Treaſon. I don't ſee that even at preſent, it is a point of Law conſtantly Eſtabliſh'd, to make (b) Reproaches againſt the Prince's Perſon even in Writing, Crimes of High-treaſon. So that Auguſtus did a thing, ſo much the more ſingular, becauſe he principally Eſtabliſh'd it againſt Satyrs, which did not concern his Perſon. I have before related Tacitus's Words, which ſhew that Caſſius Severus's Libels againſt Perſons of Quality of both Sexes obliged this Emperor to make this New Law. I don't find that this Caſſius was accus'd of Libelling Auguſtus, and I find in Suetonius that this Emperor did not puniſh Satyrical Diſcourſes nor Writings that concern'd him. (c) Nec quidquam ultra aut ſtatim aut poſtea inquiſivit. Tiberio quoque de eadem re ſedulo violentius apud ſe per epiſtolam conquerenti ita reſcripſit, ætati tuæ, mi Tiberi, noli in hac re indulgere, & nimium indignari quemquam eſſe qui de me male loquatur, ſatis eſt enim ſi hoc habemus, ne quis nobis male facere poſſit . . . . . (d) Etiam ſparſos de ſe in curia famoſos libellos, nec expavit, nec magnâ curâ redarguit, ac ne requiſitis quidem autoribus, id modo cenſuit cognoſcendum poſthac de iis qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuſpiam ſub alieno nomine ederent.

II. Three Hiſtorians give an imperfect account of it, eſpecially Suetonius.

But who would not be ſurpriz'd at this, that tho' three different Authors have ſpoken one after another of this Law of Auguſtus, yet we don't find the circumſtances of it exactly explain'd and confirm'd, by the mutual Aſſiſtance of the three Witneſſes? Tacitus barely tells us that the Crime of Writing Defamatory Libels, was brought under the Law de Majeſtate. Suetonius who comes after Tacitus does not ſpeak of this Law de Majeſtate; he only ſays that Auguſtus order'd that thoſe, who Publiſh'd ſuch Libels under another Name, ſhould be proceeded againſt. Dion who comes after Suetonius, does not ſpeak neither of the Law de Majeſtate, contenting himſelf to ſay, 1. That Auguſtus two Years before he died, order'd Informations to be made againſt Defamatory Libels, and that the Ædiles of Rome and the Governors of other Places, ſhould burn all the Writings of this kind that they ſhould diſcover. 2. That he puniſhed ſome Libellers. Of thoſe three Hiſtorians Suetonius has the leaſt clear'd up this Fact, ſince he ſeems to ſay (e) that provided a Man writ Libels under no Name or under his own, he might ſafely defame the Court and the City. Why then was Caſſius Severus baniſh'd? Why were Labienus's Writings burnt? Can any one believe it was becauſe theſe two Authors had Publiſh'd their Books under the Names of others? What a fooliſh thought!

III. Vain attempts to juſtify Suetonius.

Torrentius would ſave Suetonius's Honour by ſubſtituting, without the Authority of any Manuſcript, theſe Words ſub alienove nomine, for theſe ſub alieno nomine. But I obſerve that this Correction has been laid aſide with the utmoſt contempt; ſo far that Suetonius's Commentator in uſum Delphini, thought it did not make a new Senſe, ſo little had he examin'd it. Others by ſub alieno nomine, &c. will have the Satyrs to be underſtood, in which the Names of the Perſons Satyriz'd, did not appear. But this explication is not minded: After all notwithſtanding theſe expedients, the moſt abuſive Satyrs, might have been Publiſh'd with impunity, according to Suetonius; provided they had been Anonymous, or no body had been abus'd under a falſe Name, but under their true Name, Which would be a ſhameful reproach to the Emperor's Council. Laſtly, ſome ſay that whereas the Laws of the 12 Tables had ſufficiently prohibited the making Satyrs in one's own Name, Auguſtus thought himſelf only oblig'd to condemn thoſe that were Publiſh'd under another Man's Name. But 1. we don't ſee that the Laws of the 12. Tables concern more or leſs Anonymous Satyrs, than thoſe that appear'd under a Man's true Name or a falſe one. 2. It had been very needleſs to forbid only thoſe that ſhould come out with the Names of the Authors: And what probability is there that the Ancient Laws of Rome ſhould have left ſo large a gap for any one that had a mind to evade them? 3. Is it uſual in making any Addition to a Law not to renew and confirm the Ancient Orders? 4. Can it be conceived that if the Ancient Roman Laws, had not puniſh'd the moſt puniſhable Satyrs, that is, the Nameleſs Ones, whoſe blows fall thickeſt and heavieſt, Auguſtus by ſupplying what was wanting in them, ſhould have forgot the moſt neceſſary remedy, viz. the puniſhment of Anonymous Libels?

IV. Whether Libels were comprehended under the Crimes of High-treaſon, becauſe they are an Uſurpation of the Supreme Authority.

'Tis more probable (f) that it was he, who caus'd the Law or the Decree of the Senate to be made, the Words whereof Ulpian has preſerved to us; Si quis librum ad infamiam alicujus pertinentem ſcripſit, compoſuit, edidit, dolove malo fecit quo quid eorum fieret, etiamſi alterius nomine ediderit, vel ſine nomine; uti de ea re agere liceat: & ſi condemnatus ſit, qui id fecit, inteſtabilis ex lege eſſe jubetur.

I confeſs that the Modern Hiſtorians are too Prolix, and that ſome of 'em Write more Volumes upon the Age they live in, than Livy did upon the time that paſſed from the Foundation of Rome to Cæſar. But on the other hand the Ancients are too ſhort, and 'tis better for our inſtruction that a Hiſtory ſhould contain too many particulars, than if too many were omitted.

Perhaps ſome will think that Auguſtus needed no great fetch of reaſoning to ſhew, that Libellers deſerved to be proſecuted as guilty of High-treaſon, ſince 'tis evident that a Subject who defames his Neighbour uſurps one of the Rights of Sovereignty, and that it belongs only to the Sovereign to inflict the pain of Infamy, as well as that of Ba-

(a) Novo more judicium majeſtatis apud populum mulier ſubiit, quod in conferta multitudine ægre procedente carpento palam optaverit ut frater ſuus pulcher reviviſceret, atque iterum claſſem amitteret quo minor turba Romæ foret. Sueton. in Tiber. c. 2.

(b) Auberi, Hiſt. of Card. de Richelieu l. 4. p. m. 405. quotes an Arreſt of the Parliament of Paris of the 17. of April, 1620. which condemn'd to the Gallies a Man convicted of High-treaſon for having had a Hand in a Libel againſt the State.

(c) Sueton. in Aug. c. 51.

(d) Id. ib. c. 55.

(e) Id modo cenſuit (Auguſtus) cognoſcendum poſthac de iis qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuſpiam ſub alieno nomine ederent. Sueton. in Aug. c. 55.

(f) Baudouin who relates thoſe words of the Law, is of opinion that it was inacted under Auguſtus, or Tiberius. See his Treatiſe in leges 12. Tabul. c. 9. pag. m. 49. & 50.

The end of this Diſſertation will be a paſſage of the Preface to the Sorberiana. “I have not been able to know what's become of (a) his little Tract de pace & concordia inter Chriſtianos conciliandâ, nor of the Tranſlation he made of a Book Printed in 1637. and Intituled Junii Bruti Poloni vindiciæ pro religionis libertate, which was not Written, as ſome have thought by the Learned Hubert Languet, tho' he formerly diſguis'd himſelf under that Name in his Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos; and which ought to be look'd upon as a Continuation of the Treatiſe de libertate Eccleſiaſtica Printed in 1607. which is doubtleſs Caſaubon's, who ſpeaks of it plainly enough in his 539. Letter of the Hague Edition, though he had ſpoken of it in ambiguous words in two or three other foregoing Letters.”

SINCE the firſt Edition of this Dictionary I have learn'd a thing (b) which I thought very curious. It is in an Engliſh Book which was Printed at London in 1649. as an Apology for a Book which the Miniſters of that great City had lately Publiſh'd, and as an Anſwer to the Invectives diſpers'd in a Book of John Price. The Book, in which the thing in queſtion is to be found, is Intitled, A modeſt and clear vindication of the ſerious repreſentation, and late vindication of the Miniſters of London, from the ſcandalous aſperſions of John Price, in a Pamphlet of his, Intituled, Clerico Claſſicum or, The Clergies Alarum to a Third War. John Price had tax'd ſeveral Miniſters with Publiſhing Books, that were good for nothing but raiſing Rebellions, and he had put Beza in the fourth rank, as being the Author of the vindiciæ contra Tyrannos. You are much in the wrong, ſays the Anſwer, to follow in this the Popiſh Writer of a Book Intituled, Imago utriuſque Eccleſiæ, Hieroſolymæ & Babylonis, per P. D. M. This Writer, who is thought to be Tobias Matthews, ſaid in the 105. Page that Junius Brutus's Book was of Beza's Writing: Can you deal equitably with ſo Orthodox a Divine as Beza, when you take up the Calumnies of the Papiſts againſt ſo zealous a Proteſtant? Does not the ſame Author, who accuſes him of Writing the vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, accuſe him alſo of having uſurped the Pariſh and Wife of another Man? The firſt accuſation is as falſe as the laſt. 'Tis eaſy to prove that he's not the Author of that Book: Would ſo wiſe and ſo Learn'd a Man have affirm'd in a Book the contrary to what he had taught in another? He makes it his buſineſs in all his Writings to ſhew the Obedience that is due to Magiſtrates; he ſays nothing of the Depoſing or Murdering of Kings, which is the only end of Junius Brutus's Book. A great many paſſages directly oppoſite to Brutus's Principles might be drawn from Beza's Works: Here is one or two. Private Perſons, ſays he (1), who are the Subjects of a Tyrant, have no remedy allowed them, beſides amendment of Life, Prayers, and Tears. He will have them indeed to diſobey the Orders of a Prince that are contrary to the Law of GOD, but not to take up Arms againſt him. (2) Aliud eſſe non parere quàm reſiſtere, vel ad arma ſe comparare quæ à Domino non acceperis. He writ a Book de Hæreticis à Magiſtratu puniendis but he has not ſaid a Word de Magiſtratibus ab Hæreticis puniendis. This Work of Junius Brutus, continues he, which good Authors, as you ſay, aſcribe to Beza, was certainly written by a Jeſuit. We know from good Hands that the Jeſuit Parſons was the Author of it; ſome Perſons ſtill alive can witneſs that one Rench a Book-ſeller was Condemn'd to be hang'd for Printing this Book with another that the ſame Author Writ under the Name of Doleman. There is a Parliament-man, now ſitting in the Houſe of Commons who has caus'd Junius Brutus's Work to be Tranſlated into Engliſh by the ſame Walker who has Written the Monthly Mercuries. This Tranſlation has been Publiſh'd; but leſt it ſhould be known that it is the Jeſuit Parſons's Book, Junius Brutus's Name has been left out, and another Title put to it.

This is the ſubſtance of the Latin Extracts I caus'd to be made out of this Engliſh Book. 'Tis a curious thing, in my opinion, that Robert Parſons the Jeſuit (z) ſhould paſs in England for the Author of Stephen Junius Brutus's vindiciæ contra Tyrannos: But I don't believe there is any reaſon for Fathering it upon him. It does not ſeem poſſible that an Engliſh Jeſuit ſhould write at that time upon ſuch a Queſtion, without ſaying any thing relating to England, and nothing but what beſpeaks him a Good French Proteſtant.

(a) That is Sorbiere's.

(b) Mr. Hill Miniſter of the Engliſh Church of Rotterdam was pleaſed to acquaint me with it, and to lend me the Book.

(1) Nullum aliud remedium proponitur privatis hominibus tyranno ſubjectis præter vitæ emendationem, preces & lachrymas. Beza in confeſſione fidei Chriſtianæ cap. 5. circa finem.

(2) Id. ib.

(z) Mr. Hill told me that Chriſtopher Love Miniſter of London, who was Beheaded in Cromwell's time, maintained in a Book that Parſons is the pretended Junius Brutus

A DISSERTATION

Concerning Defamatory Libels.

On Occaſion of a Paſſage of Tacitus, which I have mention'd in the Article Caſſius Severus, and which informs us that Auguſtus was the firſt, that proceeded againſt thoſe Libels by the Law de Majeſtate.

I. A New thing under the Empire of Auguſtus concerning Libels.

I would fain know what reaſons the Emperor Auguſtus went upon to Involve Defamatory Libels under the Crimes of High-treaſon; for as Tacitus obſerves, before this, Treacheries which had weakned the Armies, Seditions which had weakned the People, and laſtly an ill Adminiſtration of Offices which had weakned the Majeſty of the Republick, were only comprehended under this kind of Crimes: And Actions indeed were puniſh'd, but not Words. (a) Legem majeſtatis reduxerat; cui nomen apud veteres idem, ſed alia in judicium veniebant: ſi quis proditione exercitum, aut plebem ſeditionibus, denique male geſta Rep. majeſtatem populi Romani minuiſſet. Facta arguebantur, dicta impunè erant. Primus Auguſtus

(a) Tacit. Annal. l. 1. c. 72.

Auguſtus cognitionem de famoſis libellis ſpecie legis ejus tractavit, commotus Caſſii Severi libidine, qua viros feminaſque inluſtres procacibus ſcriptis diffamaverat. For which reaſon another (a) Hiſtorian obſerves, that it was a Novelty to ſee a Lady of the Family of the Claudii accus'd before the People, as guilty of High-treaſon, for having ſaid in the hearing of a prodigious multitude, that ſtopt her Coach, would to GOD my Brother would return into the World, and loſe another Fleet, that there might be fewer People at Rome. The Commentators obſerve here a Two-fold Novelty; one in the Sex of the accus'd, the other in Intituling a ſimple wiſh, a Treaſon. I don't ſee that even at preſent, it is a point of Law conſtantly Eſtabliſh'd, to make (b) Reproaches againſt the Prince's Perſon even in Writing, Crimes of High-treaſon. So that Auguſtus did a thing, ſo much the more ſingular, becauſe he principally Eſtabliſh'd it againſt Satyrs, which did not concern his Perſon. I have before related Tacitus's Words, which ſhew that Caſſius Severus's Libels againſt Perſons of Quality of both Sexes obliged this Emperor to make this New Law. I don't find that this Caſſius was accus'd of Libelling Auguſtus, and I find in Suetonius that this Emperor did not puniſh Satyrical Diſcourſes nor Writings that concern'd him. (c) Nec quidquam ultra aut ſtatim aut poſtea inquiſivit. Tiberio quoque de eadem re ſedulo violentius apud ſe per epiſtolam conquerenti ita reſcripſit, ætati tuæ, mi Tiberi, noli in hac re indulgere, & nimium indignari quemquam eſſe qui de me male loquatur, ſatis eſt enim ſi hoc habemus, ne quis nobis male facere poſſit . . . . . (d) Etiam ſparſos de ſe in curia famoſos libellos, nec expavit, nec magnâ curâ redarguit, ac ne requiſitis quidem autoribus, id modo cenſuit cognoſcendum poſthac de iis qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuſpiam ſub alieno nomine ederent.

II. Three Hiſtorians give an imperfect account of it, eſpecially Suetonius.

But who would not be ſurpriz'd at this, that tho' three different Authors have ſpoken one after another of this Law of Auguſtus, yet we don't find the circumſtances of it exactly explain'd and confirm'd, by the mutual Aſſiſtance of the three Witneſſes? Tacitus barely tells us that the Crime of Writing Defamatory Libels, was brought under the Law de Majeſtate. Suetonius who comes after Tacitus does not ſpeak of this Law de Majeſtate; he only ſays that Auguſtus order'd that thoſe, who Publiſh'd ſuch Libels under another Name, ſhould be proceeded againſt. Dion who comes after Suetonius, does not ſpeak neither of the Law de Majeſtate, contenting himſelf to ſay, 1. That Auguſtus two Years before he died, order'd Informations to be made againſt Defamatory Libels, and that the Ædiles of Rome and the Governors of other Places, ſhould burn all the Writings of this kind that they ſhould diſcover. 2. That he puniſhed ſome Libellers. Of thoſe three Hiſtorians Suetonius has the leaſt clear'd up this Fact, ſince he ſeems to ſay (e) that provided a Man writ Libels under no Name or under his own, he might ſafely defame the Court and the City. Why then was Caſſius Severus baniſh'd? Why were Labienus's Writings burnt? Can any one believe it was becauſe theſe two Authors had Publiſh'd their Books under the Names of others? What a fooliſh thought!

III. Vain attempts to juſtify Suetonius.

Torrentius would ſave Suetonius's Honour by ſubſtituting, without the Authority of any Manuſcript, theſe Words ſub alienove nomine, for theſe ſub alieno nomine. But I obſerve that this Correction has been laid aſide with the utmoſt contempt; ſo far that Suetonius's Commentator in uſum Delphini, thought it did not make a new Senſe, ſo little had he examin'd it. Others by ſub alieno nomine, &c. will have the Satyrs to be underſtood, in which the Names of the Perſons Satyriz'd, did not appear. But this explication is not minded: After all notwithſtanding theſe expedients, the moſt abuſive Satyrs, might have been Publiſh'd with impunity, according to Suetonius; provided they had been Anonymous, or no body had been abus'd under a falſe Name, but under their true Name, Which would be a ſhameful reproach to the Emperor's Council. Laſtly, ſome ſay that whereas the Laws of the 12 Tables had ſufficiently prohibited the making Satyrs in one's own Name, Auguſtus thought himſelf only oblig'd to condemn thoſe that were Publiſh'd under another Man's Name. But 1. we don't ſee that the Laws of the 12. Tables concern more or leſs Anonymous Satyrs, than thoſe that appear'd under a Man's true Name or a falſe one. 2. It had been very needleſs to forbid only thoſe that ſhould come out with the Names of the Authors: And what probability is there that the Ancient Laws of Rome ſhould have left ſo large a gap for any one that had a mind to evade them? 3. Is it uſual in making any Addition to a Law not to renew and confirm the Ancient Orders? 4. Can it be conceived that if the Ancient Roman Laws, had not puniſh'd the moſt puniſhable Satyrs, that is, the Nameleſs Ones, whoſe blows fall thickeſt and heavieſt, Auguſtus by ſupplying what was wanting in them, ſhould have forgot the moſt neceſſary remedy, viz. the puniſhment of Anonymous Libels?

IV. Whether Libels were comprehended under the Crimes of High-treaſon, becauſe they are an Uſurpation of the Supreme Authority.

'Tis more probable (f) that it was he, who caus'd the Law or the Decree of the Senate to be made, the Words whereof Ulpian has preſerved to us; Si quis librum ad infamiam alicujus pertinentem ſcripſit, compoſuit, edidit, dolove malo fecit quo quid eorum fieret, etiamſi alterius nomine ediderit, vel ſine nomine; uti de ea re agere liceat: & ſi condemnatus ſit, qui id fecit, inteſtabilis ex lege eſſe jubetur.

I confeſs that the Modern Hiſtorians are too Prolix, and that ſome of 'em Write more Volumes upon the Age they live in, than Livy did upon the time that paſſed from the Foundation of Rome to Cæſar. But on the other hand the Ancients are too ſhort, and 'tis better for our inſtruction that a Hiſtory ſhould contain too many particulars, than if too many were omitted.

Perhaps ſome will think that Auguſtus needed no great fetch of reaſoning to ſhew, that Libellers deſerved to be proſecuted as guilty of High-treaſon, ſince 'tis evident that a Subject who defames his Neighbour uſurps one of the Rights of Sovereignty, and that it belongs only to the Sovereign to inflict the pain of Infamy, as well as that of Ba-

(a) Novo more judicium majeſtatis apud populum mulier ſubiit, quod in conferta multitudine ægre procedente carpento palam optaverit ut frater ſuus pulcher reviviſceret, atque iterum claſſem amitteret quo minor turba Romæ foret. Sueton. in Tiber. c. 2.

(b) Auberi, Hiſt. of Card. de Richelieu l. 4. p. m. 405. quotes an Arreſt of the Parliament of Paris of the 17. of April, 1610. which condemn'd to the Gallies a Man convicted of High-treaſon for having had a Hand in a Libel againſt the State.

(c) Sueton. in Aug. c. 51.

(d) Id. ib. c. 55.

(e) Id modo cenſuit (Auguſtus) cognoſcendum poſthac de iis qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuſpiam ſub alieno nomine ederent. Sueton. in Aug. c. 55.

(f) Baudouin who relates thoſe words of the Law, is of opinion that it was inacted under Auguſtus, or Tiberius. See his Treatiſe in leges 12. Tabul. c. 9. pag. m. 49. & 50.

Baniſhment, Impriſonment, Death, &c. But this would be a very falſe reaſoning, and at once Converting into High-treaſon, the Violation of all the Laws, Adultery, Theſt, Fornication, &c. for it may be ſaid that a Robber not only deſpiſes the Laws of his Sovereign, but alſo uſurps a Right that belongs only to him: None but a Sovereign can take away a private Man's poſſeſſion, either in whole or in part. The right of Fining, Confiſcating, &c. muſt no leſs flow from the Supreme Power, than that of branding any one with Infamy; and conſequently a Satyriſt who defames his Neighbour cannot be guilty of High-treaſon, without concluding that a Robber, and a Fornicator are ſo too. Which would be ſo much the truer with reſpect to Fornicators, becauſe if they debauch a married Woman, they hazard the defrauding the true Heirs, by the Intruſion of an Illegitimate Coheir, and at the ſame time they bring a great diſhonour upon the Husband: If they debauch a Maid, they caſt upon her an ignominious blot which reflects upon the Family, and they cauſe her Father a real damage and a pecuniary loſs, like that which conſiſts in the decay of Merchandiſes. For indeed a deflour'd Maid, is like pall'd Wine, which ſinks in its price; it is a Commodity which the Proprietor has ſtill upon his Hands, unleſs he will put it off at a great loſs; I mean by undermatching his Daughter, or giving her an exorbitant Portion. We can't therefore this way juſtify the New Law of Auguſtus: The ſhorteſt way is probably to confeſs that it was not regular. I don't know but by a forc'd conſtruction it was derived from a Maxim or Definition, that is to be found in Cicero, which makes it a diminution of the Majeſty of the Roman People, to take any thing from the dignity, grandeur, or Power of that People, or from thoſe to whom they Communicated any Power. (a) Majeſtatem minuere eſt de dignitate, aut amplitudine, aut poteſtate populi, aut eorum quibus populus poteſtatem dedit aliquid derogare. I only believe that by the Law de Majeſtate, muſt be meant ſomething more than Auberi means in the place I have cited, where he ſays, that Auguſtus did but renew the Capital Action, which the Laws of the Twelve Tables had enacted againſt the Authors of abuſive Libels. I ſhall obſerve by the by that Mr. Naude has confounded thoſe Twelve Tables with a Decree of the Senate. Nay, He affords a Proof of his fault; for what he cites from Arnobius, manifeſtly proves the juſtice of my cenſure. If the Parliament, ſays he, (b) had had leiſure to caſt their Eyes upon theſe Defamatory Libels, I dare ſay they would have hindred the ſale of a great part of them, had it been only to imitate the vertue of that Ancient Roman Senate, of which Arnobius ſaid, if my memory does not fail me: Carmen malum conſcribere, quo fama alterius coinquinetur, & vita, decemviralibus ſcitis evadere noluiſtis impunitum.

Tiberius maintain'd this innovation of Auguſtus, eſpecially on Account of ſome ſlandering Writers who attack'd his Perſon, and touch'd the moſt tender ſores of his Family. (c) Mox Tiberius conſultante Pompeio Macro Prætore, an judicia Majeſtatis redderentur, exercendas leges eſſe reſpondit. Hunc quoque aſperavere carmina incertis auctoribus vulgata in ſævitiam ſuperbiamque ejus, & diſcordem cum matre animum. He (d) afterwards extended this Law to every body: Poor Cremutius Cordus in vain pleaded that he (e) had written nothing offenſive either againſt Tiberius or the Empreſs, who were thoſe ſaid he, whom the Law de Majeſtate comprehended; this was not ſufficient to clear him from his pretended Crime, of having praiſed Brutus and Caſſius. (f) Verba mea, Patres Conſcripti, arguuntur, adeo factorum innocens ſum. Sed neque hæc in principem aut principis parentem, quos lex majeſtatis amplectitur. Note that Tacitus ſeems to have forgotten what he had ſaid in the 72 Chapter of the 1 Book: For as he makes Cremutius Cordus ſpeak, one would think that only Libels againſt the Emperor, and the Empreſs were comprehended under the Law de Majeſtate: But there is no ſuch reſtriction in the 72. Chapter.

V.
Nero bore Libels ſomewhat patiently.

But I muſt not forget to ſay, that this Law de Majeſtate, was not always fatal. Nero, as much a Nero as he was, not only did not annul the Decree of the Senate, which condemn'd the Prætor (g) Antiſtius only to Baniſhment and the confiſcation of his Eſtate, for having Publiſh'd ſome Satyrs againſt the Emperor; but he declar'd to the Senate that he permitted them fully to abſolve Antiſtius. (h) Se qui ſeveritatem decernentium impediturus fuerit, moderationem non prohibere. Statuerent ut vellent, datam etiam abſolvendi licentiam. The Senate ſtood to their firſt reſolution. Almoſt at the ſame time Fabricius (i) Vejento, Author of abundance of Libels againſt the Senators, and the Clergy of Rome, having been judg'd by Nero himſelf, was only Baniſh'd Italy. His Books were condemn'd to be burnt: They were afterwards bought up and read with the greateſt greedineſs, whilſt there was danger in doing it; but when it was permitted to have them, they were no longer cared for. (k) Convictum Vejentonem Italia depulit & libros exuri juſſit conquiſitos lectitatoſque donec cum periculo parabantur, mox licentia habendi oblivionem attulit. Suetonius obſerves as a very ſingular thing, that Nero was ſo little ſenſible to detraction, that he ſhewed no greater mildneſs to any, than to ſuch as exercis'd their Satyrical Wit upon him. Some biting Verſes againſt him were handed about and poſted up; but he was not concern'd at it, he made no ſearch after the Authors; and ſome of them having been impeach'd by the Senate, he prevented their being rigorouſly puniſh'd for it. (l) Mirum & vel præcipue notabile inter hæc fuit, nihil eum patientius quam maledicta & convicia hominum tuliſſe, neque in ullos leniorem, quam qui ſe dictis aut carminibus laceſſiſſent, extitiſſe. . . . Vel contemptu omnis infamiæ, vel ne fatendo dolorem irritaret ingenia. All the puniſhment he appointed for the biting raillery of a Cynick, who had inſulted him in the open Street, and for his being ridiculed on the Stage, was the baniſhing the Philoſopher and Comedian out of Italy. Suetonius could not tell whether there was more indolence than policy in it: For Nero by ſhewing his reſentment would have had reaſon to fear he ſhould incourage the Detractors

---

(a) Cicero l. 2. de invent. I ſay nothing of a paſſage of Cicero, epiſt. 11. l. 3. ad famil. wherein he ſays, as ſome will have it, that Sylla made it High-treaſon to declaim againſt another; eſt majeſtas (& ſic Sylla voluit) ne in quemvis impune declamari liceret; I ſay, I don't ſpeak of it, becauſe I don't think it is well mended. Beſides, I ſhould prefer Lambinus's explication to that of Manutius, tho' I am of opinion that they are both faulty.

(b) Naudé, Dialogues de Maſcurat p. 18.

(c) Tacitus, annal. l. 1. c. 72.

(d) Ex Suetonius in Tiber. c. 58.

(e) Apud Tacitum Ann. l. 4. c. 34.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Probroſa adverſus principem carmina factitavit, vulgavitque celebri convivio. . . Exin . . majeſtatis delatus eſt. Tacit. lib. 14. cap. 48.

(h) Tacit. ib. c. 49.

(i) Quod multa & probroſa in Patres & Sacerdotes compoſuiſſet, iis libris quibus nomen codicillorum dederat. Ib. c. 50.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Sueton. in Nerone c. 39.

ctors; and every one knows Tacitus's Sentence in the 34th. Chap. of the 4th. Book of his Annals, on occaſion of a doubt like that of Suetonius: an injury, ſays he, that is deſpis'd, falls of it ſelf: If you are diſturb'd at it, you propagate and ſtrengthen it. Carmina Bibaculi & Catulli referta contumeliis Cæſarum leguntur: ſed ipſe divus Julius, ipſe divus Auguſtus & tulere iſta & reliquere, haud facilè dixerim, moderatione magis an ſapientiâ: namque ſpreta exoleſcunt: ſi iraſcere, adgnita videntur.

VI. It is very neceſſary to reſtrain the licentiouſneſs of Libels. The Ancient Heathens reſtrained it.

This is well enough, if the queſtion is only about pardoning the affronts, in which a Sovereign is Perſonally concern'd; but his Subjects ought not to be left expos'd to this Storm. Domitian (a) would deſerve a Hundred Encomiums, had he only puniſh'd thoſe who had ſlandered the Perſons of the beſt Quality of Rome, in which he did not uſe too much rigour. It ſeems then that Auguſtus's extreme ſeverity againſt Defamatory Libels, if ſeparated from the abuſe his Succeſſors often made of it, conſiſted only in the Terms and in the Stately Word de Majeſtate, and ſo his conduct is not at the bottom to be condemn'd: For this licentiouſneſs of Libels, is one of thoſe that ought chiefly to be reſtrain'd in a Government. The Honour, Glory and Reputation of Families, things a thouſand times more precious than Gold or Silver, could not be ſafe, unleſs the inſolence, and malignity of Satyrical Writers were repreſs'd. Indeed they would begin with Perſons of an ill Life; but after ſuch a beginning they would ſpread like the Plague, without any diſtinction, upon ſacred and profane places, and upon both Chaſt and Lewd Families. Antiquity would have had a full experience of it, if it had not been at laſt prevented by good Laws, and by Proſecuting the Libellers, when Jeſts were carried too far, and when thoſe who were not yet bitten by theſe mad Dogs, reflected that their turn would alſo come, and that therefore they ought to concur with thoſe who had been already wounded, to put a ſtop to ſuch a diſorder. 'Tis in this caſe as in a Fire; (b) the Neighbours work as much to extinguiſh it, as they whoſe Houſe is Actually in Flames. Horace relates the thing thus:

> Feſcennina (c) per hunc inventa licentia morem
> Verſibus alternis opprobria ruſtica fudit,
> Libertaſque recurrentes accepta per annos
> Luſit amabiliter, donec jam ſævus apertam
> In rabiem cœpit verti jocus, & per honeſtas
> Ire minax impune domos. Doluere cruento
> Dente laceſſiti, fuit intactis quoque cura
> Conditione ſuper communi: quin etiam lex
> Pœnaque lata, malo quæ nollet carmine quemquam
> Deſcribi. Vertêre modum formidine fuſtis
> Ad benedicendum delectandumque redacti.

Cicero had alſo obſerved, that the Ancient Greek Comedians ſo abus'd the liberty they had to cenſure the ill Lives of private Perſons, namely and directly, that no Body could eſcape the ſlanders of the Stage, no not Pericles himſelf, who had ſo long govern'd the Republick both in Peace and War. It had been a tolerable thing, ſaid Cicero, if the wicked Citizens had been expos'd to theſe inſults, tho' it were better that ſuch Men ſhould be reproved by the Cenſor than by a Poet; but 'tis intolerable that ſuch a Man as Pericles ſhould not be free from them. Apud Græcos antiquiores fuit lege conceſſum, ut quod vellet Comœdia nominatim vel de quo vellet (d) diceret; itaque ſicut in eiſdem libris loquitur Africanus, quem illa non attigit, vel potius quem non vexavit, cui pepercit? Eſto: populares homines improbos, in Rep. ſeditioſos, Cleonem, Cleophontem, Hyperbolum læſit: patiamur, inquit, etſi hujuſmodi cives à Cenſore melius eſt quam à Poëta notari: ſed Periclem cum jam ſuæ civitati maxima autoritate plurimos annos domi & belli præfuiſſet, violari verſibus & eos agi in Scena non plus decuit, quam ſi Plautus, inquit, noſter voluiſſet aut Nævius Publio & Cneo Scipioni, aut Cæcilius Marco Catoni maledicere (e). Of all the Treaſures in the World, none could be more expos'd to Moth and Ruſt, and to the Rapacious Hands of Robbers, than Honour and a good Name, unleſs the inſolence of theſe Satyriſts was reſtrain'd: For as, by I know not what diſmal Fatality, the Spirit of ſlander and revenge is often to be found with a ſeeming Auſtere Life, the impunity of Libels would give Birth to vaſt Numbers of them againſt the beſt Men; and if a Man ſhould provoke never ſo little a Bigot or a moroſe Phanatick he would preſently find his reputation ſtained by his Pen, and the popular credulity for this ſort of Writers would afford them a Sanctuary, even with reſpect to the moſt extravagant Calumnies. If theſe People would not put off the Vertues with which they ought to begin a devout Life, the Vertues, I ſay, which make an honeſt Man, and if they would follow the beſt advice that can be given them, not to pretend (f) to be devout before they are good Men, they would not diſtinguiſh themſelves as they do, by their Satyrical Diſcourſes and Defamatory Libels.

VII. What anſwer is to be made to thoſe, who pretend to juſtify the Writers of Libels.

Hence we ſee what anſwer is to be given to thoſe, who ſay that Libels are beneficial to the Society, in as much as they confine Perſons of both Sexes within the bounds of Decency: 'Tis a Bridle, ſay they, that reſtrains them: Free them from the fear of being Defam'd to the End of the World, and in all future Ages by ſome ingenious Satyrs, and there will be no extravagance but what they'l be guilty of. This is all wrong: We don't find that hitherto there has been any ſcarcity of Libels, and yet the World has not been, and is not better'd by them. Beſides, would not this pretended Curb become utterly uſeleſs, by the abuſe that would be made of the remedy, by defaming without quarter or diſtinction all ſorts of Families?

What then? Muſt ſome be allow'd to commit Infamous Actions, and others ſhall not be be allowed to puniſh them with all the Trumpets of Fame? I anſwer, that as it does not belong to private Perſons, to puniſh Theſt and Murder, and the care of it ought to be left to thoſe whom the Supream Authority has appointed for the puniſhment of Malefactors; the like ought to be done with reſpect to the penalty of Infamy. 'Tis' encroaching upon the Prerogative of the Sovereign, to pretend this ſort of puniſhment, when we have not a Character for it communicated by our Governors. A Criminal may then juſtly ask the queſtion that was put to Moſes, (a) Who made thee a Ruler and a Judge over us? What private Perſons may lawfully do againſt thoſe that deſerve Infamy, is exactly what they may do againſt a Robber or an Aſſaſſin. They may bring him before the Judges, and witneſs againſt him what they know; they may in like manner Impeach the Criminal Commerce, and Infamous Life of others; but they muſt do it with all the Characters of a formal accuſer: They muſt declare their Names and the places of their abode; and eſpecially prove judicially, if there be occaſion for it, all their accuſations. Now where are the Libellers that take this method? The firſt thing they obſerve is to conceal their Names, their profeſſion and abode. They are not very Conſcientious about their Proofs; the leaſt ſuſpicions, or hear-ſay's, ſerve them for a demonſtration: And therefore they are juſtly liable to the puniſhment of ſlanderers and falſe witneſſes; for to deſerve this puniſhment, it is not neceſſary that what a Man advances ſhould be really falſe; it is enough that he maintains it without knowing it, and without being able to prove it.

(a) Scripta famoſa vulgoque edita, quibus primores viri ac feminæ notabantur, abolevit non ſine auctorum ignominia. Sueton. in Dom. c. 8.

(b) Dente Theonino cum circumroditur, ecquid Ad te poſt paulo ventura pericula ſentis? Nam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet Et neglecta ſolent incendia ſumere vires. Horat. epiſt. 18. l. 1.

(c) Idem. epiſt. 1. lib. 2. To which may be added this paſſage Succeſſit vetus his Comœdia, non ſine multa Laude, ſed in vitium libertas excidit & vim Dignam lege regi. Lex eſt accepta, chorusque Turpiter obticuit ſublato jure nocendi, Id. de Arte Poet.

(d) See Horace at the beginning of the 4. Satyr of the 1. Book.

(e) Auguſt. de civit. Dei, l. 2. c. 9. ex Ciceronis lib. 4. de Republica.

(f) See the Reflexions ſur les defauts d'autrui, Printed in the Year 1690.

I am perſuaded that Juſtice and the Publick Good require that Evil (b) Actions ſhould be brought to the Tribunal of Fame, to receive the puniſhment that is due to them, intereſt Reipublicæ cognoſci malos: But every body ought not to pretend to this Function. For if the ill action you deſire to make publick, deſerves to be puniſh'd by the Laws of the Land, you muſt leave it to the Magiſtrates, or at moſt help them by a Judicial Teſtimony, that the Crime may at once bear a double puniſhment, that of publick Fame and that of the Judges. We muſt remember that we are not to give an Account of our Conduct, to a Poet or any other ſuch Writer, but to the Magiſtrates. This is the Doctrine of a Good Author, as will appear by theſe Latin Words. (c) Noſtræ contra duodecim Tabulæ cum perpaucas res capite ſanxiſſent, in his hanc quoque ſanciendam putaverunt, ſi quis occentaviſſet, ſive carmen condidiſſet, quod infamiam faceret flagitiumve alteri. Præclare, judiciis enim ac Magiſtratuum diſceptationibus legitimis propoſitam vitam, non poetarum ingeniis habere debemus, nec probrum audire, niſi ea lege ut reſpondere liceat & judicio defendere. But if the Ill action be of another kind, going unpuniſh'd, either on account of the toleration of the Law, or becauſe of the Perſons who do it, neither does it then belong to every body, to take upon them to write about it. This ſhould be done by Hiſtorians, and none ſhould write Hiſtory but Men choſen and Authoriz'd by the Government. By this means the blot that Hiſtory ſhould caſt on the Name and Memory of thoſe, who deſerve the publick Infamy, would proceed from its true Channel, being derived from the Power of the Sword, wherewith the Sovereign is Arm'd for the puniſhment of the wicked. As the ſacred Hiſtory was not the work of a private Perſon, (d) but of Men Authoriz'd by GOD with a ſpecial Commiſſion to write it: So the Civil Hiſtory ſhould be Compos'd by thoſe whom the Sovereign of each State appoints for that purpoſe, and then it might be preſum'd that Hiſtory would not defame People upon falſe grounds; whereas as the World goes at preſent, it diſtributes Puniſhments and Rewards, Diſgrace and Praiſe, Condemnation and Abſolution, upon the firſt reports of Fame, Sopniſticated with a Thouſand Paſſions. And what is ſtrange is that the leaſt Hiſtorian claims the privilege that belongs only to ſome; he pretends that he is not bound to produce his Proofs and his Witneſſes. (e) Quis unquam ab hiſtorico juratores exegit?

I know there are inconveniencies on the other ſide; but there being ſome every where, the greateſt ought to be avoided, as doubtleſs are that multitude of Writers, who ſully Hiſtorical Facts with their impure Hands, not only for the preſent time but for future Ages; ſince there will ever be too many Continuators of (f) Mellificium Pezelii, Sethus Calviſius, Sleidan's Commentaries, &c. too many Writers of Abridgments, in uſum ſtudioſæ juventutis; in a Word, too many Scriblers who will fetch their Informations from thence, and perpetuate (A) the falſities that are daily

---

(a) Exod. ch. 2. v. 4.

(b) Exſequi ſententias haud inſtitui niſi inſignes per honeſtum aut notabibli dedecore: quod præcipuum munus annalium reor, ne virtutes ſileantur, utque PRAVIS DICTIS FACTISQUE EX POSTERITATE ET INFAMIA METUS SIT. Tacit. ann. l. 3. c. 65.

(c) Cicero 4. de legib. apud Auguſt. l. 2. de civit. Dei, c. 9.

(d) 2 Pet. 1. 21.

(e) Seneca de morte Claudii.

(f) If I ſpecify ſome Authors, 'tis without any affectation or deſign; but only becauſe I happen to remember Scrivener's complaints Act. in Schiſm. Angl. pag. 2. of the Biblioth. univerſ. tom 16. pag. 44. & ſeq. & paſſim alibi, and thoſe of Schoockius Fabul. Hamel. pag. 140. See alſo Wicquefort, de l' Ambaſſadeur tom. 1. pag. 173.

(A) Perpetuate the falſities that are daily divulged.] I might have ſpoken of another ſort of Writers. Such as continue Pezelius, Calviſius, the Theatrum Europæ, &c. thoſe that publiſh Synopſes rerum toto orbe geſtarum, and abſtracts of Univerſal Hiſtory, in uſum ſtudioſæ juventutis, are I confeſs the greateſt propagators of falſe News; but they are not the only ones, nor perhaps the moſt dangerous preſervers of Falſities. There are ſome Hiſtorians, who taking a contrary courſe, deceive thoſe very Perſons who pretend to be hard to be contented. I mean ſome Hiſtorians like Varillas: They love to ſay wha is not to be found in common Hiſtories: They aſpire to the Glory of having diſcovered ſecret Memoirs, the occult qualities of the firſt Miniſters, and ſecret Intrigues and Negotiations, which no body knew before. If a thing has been omitted by every body, they'l be ſure to publiſh it for that very reaſon. Nay, they go farther; they build a whole Syſtem thereupon: This ſerves them as a Key to open the Cabinets of Princes, and they pretend to unfold many Myſteries by that means. When thoſe Gentlemen find in the corner of a Library, or among the duſty old Papers of an Inventory, a Printed Piece unknown to them, they read it greedily, for which they are to be praiſed. But if they find in it any ſingular rare and ſuprizing matter of Fact, they immediately take it up, and make it the Baſis of the conjectures they deſign to vent as matters of Fact, or Hiſtorical Illuſtrations. This is no laudable thing: 'Tis commonly the way to Illuſion. If any of theſe Men ſhould find an Hundred Years hence, a Copy of the Paſtoral Letter, which was immediately ſuppreſs'd by its Author, he would make his advantage of it. He would boaſt of having diſcover'd things unknown to all other daily divulged. What is ſaid of the firſt Impreſſions in general, that they are of long continuance, is moſt true in particular of the firſt alterations of Events, from their Origine, by the diſguiſed relations that are made of 'em in haſte, and diſperſed with all the expedition imaginable. This is an Original Sin, the propagation whereof cannot be denied; too many examples prove it, herein the diſorder lies: For ſince all People reſemble thoſe of whom a Cardinal Legate ſaid, as he gave them his Benediction, ſince they have a mind to be deceiv'd, let them be deceived; and moreover ſince it cannot be doubted that a falſe report believed for three days (B) may do a great deal of good to a State, whereas a other Hiſtorians; he would reaſon at Random hereupon, and give all Europe a New Face, with reſpect to the ſecret Motives of the Princes. He would revive a falſity, which lived but a few Days in the Common News, and perpetuate it; for there will always be ſome Hiſtorians, who will relate what they ſhall read in Varillas, for Inſtance. I muſt acquaint my Reader, that the ſuppreſſion of this Paſtoral Letter, came to my knowledge only by a ſmall (b) Printed Piece of 15. Pages in 4to. Dated the 25 of Jan. 1696. I there found (c) that the Author of the Paſtoral Letters having cited, as a Proof of the favourable intentions of the Allies, a proſpect of Peace drawn up by the Diet of Ratisbonne, which had been contrived by a Speculative Politician of Amſterdam. . . . . was ſo aſhamed of his being impoſed upon by that ſpurious Piece, that he immediately Printed another Edition of his Paſtoral Letter, in which he omitted this paſſage.

> Quo (a) ſemel eſt imbuta recens ſervabit odorem
> Teſta diu,

(B) A falſe report believed for three Days may do a great deal of good, &c. (d) This Maxim is aſcrib'd to Catherine de Medicis, that a falſe piece of News believed three days may ſave a Kingdom. Hiſtories abound with the advantages of falſe News. The Heads of the League maintain'd themſelves a long time in Paris by that means. The Duke of Maienne not being able to deny, that he had loſt the Field of Battle at Ivri, made People believe that the Bearnois had been (e) kill'd, and that in other places the League was Triumphant. Theſe are the Words of an Hiſtorian: (f) Seeing their Army thus ſhatter'd, they had recourſe to their uſual Artifices, which was to impoſe upon the Pariſians with lies, which they publiſh'd in abundance of Papers, importing that at the firſt Aſſault given at Dreux, the Inhabitants had kill'd above Five Hundred of the King's Troops, and wounded a greater number, and that the Mareſchal de Biron had been Mortally wounded. That in an Encounter near Poiſſi the League had obtain'd a great Victory. That in the Battle the fight was long, and the loſs almoſt equal, and that if the Bearnois was not dead, he was as good as dead, Peter Matthieu relates that the Count de Charolois, wanting to have his Troops encourag'd by the hopes of a ſpeedy Succour, (g) Suborn'd a Cordelier who pretended to come from Bretagne, and ſaid that he had left the Army ſo near, that it would be ſeen the ſame Day . . . . This Artifice increas'd if not the courage, at leaſt the patience of the moſt diſheartned, and that Lie proved uſeful for the little time it was believed. The great deſire of ſeeing the Troops of Bretagne, made it believed without any conſideration. Theſe laſt Words are not needleſs, for they ſhew the Peoples inclinations to concur with ſuch Artifices: They eaſily believe what flatters them, and they make a ſhift to keep Life and Soul together. Peter Matthieu's Marginal Note, deſerves to be Tranſcribed. (h) When an Army or a Town, ſays he, is in expectation of relief, they muſt always be told that it is coming, and tho' there be News to the contrary, 'tis the General's prudence to keep up the former notion. Syphax ſends word to Scipio that he can't aſſiſt him, and that on the contrary he is for Carthage. Scipio treats and careſſes his Ambaſſadors, and gives them preſents, in order to make his Souldiers believe that Syphax was coming, and that the Ambaſſadors return'd to haſten his departure. 'Tis with reſpect to theſe Stratagems, that it may eſpecially be ſaid, nil ſub ſole novum, There's nothing new under the Sun. The Moderns in this point are but the imitators of the Ancients (i). Sincerity was never pretended to in the freſh relations of Publick Miſfortunes, and it would be moſt times prejudicial to pretend to it. Livy juſtly cenſures the Roman Conſul, who after the fatal Battle of Cannæ acknowledged to the Deputies of the Allies all the loſs he had ſuſtain'd. (k) Auxit rerum ſuarum ſuique contemptum Conſul nimis detegendo cladem nudandoque. (l) The effect of this plain dealing was, that the Allies concluded from it that Rome would never be able to raiſe its Head again, and therefore that they ought to join with Annibal. We learn from Plutarch (m) that an Athenian was cruelly tortur'd, for telling an ill piece of News, that was however moſt true. Having heard of Nicias's defeat from a Stranger, who was come a Shore at the Port of Pyræeus, he went in all haſte to acquaint the Magiſtrates with that great Misfortune. They ask'd him how he came by it, and becauſe he could not produce his Author, he was puniſh'd (n) as a cheat and a diſturber of the Publick Peace: Nor was he deliver'd from the rack, till the truth of his News was known. If he had made a falſe report of a Victory, he would not have ſuffer'd for it: Stratocles Action makes me think ſo. He perſuaded the Athenians to Offer a Sacriſice to the Gods for the defeat of their Enemies, and yet he knew that the Athenian Fleet had been beaten. The News of the diſaſter was at laſt Publiſh'd. They were heartily vex'd with the Impoſtor; but his Anſwer ſatisfied them, and there was an end of it: What injury have I done you? ſaid, he: I have made you live three Days happily. (o) [illegible] Nullo vero pacto arbitror Spartanos toleraturos fuiſſe Stratoclis ſcurrilem inſultationem, qui ſuis ut ob lætum partæ victoriæ nuncium acceptum ſacrificarent perſuaſit: cumque ii de accepta clade vero allato nuncio ſuccenſerent, populum interrogavit ecquid injuriæ paſſi eſſent, qui ipſius opera triduum ſuavius vixiſſent. It was a kind of advantage over the Enemy, will ſome ſay; the Athenians gain'd two or three Days rejoycing by it. They put off the uneaſineſs that the ill News was to give them. But in reality 'tis but a ſmall advantage; 'tis a ſad thing to be brought off, from a falſe perſuaſion that has rais'd a great joy; the weight of adverſity ſits more heavily afterwards. Beſides, Publick Rejoycings for an Imaginary Victory, expoſe a whole Nation to contempt, and make the Enemy very merry. If Stratocles had been treated as he deſerved, he had been ſeverely puniſh'd. For a private Perſon to uſe Cicero's method is a thing of no great conſequence: Nay, in ſuch particular Conjunctures true prudence will not ſuffer us to believe any thing too lightly. (p) Ciccero . . . . . cum Vatinii morte nunciata cujus parum certus videbatur autor, interim, inquit, uſura fruar. 'Tis not certain that my Enemy is dead, and perhaps in a few days I ſhall hear, he is alive and well; but in the mean time I will take advantage of the current report I will believe it; 'tis an advantage to me. This is what Cicero ſaid; whether it was only a Jeſt, or an ingenuous Declaration of his Thoughts, it matters not. But ſhould a State uſe this method, and take ſome Meaſures upon the falſe News of the defeat of the Enemy, it would ſometimes run the risk of great Miſfortunes. An Hiſtorian relates that there being a report that Scipio Africanus, and his Brother, were taken Priſoners, and that Antiochus had defeated the Roman Army they commanded, the Ætolians immediately ſhook off the Yoke of the Romans. This muſt needs have been a pernicious ſtep. I will relate Livy's Words, which have ſome things ſingular in them. We there find a Remarkable Inſtance of the frauds of Fame: It appears from them that the very Deputies of the Ætolians in the Army of the two Scipio's had ſpread that falſe report, and that but one Hiſtorian has mention'd it. (q) Valerius Antias author eſt, rumorem celebrem Romæ fuiſſe, & penè pro certo habitum, recipienai

(a) Hor. epiſt. 2. lib. 1.

(b) It is intituled Parallele de trois Lettres Paſtorales de Mr. Jurieu, touchant l'accompliſſement des Propheties.

(c) Pag. 14. he quotes the Paſtoral Letter of January 1695.

(d) d'Aubigné Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, Book 2. ch. 1. p. m. 413. 414.

(e) D'Aubigné hiſtoire Univerſ. tom. 3. Book 3. ch. 6. pag. 322.

(f) Hiſtoire des choſes memorables avenuës en France depuis l'an 1547. juſques au commencement de l'an 1597. pag. 720.

(g) Pierre Matthieu, hiſt. de Louis XI. l. 3. pag. m. 144.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) See Ageſilaus.

(k) Titus Livius lib. 23. pag. m. 395. He relates the whole diſcourſe of the Conſul to the Deputies of Campania.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Plut. in Nicia ſub finem pag. m. 542.

(n) [illegible] Pro mendace & civitatis turbatore in rotam deligatus & diu tortus eſt, donec advenerunt qui totam cladem ordine annuntiarunt. Id. ibid.

(o) Plut. de Repub. gerenda p. 799. F. He mentions it alſo in the Life of Demetrius pag. 893. 894. and makes him ſay, [illegible] Quid tandem injuriæ accepiſtis ſi duos dies tranſegiſtis per lætitiam? This loſt battle is that of Amorgus.

(p) Quintil. Inſt. Orat. lib. 6. cap. 3. p. m. 294.

(q) Tit. Liv. lib. 37. pag. m. 708.

a true piece of News, believed as long, may occaſion the ruin of it; it can't be thought ſtrange that the firſt relations ſhould be ſo falſified: Politicks, which ſome body has defin'd di Scipionis adoleſcentis cauſa Cn. L. Scipionem & cum eo P. Africanum in colloquium evocatos regis, & ipſos comprehenſos eſſe, & ducibus captis confeſtim ad caſtra Romana exercitum ductum, eaque expugnata, & deletas omnes copias Romanorum eſſe: ob hoc Ætolos ſuſtuliſſe animos, & abnuiſſe imperata facere, principeſque eorum in Macedoniam & in Dardanos & in Thraciam ad conducenda mercede auxilia profectos: hæc qui nuntiarent Romam, A. Terentium Varronem, & M. Claudium Lepidum ab A. Cornelio proprætore ex Ætolia miſſos eſſe. Subtexit deinde fabulæ huic, legatos Ætolos in ſenatu inter cætera hoc quoque interrogatos eſſe: unde audiſſent imperatores Romanos in Aſia captos ab Antiocho rege, & exercitum deletum eſſe? Ætolos reſpondiſſe, ab ſuis legatis ſe, qui cum conſule fuerint, certiores factos. Rumoris hujus quia neminem alium authorem habeo, neque affirmata res mea opinione ſit, nec pro vana prætermiſſa.

Don't think that Catherine de Medicis meant that a falſe News believed three Days can ſave a State, upon all occaſions. Such Maxims as theſe are not without exceptions. A falſe perſuaſion is ſometimes advantageous and ſometimes pernicious: And the ſame may be ſaid of a true one. But here is a thing more generally true, viz. That it is of uſe to conceal from the People part of the loſs in Battles and other great misfortunes. This deception is not what we call Myſteries of State, arcana imperii, but the common ſteps of Political prudence. No body ought therefore to find fault with a relation, that does not give a true account of a new event. The publick good requires the uſe of Rhetorical Figures in order to extenuate one's loſs and the Enemies advantages. But it were perhaps to be wiſh'd that theſe relations ſhould not be written, or at leaſt that they ſhould not be Printed; for the Impreſſion perpetuates them, and makes them ſerve as a Foundation for Hiſtorians. This brings a great uncertainty upon Hiſtory, and robs Future Ages of the Knowledge of the Truth; which is a great Counterpoize, as ſome think, to the profit and pleaſure that the reading of thoſe daily Prints occaſions in the World. The moſt moroſe muſt acknowledge that this reading affords many uſeful and agreeable inſtructions, and even that it may be inſtructive to ſome Polite writers. But in ſhort, will ſome ſay, there is no ſincerity in thoſe relations: They are rather Pleas than Hiſtories. Now, what's, a Plea? A Diſcourſe, in which a Man ſtudies to ſhew the fair ſide of his own Cauſe, and the foul one of his Adverſary. If they, who ſpeak thus, could find out a good expedient to avoid what they condemn, they would have the beſt invention of all Men. After all, the underſtanding Readers are not deceiv'd by ſuch relations: They eaſily diſtinguiſh ſuch as come neareſt to ſincerity; but 'tis not poſſible to publiſh in thoſe writings all that one knows; ſomething muſt be Sacrific'd to the Publick, and ſometimes to the Domeſtick intereſt. Beſides; Stratagems (a) being allowed in War, the Artifices of News writers muſt be excus'd; for the pains they take to thwart the relations of the Enemy are a kind of War; and therefore their writings have been called arma Anſerina by a Political Author. (b) Hoc ſaltem indictum non abeat, quod auſu temerario quodam, Relationes ordinarias ſeu Novellas, uti vocantur, Armis Anſerinis meis non adjunxerim: unum, ut probe ſciam, tales ſæpe non in Sibyllarum foliis, ſed hominum cerebris naſci, creduloſque facile incertæ famæ auram captare: interim tamen etiam temporis filia comprobat, atque hactenus comprobavit, harumce ſparſiones non ſemper Oreſtis ſomnia & vanitates eſſe atque fuiſſe. Sparguntur (1) enim Victoriæ, deprimiturque pars adverſa. Sic conſtat, quod Literis à Pompeio per omnes provincias civitateſque dimiſſis de prælio ad Dyrrachium facto elatius inflatiuſque multo, quam res erat geſta, fama percrebuerit, pulſum fugere Cæſarem, pene omnibus copiis amiſſis; (2) qua fama ſane Pompeianos multis partibus auxerat. Finguntur clades ad vulgum (quia mundus, ut dicitur vult decipi) dementandum, ut iſte faveat huic vel illi parti, &c. Ita poſt cladem Ivrenſem &c. The Author adds here what I have ſaid of the Duke of Maienne.

Note, That People are ſo us'd to the Gazettes, that they would look upon the ſuppreſſion of 'em as an Eclypſe. It would occaſion a kind of publick mourning. The Republick of Learning would loſe many Pieces by it, which are the very Kernel and Cream of the Gazettes, and contain ſome Rules for a profitable reading of 'em. Obſerve the following paſſage. (c) Cum vero omnes novi quid ſciendi mira flagremus cupiditate, certaque juxta ac incerta avidiſſime arripientes, quiſque pro voto interpretamur, itaque NOVELLAS undique conquirimus, ut rerum geſtarum, imo & gerandarum (tanta enim ſcribentium vel credentium vanitas eſt) cognitione ſitientem animum expleamus. Hinc anxia curioſitate legimus aut rimamur, quid Novellæ apportent Noſtrates, Jenenſes, Lipſienſes, Norinbergenſes, Hamburgenſes, imo & Pariſinæ, Hafnienſes, Amſtelodamenſes, Bruxellenſes, aut aliæ, neſcio unde accerſita: Ut autem varia ſint illorum, qui eas legunt vel mirantur, ingenia, ita fieri haud poteſt, quin majorem ex illis fructum alius, alius minorem accipiat, quò igitur cum Voluptate, quam novitas ſuâ ſponte conciliat, Utilitas etiam jungatur, ideo inſigni cum commodo adhiberi poterit Nobiliſſimi & Conſultiſſimi Dn. AHASUERI FRITSCHII Diſcurſus, De Novellarum, quas vocant Neue Zeitungen hodierno uſu & abuſu. Imp. Jenæ 1676. 4. Itemque elegantiſſime docti CHRISTIANI WEISII in illuſtri ad Salam Auguſtæo Polit. Prof. Schediaſma curioſum, de Lectione Novellarum, quantum ſcil. illæ uſum habeant in Geographicis, Hiſtoricis & Politicis, imò quovis curioſorum genere. Cui etiam addidit Specimen, quaſi Nucleum Novellarum, ſcil. ab Anno 1660. ad ann. uſque 1676. Weiſſenfelſæ anno eod. exc.

I have read ſomewhere in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, that it were to be wiſh'd that ſome body was engag'd to obſerve at the end of every Year, all the falſe reports that would have been ſpread. This would not be neceſſary with reſpect to all of 'em; there are ſome that the Gazettes themſelves take notice that: ſuch an employment would have been more neceſſary when daily News were not Printed. If it had been eſtabliſh'd at Rome when the Turks took Rhodes, we ſhould know abundance of falſities that were then vented in Italy. Some of them may be ſeen in the Letters which Ruſcelli has Collected: We know by thoſe Letters that the 10th. of December 1522. the Noveliſts of Rome, (d) gave out that the Siege of Rhodes was rais'd. The 28. of Feb. 1523. they gave out that it was not certain that Soliman (e) had taken the Town; and yet it had capitulated the 22. of December 1522. But who will wonder at this News, when he knows that it was given out at Padua as a certainty, and even from Rome, that the Pope had been kill'd with a Thunder-bolt on St. Peter's Day, and that all the Citizens had taken up Arms. 'Tis only by chance that we know that ſuch a thing was reported. 'Tis mention'd in a Letter of Matthew Boſſus; without which probably we ſhould have known nothing of it. (f) Hac ſub hora Auguſtinæ ad te dum ſcribo, ecce rumor aures implet civitatis, ſolemni Petri Apoſtoli die, paulo poſt vigeſimam horam, Alexandrum Romanæ Eccleſiæ magnum Pontificem ictu fulminis interiiſſe, & de perjucundis ſuis Pilcatis unum tactum, pariter ſuum dominum parentaſſe, populares in armis eſſe, vias urbis obliquas parum tutas, Curiales quati timoribus, Hiſpanos infeſtos & hoſtes haberi. The Kings of Spain and France, and the Duke of Alba were reported all at once to be dead in Holland in 1580. This falſity was preſerved by chance in a Letter of Juſtus Lipſius (g). A compilation of ſuch things would be uſeful.

MR. DE Vigneul Marvill has made good obſervations on the Gazette. Here is one of his reflections. " (h) There is but one thing prejudicial to the writer of it, which is, that he is not abſolute Maſter of his Work, and being ſubject to Superior Orders, he cannot ſpeak the truth with that ſincerity which Hiſtory requires. If this point was granted him we ſhould have no need of other Hiſtorians." The latter part of this paſſage is ſomewhat Hyperbolical; but it is certain that Author mentions the main cauſe of the miſchief: The Weekly News writers, or be it any other Period longer or ſhorter, dare not ſpeak all they know. It would coſt them too dear; for not to mention the puniſhment they might fear from their Superiors, their News would not ſell well, and they would make themſelves defin'd (C) ars non tam regendi quam fallendi hominem, will have it ſo. But Men ought to be cur'd of their error, which they never can be with a good grace: and if ſome are, this does little Service, ſo many Pens having already canoniz'd the firſt reports, that People would at leaſt be divided in their opinions about them.

(a) Dolus an virtus quis in hoſte requirat? Virgil. Æn. l. 2. v. 390.

(b) Arma Anſerina ſive armatura epiſtolaris à Doctore militari Tacito ſubminiſtrata, & in diſſertatione Politica diducta à G. C. W. pag. 19.

(1) James Hurault des Offices d'Etat, fol. 110.

(2) J. Cæſ. de Bello Civil. lib. 3. p. m. 284.

(c) M.
Hertgen,
Bibliot
German
ca, ſitia forum
rum Ge
manica
parte 5.
ſub fin.

(d) 'Tis thought that the ſuccours w preſent
liſ.
Siege
raiſed,
the repor
gers.
me Sig Letter
Mark A tony Sic li writt
from R
the 1.
Decemb
1522.
86. of t
Epiſtles
of the Princes Collecte
by Ruſc
and tra lated by Belleforeſt

(e) See the ſame Letter fol. 85.
It ſhew large People
ceive the ſelves in things which th
deſire.

(f) Ma thæus B
ſus par
3. ep. 8.

(g) M
Regis H
paniæ,
Galliæ &
Ducis A bani nu ciata no
bis ſub dem te
pus. Ve fama ſit in uno ſaltem triade i Lipſius
piſt. 4.
Theodor
Lemm
pag. 9
dit. Lu
Bat. 16
It is da
the 1.
Decemb
1580.

(h) Vigneul
Marvil
Mélan d'hiſt.
tom. 2.
198. Du
Edit.

'Tis not enough to compare theſe baſe Writers to (a) Harpies that defile whatever they touch; it may be ſaid they are Executioners that diſtort the Neck, Legs and Arms of Hiſtorical Facts, and even ſometimes cut them off, and apply prepoſterous ones in their room; and this even at the very moment that an event ſprings out of the boſom of its Cauſes, and the exploits of a Battle are juſt born:

(b) Modo primos incipientes
Edere vagitus, & adhuc a matre rubentes.

'Twas formerly ſaid of the Muſes that they were the Proſtitutes even of Slaves; which may eſpecially be affirm'd of her that preſides (c) over Hiſtory: She's a true ſcortum triobolare, that plies upon the High-ways, and ſells her ſelf to the firſt comer for a morſel of Bread. Her bargain with the Book-ſellers is much beneath that of Baudoin and du Ryer, whoſe ſtated price was (d) to tranſlate for thirty Pence, or a Crown a Sheet, and to write Verſes for four Livres a Hundred, when they were great ones, and for 40 when they were Small.

Ah! (e) pudor extinctus, doctæque infamia turbæ
Sub titulo proſtant, & queis genus ab Jove ſummo
Res hominum ſupra evectæ & nullius egentes,
Aſſe merent vili, ac ſancto ſe corpore fœdant.
Scilicet aut Menæ faciles parere ſuperbo,
Aut nutu Polycleti, & parca laude beatæ.
Uſque adeo maculas ardent in fronte recentes,
Heſternique Getæ vincla, & veſtigia flagri.

Lucian has unwittingly drawn the Picture of our Age, ſpeaking of a War, which had produced ſuch a multitude of Hiſtorians, that one would have thought it was a faſhionable Trade. He compares it to the (f) epidemical diſtemper of the Abderitæ. We have ſeen, continues he, the truth of the Proverb, that War is the Mother of all things. (g) Ἀφ' οὗ δὴ τὰ ἐν ποσὶ ταῦτα κεκίνηται, ὁ πόλεμος ὁ πρὸς τοὺς βαρβάρους, καὶ τὸ ἐν Ἀρμενίᾳ τραῦμα, καὶ αἱ συνεχεῖς νῖκαι, οὐδεὶς ὅστις οὐχ ἱστορίαν συγγράφει. μᾶλλον δὲ Θουκυδίδαι, καὶ Ἡρόδοτοι, καὶ Ξενοφῶντες ἡμῖν ἅπαντες. καὶ ὡς ἔοικεν, ἀληθὲς ἄρ' ἦν ἐκεῖνο, τὸ, Πόλεμος ἁπάντων πατὴρ, εἴ γε καὶ συγγραφέας τοσούτους ἀνέφυσεν, ὑπὸ μιᾷ τῇ πληγῇ. Ex quo res præſentes moveri cœperunt, puta bellum iſtud contra barbaros, & acceptum in Armenia vulnus, & continuæ illæ victoriæ, nemo non hiſtoriam conſcribit. Imò vero Thucydides, Herodoti, & Xenophontes nobis facti ſunt omnes. Et ut apparet, verum fuit illud, Bellum omnium pater eſt, quandoquidem hiſtoriarum ſcriptores tam multos una hac plaga procreavit. The Ancient Romans had infinitely more reſpect for the dignity of Hiſtory; for before Pompey's time no body pretended to write it but ſuch as were eminent for their Birth and Merit, and when this great Man's Tutor undertook to write the Hiſtory of his Diſciple's Father, and of his Diſciple, ſome ſort of inconveniency was found in that Novelty, as Suetonius inſinuates. Yet this Innovator had Senſe and Learning, and had taught Rhetorick, but he was a Man of no Birth. He had been made free. That was the grievance. (h) Lucius Octacilius Pilitus ſerviſſe dicitur; atque etiam oſtiarius, veteri more, in catena fuiſſe: donec ob ingenium ac ſtudium literarum manumiſſus, accuſanti patrono ſubſcripſit. Deinde Rhetoricam profeſſus, Cnæum Pompejum Magnum docuit; patris ejus res geſtas, nec minus ipſius, compluribus libris expoſuit: primus omnium libertinorum, ut Cornelius Nepos opinatur, ſcribere hiſtoriam orſus, non niſi ab honeſtiſſimo quoque ſcribi ſolitam.

What

themſelves odious as ill affected Perſons, and in a manner Enemies to the Publick Good. No body will have them to lie groſly and dully for the ſake of their Country; but when they do it ingeniouſly and with conjectures and reflections equally witty, flattering and malicious, they are prais'd, admir'd and lov'd, and every body reads their Works. So that 'tis not for nothing that they follow the example of that Ancient Comick Poet, who only deſign'd to pleaſe the People.

Poëta (i) cum primum animum ad ſcribendum appulit,
Id ſibi negoti credidit ſolum dari,
Populo ut placerent quas feciſſet fabulas.

(C) Politicks which ſome body has defin'd Artem non tam regendi, quam fallendi hominem.] Dr. Patin mentions this definition after having a little ridiculed the Jubilees. (k) Thus you ſee new factions in Rome, that will give us a new Pope, and then pro jucundo adventu ad Papatum, a new Jubilee. The new Wine of this preſent Year, which is a liquor drawn from the Vine, will produce more ſenſible effects in Mens Heads than this new devotion, which in its kind, returns but too often, ab aſſuetis non afficimur: But the World is ſo made, populus vult decipi. The late John Camus Biſhop of Belley, a Learned worthy Prelate, if ever there was any, ſaid, that Politica ars eſt non tam regendi quàm fallendi homines: I heard him ſay this once in his Chamber in 1632. and I have often remembred it ſince. This Letter of Patin is dated the 13 of December 1669. He had not related the Biſhop's words in that manner in a Letter of the 8. of May 1665. Here is the whole paſſage: (l) Six writers, who got their livelihood by writing News have been put in the Baſtille, within theſe three days, hominum genus audaciſſimum, mendaciſſimum, avidiſſimum ut faciant rem, &c. They fill their News with things they ought not to write. They have Printed here and cried about the Streets, the Bull of our Holy Father the Pope againſt the Janſeniſts, and three days after it was forbidden, and even, ne quid deeſſet ad rationem veræ fabulæ, a report was Publiſh'd and ſpread that the Commiſſary was ordered to Impriſon the Printer, if he had been found. The late Biſhop of Belley, who was an incomparable Man, told me in 1632. Politica eſt ars tam regendi quam fallendi homines, and this is no new invention, it is the ſame Play acted over. the ſame Comedy, and Farce; but the Actors are New: The worſt of it is that this Play will laſt a long time, and Mankind ſuffer too much by it. There's a manifeſt difference betwixt the 1. and 2. Definition of Politicks: the ſecond is more honeſt than the firſt; but neither of them turns to the diſhonour of the Maſters of that Art, ſince their aim in what they do is the Publick Good, which they can't arrive to without imitating Phyſicians with reſpect to their Patients. If you would know Patin's Judgment about the Gazette, read this (m). They do nothing here that's good for any thing except the Gazette every Saturday, which is a very diverting and comfortable

(f) Τὸ Ἀβδηριτικὸν ἐκεῖνο πάθος καὶ νῦν τοὺς πολλοὺς τῶν πεπαιδευμένων περιελήλυθεν. Abderiticum illud malum etiam hoc tempore pleroſque doctorum invaſit. Lucian. quomodo ſit conſcribenda hiſtoria pag. m. 658. tom. 1.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Sueton. de clar. Rhetor. cap. 3.

(l) Idem, letter 356. pag. 61. of the ſame Volume.

(m) Id. letter 40. pag. 173. 174. of the 1. tome. It is dated from Paris the 7. of June 1650.

table

IX. The abuſe juſt now mention'd favours Scepticiſm in point of Hiſtory.

What would become of the Enemies of Hiſtorical Scepticiſm, if this miſchief had prevail'd in the time of Ancient Greece and Old Rome? They are to be congratulated becauſe Printing is ſo modern an invention, and they may juſtly exclaim (a) bona Hercule publica iſta licentia poſt caſum imperii Romani inventa eſt. For if the Ancient Greeks, Romans, Perſians, Carthaginians, &c. had done what is now practiſed, they would have much ado to prove any thing to us, even with the help of Inſcriptions and Medals, which the Moderns boldly make uſe of to ſatisfy their caprices, without building upon any real Fact.

X. Modern Satyrs againſt ſome Gallantries. Holland complained of without reaſon.

Before I go further I muſt obſerve that there have been ſuch Men as Caſſius Severus at all times. We have ſeen in our Days a Man of Quality, who not content to write ſome Relations diſadvantageous to ſome Court Ladies, did not ſpare, (D) as it is ſaid, the Royal Family, and even the Head of it: Which ſhews that one may truly ſay of Satyrs, what Malherbe ſaid of Death, That the Guard that waits at the barriers of the Louvre does not ſecure Kings from it:

Que la Garde qui veille aux barrieres du Louvre
N'en defend pas les Rois.

This Lord has been wiſer and happier than the Satyriſt of Auguſtus's Court. The latter not amending in his exile, ſo worſted his condition that at laſt he had ſcarce wherewithal to cover his Nakedneſs; but he whom I ſpeak of, came off cheap, table thing, for as much as this Pratler never tells us bad News, tho' we perceive a great deal at this ſeaſon. Remember what Petronius ſays, Mundus univerſus exercet hiſtrioniam, and theſe Verſes of Politian againſt ſuch as condemn'd the Plays that were Acted in Colleges.

(a) This is a Parody of Seneca Præfat. l. 5. controv.

---

Sed (b) qui nos damnant, hiſtriones ſunt maximi.
Nam Curios ſimulant, vivunt bacchanalia.
Hi ſunt præcipue quidam clamoſi, leves,
Cucullati, lignipedes, cincti funibus:
Superciliosum, incurvicervicum pecus,
Quique ab aliis habitu & cultu diſſentiunt,
Triſteſque vultu vendunt ſanctimonias:
Cenſuram ſibi quandam, & tyrannidem occupant:
Pavidamque plebem territant minaciis.

(b) Politianus in Prologo in Plauti Menaechmos, ad calcem epiſt. 15. lib. 7. fol. m. 165. verſo.

Take notice that the Definition, which the Biſhop of Bellay gave of Politicks, would ſignify a very great fault, if it denoted the mutual deceits of Sovereigns. They are not ſo rare as they ſhould be. I have read within theſe three Days a Thought that is very ſprightly: 'Tis this, * The Politicians have a Language peculiar to themſelves: Words and Phraſes with them don't ſignify the ſame thing with other Men. I don't know whether the Gentlemen of the French Academy have comprehended Politicks in the number of the Arts and Sciences of which they have given us a Dictionary. This in my opinion, would be neceſſary. For example, in Terms of Politicks, to Swear upon the Holy Goſpels to obſerve ſuch or ſuch a treaty, ſignifies ſometimes barely that one Swears it, but not that one will obſerve it; Nay, it ſometimes ſignifies, that nothing ſhall be perform'd. Moſt People don't underſtand this Language; but the Politicians underſtand it well, and take their meaſures accordingly. I add that if the Gentlemen of the French Academy, would give us an Univerſal Dictionary of all Arts, they would cut out for themſelves an endleſs Work. They would daily diſcover new Arts that have Terms of a particular ſignification. The Art of Weekly relations is one of them; the Art of Controverſy is another. Words don't go there in their uſual Senſe: You ſee Pople who charge one another with horrid Doctrines; they reply, and rejoyn, and ſtill reciprocally find their Adverſaries Doctrine more and more abominable (†). This complaint appears almoſt in every Page; and allarms the Readers as if there was danger, that without a ſpeedy remedy this Gangrene will ſpread its Infection upon the whole Body. Such as are not us'd to this Style conceive a thouſand ſcruples; they fear they have diſobey'd Saint Paul's Precept, (c) a Man that is an Heretick reject; for they have Converſed with the Conteſting Parties. Who would have believed, ſay they, that ſuch Doctors who have eat for a long time the Bread of the Orthodox, ſhould have nouriſh'd ſuch Monſters in their Hearts? One does not know whom to truſt to. Either of them or perhaps both muſt needs be diſguis'd Wolves rather than Shepherds. But have a little patience; ſtay till ſome expert Arbitrators initiated in that Language have reconcil'd the Parties, and you'll find thoſe Words ſignify nothing leſs than what you believed. The Accuſers on both ſides will be declar'd Orthodox: They ſhall not be cenſur'd, but only admoniſh'd to correct ſome improper expreſſions which had eſcap'd them. 'Tis ſuppos'd then that in reality their Mutual Accuſations ran only upon this, and that therefore the words Pernicious Hereſy and the like, ſignify with them only an ill choice of words. We may very well wiſh that the Gentlemen of the French Academy would not forget in a Supplement to the Dictionary of Arts, the proper ſignification of the words Impious, Heretick, deſtroyer of the foundations of the Goſpel, Favourer of the Socinians, &c. when they are to be found in the Writings of a Theological Proceſs; for otherwiſe our Mother Tongue will grow barbarous to moſt Readers.

(*) Lettres hiſtoriques, September 1696. pag. 251.

(†) A ſmall piece of Dorſcheus Profeſſor of Divinity at Straſburg, intituled Latrocinium Famæ Theologorum, affords ſome inſtances of this. To which one might add many others.

(c) Tit. chap. 3. v. 10.

(D) Did not ſpare, as 'tis ſaid, the Royal Family and even the head of it.] I add, as 'tis ſaid, becauſe though common Fame has aſcribed to the ſame Author l' Hiſtoire amoureuſe des Gaules, and les amours du Palais Royal, this Author diſown'd the latter. For 'tis of this Book we are to underſtand what he wrote to Mr. de Saint Aignan in theſe words: (d) My Enemies ſeeing me in the Baſtille, thought my Impriſonment would not permit me to defend my ſelf, and that they might ſafely accuſe me; they therefore told the King that I had written againſt him. But his Majeſty who never condemns a Man before he be heard, ſurpriz'd them ſtrangely by ſending the Lieutenant Criminal to examine me.... (e) After having ſhewn me the Hiſtory written with my own Hand, I mean the Original I have been ſpeaking of, he ask'd me whether I had written nothing againſt the King. I anſwered that I was much ſurpriz'd to have ſuch a queſtion put to me. He told me he had orders to do it: I anſwer'd that I had not, and that there was no probability that having ſerved 27. Years without having receiv'd any favour, being twelve Years Maſter de Camp, General of the Light Horſe, and expecting every day ſome recompence from his Majeſty, I ſhould be wanting in my reſpect to him: That to deſtroy this probability my own writing or unexceptionable witneſſes ſhould be produced againſt me. That if either of 'em could be produced in the leaſt thing contrary to the reſpect I ow'd to the King and all the Royal Family, I would be willing to loſe my Head: but that I alſo beſeech'd his Majeſty to appoint the ſame puniſhment for thoſe, who ſhould accuſe me without being able to convict me. (f) From that time having not ſeen the Lieutenant Criminal nor any other Judge, I have been perſuaded that ſo black and ſo ridiculous a calumny had made no impreſſion upon the King, whoſe mind is ſo clear ſighted and hard to be ſupriz'd. What he ſays, in another place of the late Dutcheſs of Orleans, is an argument that the chief Perſons of the Court did not believe him guilty of this ſecond Head of Accuſation. The Death of Madam Henrietta of England, ſays he, (g) was a new misfortune to me: She had done me many good Offices with his Majeſty, and I hoped for others from her. For beſides that ſhe had joyn'd to a great deal of Wit, ſuch a carriage as made her beloved and reſpected by every body, She was naturally generous and kind. Let us admire the untowardneſs of the publick, who ſtill perſiſt to believe that theſe two Pieces were written by the Count de Buſſy. Nothing can make 'em believe the contrary, neither the paſſages before cited, nor the difference that is to be found betwixt theſe two pieces, which is manifeſt to good Judges: For there's

(d) The Comte de Buſſy R butin, uſage de advertis pag. 27 Dutch Edit.

(e) Ibid. pag. 27

(f) Ibid. pag. 27

(g) Ibid. pag. 29

cheap, and applied himſelf (D△) to things more worthy of his fine Wit and Charming Pen.

It would be an an unjuſt thing to impute to him the bad imitations, of which he was only the Accidental Cauſe. But it muſt be confeſt this Maxim has been well verified, there's incomparably more Art and Genius in the firſt than in the ſecond; the latter hath none of Petronius's thoughts like the firſt. The Journaliſt of the Royal Society was not ignorant of thoſe imitations of Petronius. The following words are to be found in the Latin Tranſlation of his Journal, of the Month of Auguſt, 1669. (a) Non ita pridem amoroſam Byſſi Galliarum hiſtoriam cum Petronio Arbitro, ex quo illum duas ejus epiſtolas ſumpſiſſe mihi dicebatur, conferens, inter alias amoris blanditias, librum percurrens id inveni, quod mihi non parum de hoc limacum ſubjecto ſatisfecit, nimirum quod eadem animalia, ſicut & alia natura miranda, ut truffi & fungi, ſicut & procul dubio coſſi, vel magni quercuum vermes, aliæ Romanæ deliciæ, ab antiquis veneri incitandæ uſurparentur; hic enim legere licet, quo pacto miſer & debilis amator ſe præparat cochlearum cervicium munimento. I don't know why this Count inſerted in his Hiſtory a moſt biting raillery againſt Mr. Menage, who reveng'd himſelf by Six Latin Verſes, as offenſive as can be written. For the reſt I don't believe what Patin ſays, in (b) his Letter of the 28. of December, 1665. (c) Mr. de Buſſi-Rabutin, by the King's Command hath laid down his Poſt, and is removed from the Baſtille to the Houſe of the Mad-men, where he has two Chambers. Mr. de Buſſy ſays, that upon the report of the King's firſt Phyſician and firſt Surgeon, he was ſet at liberty to be cured in Paris: Which is more credible. The grief he expreſs'd for having Compoſed the Hiſtoire amoureuſe des Gaules ſerved for an encomium in the Speech of the Academiſt who Succeeded him: 'twas the Abbot Bignon. (d) He praiſed him nicely, and ſhew'd that if the work, which had occaſion'd all his misfortunes, deſerved the cenſure of all wiſe Men, the repentance which he had manifeſted for having made it, could not be ſufficiently praiſed.

(D△) And applied himſelf to things more worthy of his fine Wit and charming Pen] There was a current report that he was writing the Hiſtory of France. Afterwards it was ſaid that he confin'd himſelf to the Hiſtory of Lewis XIV. But the event has ſhewed that the firſt report was falſe, and that the ſecond was not very well grounded; for if this Count had writ in earneſt the Hiſtory of Lewis XIV. we ſhould have ſeen a better Work upon that Subject, than that which came out in 1700. of which there is an extract in the nouvelles (e) de la Republique des Lettres. This extract will not permit us to doubt that this Work of his was compos'd with the utmoſt negligence. He went about it doubtleſs when he was weary of other buſineſs, and little cared to be well informed of what he writ, or to wait till the firſt News of his Village were confirm'd. He threw his matters in haſte upon the Paper, and took no pains to correct them afterwards: We can't give a Reaſon that is leſs, than this, to his diſadvantage, for what he ſays of the paſſage of the Boyne. All Europe knows that King James quitted that Poſt, and return'd to France a few Days after, and that King William Succeſsfully paſſed that River, and afterwards made all the ſteps of a Conqueror. And yet Mr. de Buſſy affirms (f) that the Count de Lauzun, who commanded the Troops of France, won the Battle of the Boyne. Had he ſpoken thus out of flatery, and againſt his Conſcience, he would be more to Blame; 'Tis therefore explaining the thing in the leaſt rigorous Senſe, to ſay he was deceiv'd by ſome Country-reports, and that caring little for this work, he did not mind whether this paſſage was right or wrong.

It had been better to have ſaid that in his diſgrace he writ and received many Letters, and compoſed the Memoirs of his Life; for the works that were publiſh'd after his Death, ſhew that this was his chief imployment. To this muſt be added the care he took to make his own Hiſtory ſerve for an inſtruction to his Children. His tract (g) concerning the uſe of Adverſities, ſhews that this was the end he propos'd to himſelf. 'Tis a little Book full of good Morality and Religion. His Memoirs in 2 Volumes Publiſh'd in 1697. are curious and well written. His Letters Printed in 4 Volumes the ſame Year deſerve the ſame Encomium. They would have pleas'd more, if upon good conſiderations many proper Names had not been left out, and many paſſages which affected the reputation of certain Perſons. Perhaps ſometime or other there will come out an Edition of 'em without any alteration or with a Key to open it. There are many Letters which ſhew that the Count de Buſſy wean'd himſelf by degrees from the World, that he was ſenſible of the emptineſs of it, and that at laſt he was wholly intent upon his Salvation. The beſt Chriſtians in the World could not be more charm'd than he was, (h) with Mr. Abadie's excellent work concerning the truth of the Chriſtian Religion. But his Converſion was ſomewhat ſlow and gradual. He a long time look'd behind him like Lot's Wife, and tried all the means that the moſt obſtinate deſire of returning to Court could put an ambitious Man upon, who knew not how to live deprived of it. The ill ſucceſs of his Petitions was a terrible mortification to him, but did not diſcourage him from preparing others on every occaſion. This we learn from the writings which his Heirs have publiſh'd: Had they ſuppreſs'd theſe Monuments of his impatience, they had Skreen'd his Memory from the Cenſure of ſome People, who can't pardon a brave Man his want of courage when he is deprived of his imployments. 'Tis not enough, ſay they, to be courageous in a Battle, a Man muſt alſo expreſs a great firmneſs under the loſs of his Eſtate. They wiſh Count de Rabutin had imitated thoſe Heroes of Ancient Rome, who encountered a Sentence of Baniſhment with contempt and indifference; and they think it ſtrange that being diſgrac'd like Ovid, for ſome tracts of Love, he ſhould have alſo imitated that Poet's Conduct in his diſgrace: every body knows what repeated complaints Ovid ſent to Rome, in order to be recall'd. That vaſt number of Poems full of ſupplications and humble lamentations ſhew more Wit than Virtue or Courage. But have thoſe, who cenſure the Count de Buſſy, taſted of a Court Life? Do they know what habits and diſtempers are contracted in it? If they did, they would perhaps be more indulgent to him. However he at laſt ſubmitted to the Providence of God. Read what he writ the 26. of Jan. 1680. (i) "It was a long time before I could believe "it was for my good, (as my Ghoſtly Fathers "told me) that Providence laid theſe Calamities "upon me. But at laſt I have been convinc'd of "it, for theſe three Years; not only for my good "in the other World, but alſo for my repoſe in "this. GOD does already reward me in ſome "meaſure for my pains by my reſignation, and I "ſay at preſent of this good Maſter what in my "fooliſh Youth I ſaid of Love. (k)

"Il paye en un moment un ſiecle de travaux,
"Et tous les autres biens ne valent pas ſes maux."

He writ this to Madam de Sevigni, who a long time before had communicated a like thought to him. Theſe are her words: "(l) Don't you think I converſe with devout People as much as I can? 'Tis "indeed becauſe I find them more happy both in "their Life and at their Death, and I would gladly "partake of their condition. There is nothing like "Devotion for an unfortunate Perſon; it not only "ſolaces troubles, but converts them into pleaſures. This confirms what I have ſaid (m) in the Penſées ſur les Cometes and in the Remark Q of the Article Epicurus.

Note, That tho' this Count's Poſthumous works are fine and good; yet his Hiſtoire amoureuſe des Gaules will make him more talk'd of than any other Book. His deſtiny in this is like that of Boccacio. See his Article.

The falſhood above mention'd concerning the paſſage of the Boyne, calls to my Mind Father Londel's Faſti, where we find theſe words on the 11. of July 1690. The Battle of the Boyne in Ireland: Schomberg is kill'd at the Head of the Engliſh. This is a meer fraud, which can't be excus'd by the reaſon I have alleg'd to leſſen the Count de Buſſy's fault; for this work of Father du Londel was made with attention, and was doubtleſs poliſh'd and reviſed: theſe ſort of writings are only commendable for a great exactneſs. And therefore it will be no raſh Judgment to affirm that the Author

(a) Acta Philoſophica menſis Auguſti 1669. pag. 84. edit. Lipſ. 1675.

(b) 'Tis the 388.

(c) Patin tom. 3. pag. 153. He had ſaid in his 354. Letter: Mr de Buſſy Rabutin has been this day (18. of April 1665.) committed to the Baſtille, for writing a Libel at which the Powers are offended. The Prince complained of it to the King, who has cauſed him to be arreſted.

(d) Buſſy ubi ſupra pag. 281.

(e) Mercure Galant of June 1693. The Count de Buſſy died of an Apoplexy at Autun the 9 of April 1693. The Abbot Bignon Succeeded him in the French Accademy in June following.

(e) February 1700. pag. 162. &ſeq.

(f) See the Nouvelles de la Republ. des lettres ibid. pag. 168.

(g) It was Printed in 1694. and Re-printed with the Author's Memoirs in 1697.

(h) See the 2. Vol. of his Letters pag. 44. 128. 131. 135. 138. 142. Dutch Edit.

(i) Buſſi Rabutin, Letter 135. of the 3. part pag. 328. Dutch Edit.

(k) Buſſi Rabutin's. Letters 3. part, Letter 200. (dated the 14. of April 1672. pag. 361.

(l) There is no ſweetneſs in a ſinful courſe of Life, that can be compar'd to the Sweetneſs, which a devout Soul enjoys. Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes pag. 570.

(m) They are mention'd in the Nou velles la Rep lique lettre Febru. 1699 223.

verified, DΔΔ) that bad examples riſe higher and higher without ſtint. How many Hiſtories have been Publiſh'd againſt the principal Perſons of the Court of France, Bruſſels, &c. with the Names, Surnames and qualities of every one of 'em, with the moſt ſecret Circumſtances, and Diſcourſes, and an Hundred things of ſuch a nature, that it was impoſſible they ſhould come to the writers knowledge? Gabriel Naudé might upon this occaſion ſay with better grounds what he ſaid (a) of Procopius's Secret Hiſtory, of Matthew Paris's Hiſtory, of the ſcandalous Chronicle of Lewis XI. of the Memoirs of the League, &c. Here one might reaſonably cry out,

> Quod (b) genus hoc hominum, quæve hunc tam barbara morem
> Permittit patria?

But this does not concern the Republick of Holland, ſince it is not true that it permits that the moſt Illuſtrious Families ſhould be thus barbarouſly abuſed. That Republick anſwered the following words, in 1665. to the Biſhop of Munſter, who complain'd amongſt other things of ſome writings. Quidquid vero ſeu de hoc ſeu de aliis negotiis in noſtris terris typis divulgatum eſt, de iis aliud nihil dicemus niſi illud ſolum, non tantum hic, verum paſſim in aliis quoque regionibus ægre admodum frenari & inhiberi poſſe typographicas licentias quantumvis diligens fuerit cautela; noſque ipſi contra iſtiuſmodi abuſus ſevera ſæpe promulgaverimus edicta, eademque ſævis & rigidis confirmaverimus executionibus. Theſe words contain'd in a Letter of their High Mightineſs, dated the 29th. of September 1665. and Printed with Licence, may ſerve for a general anſwer to all (*D*ΔΔΔ) complaints of this nature.

It

thor pitched deſignedly upon Equivocal Words, not to own the diſadvantage of his Party, and to conceal from the Reader the true Succeſs of that Battle. He is not contented to ſuppreſs the moſt Eſſential Circumſtance, which is to ſhew whether the Victory was doubtful, or whether it declar'd entirely for this or that Nation; but he has artificially ſlipt in a true Circumſtance, which is only fit to make one conclude that King James had the Honour of that Day. Schomberg falling at the Head of the Engliſh is a Principle, from which an Hundred Thouſand Readers would draw this Conſequence, Therefore King William was repuls'd. Nothing can excuſe this Author: Inſincerity, ſhame or the fear of diſpleaſing made him ſpeak as he did. Notwithſtanding this fault and ſome others (c) of the ſame nature his Book is good, curious, uſeful, and convenient, and of a fine invention. The like will be compoſed in (d) other Countries, but of whatever Sect or Nation a Man be, he ſhould get his Book read by ſome indifferent Perſon well Vers'd in the Art of qualifying things; for prejudices do not ſuffer things to be exactly defin'd. A meer Fight is call'd a Battle: The loſs of a Battle is term'd a Repulſe: A Battle is Styled an Encounter. The worſt is, that ſome call a Defeat what others call a Victory. (e) The Definitions of theſe things are no leſs different among Hiſtorians, than thoſe of Doctrines amongſt Controverſiſts: And as that which is Orthodox in one Religion is Heretical in another; that, which is a Battle won in the Hiſtorians of one Nation, is a Battle loſt in thoſe of another. 'Tis a very Ancient abuſe, for which we ſee no Remedy.

(*D*ΔΔ) Bad examples riſe higher and higher without ſtint.] Velleius Paterculus well expreſſes this Maxim, having related that Tiberius Gracchus was Maſſacred without any Trial. This was, ſays he, (f) the beginning of the Butchering of the Citizens in Rome it ſelf; from this Fountain ſprung the impunity of Maſſacres. Quod haud mirum eſt, adds he (g), non enim ibi conſiſtunt exempla, unde cœperunt; ſed quamlibet in tenuem recepta tramitem, latiſſime evagandi ſibi viam faciunt: &, ubi ſemel recto deerratum eſt, in præceps pervenitur: nec quiſquam ſibi putat turpe, quod alii fuit fructuoſum. "And no wonder; for "bad examples ſtop not where they begin: "but tho' the path through which they get in be "never ſo narrow, as ſoon as they are admitted "they make a new way, and extend themſelves on "all ſides without any bounds. Thus when a "Man once quits the right Road, he commonly "arrives to the brink of a Precipice: and nobody thinks that can be a diſgrace to him which "proves advantageous to another." The ſame Maxim may be ſeen in an Oration of Julius Cæſar related by Salluſt. He there ſhews that all (h) bad examples ariſe from a good beginning, becauſe the innovations, which at firſt are good and uſeful, quickly give occaſion to diſorders, that continually increaſe. To this may be applied the thought of Juvenal: (i) that Man never keeps within the bounds of permiſſion.

(*D*ΔΔΔ) May ſerve as a general Anſwer to all Complaints of this Nature.] And yet there are very few French Roman Catholicks, but ſay that the States are not diſpleaſed with the Liberty which the Book-ſellers take to Publiſh all ſorts of Satyrs againſt thoſe who are not in the Intereſt of their Country, ſome on long and narrow ſlips of Paper, and ſome in many Pages, all full of heinous Lies, eſpecially during the laſt War. The States were very glad, ſay they, to foment Animoſities and to keep up the hopes of the People, that they might more patiently bear the Charges of the War, and grow more in Love with their Country by their hatred of another. The Athenians uſed the ſame Policy, and if we had all that they ſaid and Publiſh'd againſt the Perſians and Macedonians, we ſhould find that the Magiſtrates gave their helping Hand to it, in order to Inſpire more Zeal for the preſervation of a Government, which beſides the Publick Shows and many other ſuch things agreeable to the multitude, afforded them the pleaſure of Compoſing and reading a vaſt number of Libels againſt the Enemy. Beſides it was a good way of purging the Satyriſts, by giving vent to the peccant Humours which might have occaſion'd defluxions on the Internal Parts; for if they had been reſtrain'd with reſpect to Strangers, they would have Vomited up their Gall on their own Maſters. This is what the French ſay, without forgetting that their Nation had been kept pure and clean from this licentiouſneſs, and that it is one of their nobleſt Triumphs. But they are told that all thoſe Political Myſteries which they ſpeak of are meer notions, and that the Conſtitution of a Free State ought to be minded, wherein 'tis an eſſential thing that every Member ſhould be ſecur'd from that rigorous proſecution, practiſed in Monarchies. However it be, I'll quote an Author who makes theſe Complaints: (k) They "have Printed in Holland within theſe few Years, "a great many Libels againſt France; there are Satyrical Hiſtories againſt the moſt Illuſtrious Perſons of the Court. It were to be wiſh'd that ſome "of our Authors would undeceive the Publick on "that Head, and ſhew that thoſe ſorts of Hiſtories are ſuppoſititious. The Authors of them "are poor miſerable wretches, who do it to get "ſome Money from a greedy Printer, and they "write down all that comes into their Head. How "could ſuch People know all the ſecrets and particulars which they relate? How came they by "the Letters which they have the impudence to "Print as true? Thoſe who beſt know the Court, "and have been there ſeveral Years, could ſcarce "tell ſo many particularities. Is it likely that a "poor Scribler lodged in a Garret, who knows nobody but a Book-ſeller greedy of Money, ſhould "be ſo well acquainted with all thoſe Adventures, if they were true? The late Mr. Mezeray, "whoſe Hiſtory of France is deſervedly ſo much "eſteemed, could not endure theſe ſorts of Hiſtories and Novels; he would have all to be true or "falſe (l): A mixture of both appear'd monſtrous "to him, and even of a dangerous conſequence "to poſterity; and indeed who knows but that "2 or 300 Years hence thoſe who ſhall write

"the

(a) Alii denique ſimiles libelli qui-ſtatim in vulgus effundunt, quid Rex in aurem Reginæ dixerit, quid Juno fabulata ſit cum Jove. Hi autem omnes quoniam facta plerumque atque infecta canunt, nunciique tam ficti quam veri tenaces exiſtunt &c. Gabriel Naudæus, Bibliogr. polit. pag. m. 70. See concerning the words Printed in Italick Plautus in Trinummo act 1. ſc. 2. v. 170. pag. m. 735.

(b) Virgil. Æn. l. 1. v. 539.

(c) As for inſtance when he ſays upon the 11. of Auguſt 1675. The rout of Conſarbruck, without ſaying who thoſe were that were routed.

(d) It has already been done in Brandenburg.

(e) Compare with this the Nouvelles de la Republ. des lettres 1686. pag. 277. 309. & ſeq. 354. 645. 560.

(f) Vell. Patercul. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(g) Id ib.

(h) Omnia mala exempla ex bonis initiis orta ſunt. Saluſt. in bello Catilin. p. m. 146.

(i) Nemo ſatis credit tantum delinquere, quantum Permittas: adeo indulgent ſibi latius ipſi. Juven ſat. 14. v. 233.

(k) Diverſitez Curieuſes 10. part p. 173 and 174 Dutch Edition 1690

(l) Compare this with the Remark C. of the Article Nidhard

XI. A CONFESSION of the Count de Bussy. The Secret History of Pope Alexander VI.

It will not be amiſs to inſert here the Publick Confeſſion of the Count de Buſſy Rabutin. " (a) Five Years ago being in the Country, and not knowing how to divert " my ſelf I verified the Proverb, that Idleneſs is the Mother of all Vices: For I went " about a Hiſtory, or rather a Satyrical Romance, without any deſign to make an ill " uſe of it; but only to keep my ſelf buſy, and at moſt to ſhew it to ſome Friends, " in order to divert them, and to be praiſed by them as a good writer. . . . . . (b) " Becauſe true events are never extraordinary enough to be very entertaining, I had " recourſe to invention, which I thought would be more pleaſing; and without any " Scruple of offending the Perſons concerned, becauſe I did it as it were for my ſelf, " I writ a thouſand things which I had never heard of. I made ſome happy, who " were not ſo much as heard, and others who had never thought of it; and becauſe " it had been ridiculous to chooſe two Women for the Heroines of my Romance, " who had neither Birth nor Merit, I made choice of two who wanted no good " qualities, and who ſo abounded with them, that Envy might contribute to render " credible all the ill things I could invent of them." You have here a true Picture of the conduct of Satyrical writers. Whether they write out of revenge or jealouſy; or whether they do it to improve their thoughts, and exerciſe their Pen; the main thing they aim at is the diverſion of the Readers, and to be praiſed for their Wit. Now becauſe they are afraid that meer Truth would afford but little diverſion, and that their Work would be accounted a ſad Piece, they ſeaſon their relations with a thouſand falſe Stories; they invent extraordinary adventures, and curious converſations, and apply to thoſe they ſpeak of whatever they have read that is moſt proper to give a high reliſh. If you examin the ſmarteſt and beſt written Satyrs, you'l find the Spirit of the Author, his Style and Character in all the Letters and Diſcourſes he aſcribes to Lovers. Is not this a Proof that he writes a Romance? If the Hiſtory of Donna Olympia, and an hundred other pieces of the ſame nature, were written with the ſimplicity that is to be obſerved in (c) Burchardus's Journal, they would be incomparably more credible. I don't ſay, that the Readers would be more perſuaded of the truth of 'em, but only that they would appear more credible; for I know that the Readers proportion their perſuaſion to the probability the writers obſerve, and to the pleaſure they afford by their Wit and by the wonderful events they relate. This is ſo true that notwithſtanding the publick confeſſion of the Count de Rabutin moſt People do ſtill believe, that his relations are truly Hiſtorical. Take notice of the words, in which he tells us that his Manuſcript was falſified by a Lady he had lent it to. " (d) She added to, or left out of " that Hiſtory what ſhe pleas'd to expoſe me to the hatred of moſt of thoſe I ſpoke of: " Which is ſo true, that the firſt Copies that were ſeen were not falſified; but as ſoon " as the others appear'd, as every body loves the ſharpeſt Satyrs, the true ones were " thought Inſipid, and ſuppreſs'd as falſe.."

The Journal I have juſt now mentioned was written by a German, Maſter of the Ceremonies at the Court of Pope Alexander VI. His Nation and the Poſt he was in aſſure us, the one that he relates things faithfully, the other that he was able to come to the truth of what he relates; ſo that there is no reaſon to doubt of thoſe Infamous Spectacles wherewith the Pope and his Daughter fed their Eyes, I mean that Collation which the Duke of Valentinois gave to Fifty Curtezans, and the Combat of four Stone-Horſes let looſe upon two Mares. Beſides, as I have already ſaid, the plain and barbarous Style of the writer does not permit to ſuſpect that he writ for the diverſion of the Reader and his own commendation. You may Judge of it by this little Specimen. (e) Dominica ultima menſis Octobris in ſero fecerunt cænam cum Duce Valentinenſi in camera ſua in palatio Apoſtolico quinquaginta meretrices honeſtæ, Cortegianæ nuncupatæ, quæ poſt cænam choreurunt

" the Hiſtory of our Times, may take theſe Satyrical Pamphlets for Original and Authentick " Memoirs writ by Contemporary Authors, who " ought to be credited? Since we cannot extirpate thoſe plaguy Writers of Hiſtory, we muſt " at leaſt acquaint with it thoſe, who ſhall come " after us, that they be not deceived".

It muſt be confeſt that there are very good things in this paſſage, and that the Author has very good reaſon to ſay that it were to be wiſh'd that care ſhould be taken to refute what can be refuted; for what will our Poſterity think, when they ſhall read ſo many things made current, without any oppoſition? How will they be able to forbear believing that they are true? Will they not ſay that if they had been falſe, they would have been confuted for the Honour of thoſe whom they blemiſh? How many People are there, whom the Satyrs of the XVI. Century keep ſtill in an Illuſion? Thoſe of our time will not be leſs Active in future Ages, and we muſt not imagine, that they will not laſt long, becauſe they don't appear in the Book-ſellers Shops in two or three Months time. They will be preſerved in the moſt Famous Libraries, in which they have been carefully Collected. I don't pretend that there is a neceſſity to confute all ſorts of Libels; that would be an endleſs work and oftentimes very needleſs. It were ſufficient to refute thoſe which have ſomething of the Character of an Hiſtory, and to give ſome General Rules for diſcerning the Truth, and ſecuring ones ſelf againſt the boldneſs of thoſe Satyrical Writers. For example, a Man of ability andwell informed, ſhould Criticiſe the Book intituled (f) Annales de la Cour & de Paris pour les annees 1697. and 1698. If he ſhould demonſtrate the falſity of Five or Six of the moſt Remarkable things, all the reſt would fall of itſelf; eſpecially if the Readers were told that they cannot reaſonably believe what is advanced by ſuch Writers, unleſs their relations be attended with certain Characters, for want of which one ought to ſuppoſe that all their Stories are only the Diſcourſes of Taverns and Coffee-houſes. Theſe places are the Magazines and Store-houſes of falſe News, and may be rightly compared to Natalis Comes his Mithology. Such a work as the refutation I ſpeak of, would ſerve as a preſervative an Hundred Years hence, and would be of great uſe to thoſewho ſhould endeavour to find out Hiſtorical Truths.

The Author whom I have quoted has forgot a neceſſary reflection: He ſhould have complain'd of France as much as of Holland; for 'tis particularly in France, that the Writings of which he complains ſell well. If the French would neither read nor buy them, the Book-ſellers would not Print them, and thus the greedineſs of the French contributes as much as any thing elſe to the production of Libels: The Lyars and the Credulous maintain one another mutually; they live upon one another's Purſe.

(F) The

(a) Buſſy Rabutin's Letter to the Duke of St. Aignan inſerted in the Book concerning the uſe of Adverſity pag. 165. of the Dutch Edition. That Letter is dated the 12. of November 1665.

(b) Ibid. pag. 166.

(c) Johannes Burchardus Argentinenſis Capellæ Alexandri Sexti Papæ Clericus Ceremoniarum Magiſter. The Excerpta out of his Diarium were Printed at Hanover in 1696. by the care of Mr. Leibniz, with this Title, Specimen hiſtoriæ arcanæ ſive anecdotæ de vita Alexandri VI. Papæ.

(d) Buſſy ubi ſupra pag. 269.

(e) Specimen hiſtor. arcanæ ſeu anecdotæ de vita Alexandri VI. Papæ, pag. 77. 78.

(f) Printed in 1701.

chorearunt cum ſervitoribus & aliis ibidem exiſtentibus, primo in veſtibus ſuis, deinde nudæ. Poſt cœnam poſita fuerunt candelabra communia menſæ cum candelis ardentibus & projectæ ante candelabra per terram caſtaneæ, quas meretrices ipſæ ſuper manibus & pedibus nudæ candelabra pertranſeuntes colligebant, Papa, Duce & Lucretia ſorore ſua præſentibus & aſpicientibus: tandem expoſita dona ultimo, diploides de ſerico, paria caligarum, bireta & alia, pro illis qui plures dictas meretrices carnaliter agnoſcerent, quæ fuerunt ibidem in aula publice carnaliter tractatæ arbitrio præſentium, & dona diſtributa Victoribus. Feria quinta, undecima menſis Novembris intravit urbem per portam viridarii quidam ruſticus ducens duas equas lignis oneratas, quæ cum eſſent in plateola S. Petri, accurrerunt ſtipendiarii Papæ, inciſiſque pectoralibus & lignis projectis in terram cum baſtis, duxerunt equas ad illam plateolam quæ eſt inter palatium juxta illius portam, tum emiſſi fuerunt quatuor equi curſerii liberi ſuis frænis & capiſtris ex palatio, qui accurrerunt ad equas, & inter ſe propterea cum magno ſtrepitu & clamore morſibus & calceis contendentes aſcenderunt equas & coierunt cum eis, & eas graviter piſtarunt & læſerunt, Papa in feneſtra cameræ ſupra portam palatii & Domina Lucretia cum eo exiſtente, cum magno riſu & delectatione præmiſſa videntibus.

XII. Laws of Charles V. &c. againſt Libels. How Pope Hadrian VI was diſſuaded from overthrowing Paſquin's Statue.

If I ſhould further enlarge upon the Subject of this Diſſertation, I ſhould hope my Prolixity would be excus'd upon conſideration of the exuberance and importance of the matter, and becauſe I ſhould take care, as I have done hitherto, not to tranſcribe the Civilians who have written ſo many (E) Books upon this queſtion. It is eaſy to be long upon a thing which affords ſo many reflexions, and wherein the Publick is ſo much concerned, that all Legiſlators conſpire in ſeverely puniſhing the Authors of Defamatory Libels. We have ſeen that the Laws of the Twelve Tables ſentenc'd them to Death, and it is not true that Auguſtus (a) repeal'd them in this reſpect: We have ſeen the contrary above. One of the greateſt Emperors that lived (b) ſince Auguſtus, appointed the puniſhment of retaliation; for he ordered that Libellers ſhould undergo the ſame puniſhment with thoſe they ſhould defame, and who ſhould be convicted: Nay he would not have 'em to go unpuniſh'd, tho' they ſhould ſay nothing but truth. (c) Per hoc autem quod verum ſcripſerit infamans nullam meretur excuſationem, ſiquidem veritatem criminis per libellum famoſum pandere non licet, & edens libellum famoſum injuriarum tenetur, nec admitti debet edens libellum famoſum & injuriarum conventus ad probationem veritatis criminis. Joannes Thilemannus de Benignis, alias Goth. Obſ. Practi. 86. Quod etiam confirmatur per conſtitutionem Caroli V. criminal. arti. 110. in f. ubi hæc verba habentur: Et licet illata injuria prætenſi facti vera eſſet, debet tamen diffamator talis injuriæ ſecundum jus & arbitrium judicis puniri. In France the famous edict of January condemn'd them and their Abettors to be whip'd, and in caſe of relapſe, to be puniſh'd with Death. (d) Ne quis infames libellos ad quemquam traducendum faciat, divendat, aut divendendos curet. Qui ſecus faxit, primum fuſtigium, ſecundum, capitalis pœna indicta eſto. I mean here by Abettors thoſe who procur'd the Publication, or the Sale of a Libel. This was renew'd by Henry III. in 1577. The Law of the Emperors Valentinian and Valens is very ſevere; for it condemns to a Capital puniſhment ſuch as meeting with a Libel by chance, divulg'd it inſtead of tearing or burning it. Si quis famoſum libelium, ſive domi ſit, ſive in publico, vel quocunque loco etiam ignarus repererit, nec ſtatim corruperit, aut igne conſumpſerit, ſed vim ejus manifeſtaverit, quaſi auctor hujuſmodi delicti ſententiæ capitali ſubjiciatur. See Naude's Maſcurat, at the 657. Page. But ſo many temptations to prolixity will not hinder me from making a ſtop, when I have related a thing which I remember I have promiſs'd, and 3. or 4. other conſiderations.

Pope Hadrian VI. hearken'd to reaſon, when it was repreſented to him that the remedy he was going to employ againſt Paſquinades would be uſeleſs. I'll uſe Mr. Flechier's words: " (e) Swarms of Libels were then current in Spain, againſt the Court " of Flanders, and Ximenes himſelf. The Flemings (1), who were not uſed to this ſort " of ſmart and ingenious Satyrs, complain'd of them, and the Cardinal had orders to " ſearch after the Authors and Printers, and to puniſh them ſeverely. He caus'd ſome " Book-ſellers Houſes to be ſearched, but ſo lightly that no body was in pain for it. " He was of opinion that inferiors ſhould have the liberty of revenging themſelves " for their ſufferings by words or writings, which laſt no longer than a Man's of- " fended at them, and which loſe their Charms and Venom when they are deſpis'd. " Alphonſo Caſtile Governor of Madrid, having met with ſome of theſe Works reflecting " upon Cardinal Hadrian and La-Chaux, Ambaſſadors of Charles, gave them a ſight of " 'em, and they were ſenſibly affected with it, eſpecially Hadrian, who was for ſome time " inconſolable. 'Tis ſaid that being afterwards raiſed to St. Peter's Chair, and " not being able to bear the Statues of Paſquin and Marforio, whom the Satyrical " Wits have choſen for the Confidents, and Authors of their Calumnies, order'd them " to be thrown into the Tiber; which had been executed, if the Duke of Seſſa, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, had not very wiſely told him: What are you going to do, Holy Father? 'Tis much better ſtill to pardon thoſe two Mutes, than to open the Mouths of all the " Town. If you throw them into the River, the Frogs will croak the railleries which we " read as we go by them: And what two Statues ſhall no longer ſpeak, will be made publick by

(a) Lewis Gilhauſen pag. 222. of his commentary upon the Pandects, De injuriis & famoſis libellis, does falſly aſcribe this to that Emperor, and wrongly alleges Horace for it, whoſe authority would do him no Service, tho' he had quoted him better than he has done. Hanc pœnam capitalem, ſays he, Auguſtus ſuſtulit, ut videre eſt ex Horatio, lib. 1. epiſtolar. ad Auguſtum.

(b) Charles the Fifth, Conſtitutio Caroli V. Cæſaris de cauſſis capitalibus, Art. 110. edita in infamantem, pœnam eamdem irrogat quam mereretur diffamatus libello, ſi ejus criminis reus quo accuſatur peractus eſſet. Petrus Gregor. Syntag. juris. l. 38. c. 6. See alſo Gilhauſen ubi ſupra pag. 225.

(E) The Civilians, who have written ſo many Books upon, &c.] Mr. Furetiere has quoted Four or Five in one of his Caſes. 'Tis where he would prove that his Book againſt ſome Academiſts deſerv'd not to be call'd a Libel by the Sentence of the Chatelet. I have to no purpoſe ſearch'd after Gabriel Naudé's Book intitled Marfore ou diſcours contre les Libelles. It was Printed at Paris by Lewis Boulenger in 8. I know not in what Year. Leo Allatius mentions it in a Book, (f) that he Publiſh'd in 1633. Mr. Baillet cites (g) a Book which I would fain have read. 'Tis the Celeſtial Shield of John Baptiſt Nocette a Genoeſe againſt Defamatory Libels. The Abbot Michael Juſtiniani (h) places the Firſt Edition of it at Paris, in 1653. in 4. and the 2. at Lions 1664. in 12. 'Tis written in Italian. Alegambe's Continuator (i) mentions but one Edition, viz. of Paris 1655. See the Margin (k).

" by all the living Mouths. The Pope made uſe of this advice, and was afterwards " leſs nice upon this Subject." That you may know more particularly the Senſibility of this Pope, I will ſet down the words of Paulus Jovius, who tells us that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador was forc'd to renew his advice. Graviſſime etiam tulerat ſe famoſis carminibus apud Paſquilli ſtatuam fuiſſe laceratum; ſed id poſtea civili animo tulit cum didiciſſet, eam maledicendi licentiam obſcurorum hominum libertati atque nequitiæ dari, ut cum inſignes viros impunè carpſerint, fortunam ſuam ea vindictæ voluptate conſolentur. Decreverat Hadrianus uti poetis non obſcurè ſubiratus, Paſquilli ſtatuam, quæ erat in Parione, demoliri, atque eam in Tyberim præcipitare: ſed Ludovicus Sueſſanus urbano ſalſoque ingenio id fieri debere ſe negavit, ſubdens, Paſquillum vel in imo vado ranarum more, non eſſe taciturum: ad id vir pontifex, exuratur ergo, inquit, in calcem, ne ejus veſtigii ulla omnino memoria ſuperſit. Tum rurſus Sueſſanus, rectè inquit, ſed tam crudeliter concremato poetæ clientes non deerunt, qui patroni cineres invidioſis carminibus proſequantur, & ſupplicii locum quotannis ſtatuto ſolenni die concelebrent. Quibus verborum luſibus pontifex ab iracundia ad jocos hilaritatemque ſenſus omnes leniſſimè revocavit. (a)

XIII. Princes, who have deſpiſed ſlanders.

Some Princes have been as inſenſible to ſlanders as Cardinal Ximenés. See in Seneca (b) how Antigonus (c) pardon'd ſome Souldiers who had Lampoon'd him. The ſame Author alleges (d) the patience of Philip of Macedonia, and Auguſtus. This Emperor expreſs'd an admirable good humour towards a Satyrical (e) Hiſtorian, who had abus'd him, and his Wife and Family. Nothing was more likely to exaſperate a Potent Prince, who beſides knew that the Witticiſms of the Hiſtorian had been taken up and ſpread all over the Town. The Chevalier de Meré has wiſely ſaid (f) That ſlanders are very much to be fear'd when they are expreſs'd in Witty Words, becauſe People delight to repeat them, and love always to commend a good thought. But Seneca ſays with more reaſon ſtill, that Witty ſayings, which expoſe their Authors to ſome danger, are more Studiouſly obſerved than any others. (g) Multa & divus Auguſtus digna memoria fecit, dixitque, ex quibus appareat illi iram non imperaſſe. Timagenes hiſtoriarum ſcriptor, quædam in ipſum, quædam in uxorem ejus, & in totam domum dixerat, nec perdiderat dicta: magis enim circumfertur, & in ore hominum eſt, temeraria urbanitas. Hower it be, the detraction of this Hiſtorian brought but a ſmall diſgrace upon him. Nothing can be more Rational than Mæcenas's (h) Arguments about the contempt that this Emperor ought to expreſs for ſlanders. He adviſed him not to hearken to the informers againſt Satyriſts, and to puniſh no body for ſpeaking ill of him. You may ſee in Dion Caſſius the reaſons of this Advice. The ſame (i) Hiſtorian will inform you, why Cæſar took no notice of the injurious things that Cicero, and ſome others divulg'd againſt him. He thought they had a mind to equal themſelves with him whom they abuſed, and that 'twas better to deprive them of this advantage, by avoiding to contend with them. The reaſon he went upon was contain'd in an Oration of Quintus Metellus Numidicus, if we judge of it by this Diſcourſe of Aulus Gellius; however, I would not have it to be extended ſo far as to Cicero. (k) Cum iniquiſſimis hominibus non eſſe convicio decertandum, neque in maledictis adverſus impudentes & improbos velitandum, quia tantiſper ſimilis & compar eorum fias, dum paria & conſimilia dicas atque audias, non minus ex oratione Q. Metelli Numidici ſapientis viri cognoſci poteſt, quàm ex libris & diſciplinis philoſophorum. Verba hæc ſunt Metelli adverſus Cn. Manlium tribunum plebei, à quo apud populum in concione laceſſitus jactatuſque fuerat dictis petulantibus. Nunc quod ad illum attinet, Quirites, quoniam ſe ampliorem putat eſſe, ſi ſe mihi inimicum dictitaverit, quem ego mihi neque amicum recipio, neque inimicum reſpicio, in eum ego non ſum plura dicturus: nam eum indigniſſimum arbitror, cui à viris bonis benedicatur: tum ne idoneum quidem, cui à probis maledicatur: nam ſi in eo tempore hujuſcemodi homunculum nomines, in quo pœnire non poſſis; majore honore quam contumelia afficias. But Cæſar not being as yet Emperor, his Conduct on this occaſion is not of ſo great Weight for this part of my work as that of Tiberius mention'd by Tacitus. A Lady was accus'd of having ſpoken ill of Auguſtus, and the Empreſs Livia, and Tiberius. She was proſecuted upon the Law de Majeſtate. Tiberius would have a diſtinction us'd; I will not, ſaid he, have her proſecuted for what concerns me; but if ſhe be found guilty as to Auguſtus, let her be puniſh'd. He anſwer'd nothing the firſt Day about his Mother; but the next day he declar'd, that ſhe deſir'd that no body ſhould be brought into trouble for Satyrical Words ſpoken againſt her. (l) Adoleſcebat interea lex majeſtatis, & Apuleiam Variliam ſororis Auguſti neptem, quia probroſis ſermonibus divum Auguſtum, ac Tiberium, & matrem ejus inluſiſſet, Cæſarique connexa adulterio teneretur, majeſtatis delator arceſſebat. De adulterio ſatis caveri lege Julia viſum: majeſtatis crimen diſtingui Cæſar poſtulavit; damnarique ſi qua de Auguſto irreligioſe dixiſſet: in ſe jacta nolle ad cognitionem vocari. Interrogatus à conſule quid de his cenſeret, quæ de matre ejus locuta ſecus argueretur, reticuit: dein proximo ſenatus die, illius quoque nomine oravit, ne cui verba in eam quoquo modo habita crimini forent: liberavitque Apuleiam lege majeſtatis. Suetonius (m) will give you a more particular account of this Emperor's indolence. I won't repeat what I have ſaid before of Nero's moderation, and as for Veſpaſian I refer you to Suetonius (n). But upon this Head can any thing be Nobler than this Edict of the Emperor Theodoſius? Si quis modeſtiæ neſcius & pudoris ignarus improbo petulantique maledicto nomina noſtra crediderit laceſſenda, ac temulentia turbulentus obtrectator temporum noſtrorum fuerit; eum pœnæ nolumus ſubjugari neque durum aliquid nec aſperum volumus ſuſtinere, quoniam ſi id ex levitate proceſſerit contemnendum eſt, ſi ex inſania miſeratione dignum, ſi ab injuria remittendum: unde integris omnibus hoc ad noſtram ſcientiam referatur, ut ex perſonis hominum dicta penſemus, & utrum prætermitti an exquiri debeant cenſeamus. Datum VI. Id. Auguſt. Conſtantinopoli, Theodoſio anno III. & Abundantio Coſſ. This conſtitution is in the Code in the title, Si quis Imperatori male dixerit.

Modern

[illegible] The [illegible] is [illegible] by Spondanus pag. m. 782. [illegible] agree with [illegible] book.

(a) Paulus Jovius in vita Hadriani ſexti pag. m. 777, 778. See alſo Camerarius's Hiſtorical meditations. He ſuppoſes that the anſwer was made by a Cardinal, and not by the Ambaſſador, and that 'twas a wooden Statue.

(b) Seneca, de ira lib. 3. c. 22.

(c) He was the Grand Father to Alexander the Great, as Seneca ſays.

(d) Ibid. c. 23.

(e) Call'd Timagenes.

(f) Chevalier de Meré, diſcours de l'Eſprit.

(g) Seneca ubi ſupra c. 23. pag. m. 570.

(h) See Dion Caſſius lib. 52. p. m. 556.

(i) Dion, lib. 38. pag. m. 71. 72.

(k) Aulus Gellius, lib. 6. c. 11.

(l) Tacitus annal. lib. 2. c. 50.

(m) Sueton. in Tiber. c. 138.

(n) Idem in Veſpaſ. c. 13.

Modern History does not afford fewer instances of this patience. You'll find ſome in a Latin (a) Letter of Balzac, but not that of Lewis XII. which I have related in its proper place (b), nor that of Catherine de Medicis. We learn from Brantome, (c) that She read even the Invectives that were made againſt her, at which She jeſted and laughed, without any emotion, calling them Babblers, and Authors of Idle-Stories: Underſtanding that the Hugonots in the ſecond troubles had with them a very fine Calverin which they call'd the Queen Mother, (d) She deſir'd to know the reaſon of it. Some body being very much preſs'd by her to tell it, anſwered, 'tis, Madam, becauſe it has a greater and wider Bore than any other. She was the firſt that Laught at it. What She told ſome Soldiers who ſpoke moſt horrible Infamies of her, is to be ſeen in Coſtar's Letters with ſome flouriſhes. " (e) Catherine de Medicis, tho' She was of a Country " where they ſay, that God has reſerved vengeance to himſelf, becauſe 'tis a dainty bit, found " a greater pleaſure in pardoning than in puniſhing, when She ſaw ſome Soldiers " by her Couch, who ſaid of her all the filthy things imaginable, without minding " her or ſo much as depreſſing their Voice; for this Princeſs only look'd out of the " Couch, and fixing her Eyes upon thoſe Raſcals told them: Friends, if you don't go " farther to ſpeak ill of me, I'll keep you from roaſting (f) the Gooſe, and eating it ſo " quietly as you do. The Cardinal of Lorrain would have had them hang'd for an Ex- " ample; But She choſe rather to let Poſterity know that a Perſon, who was at once " a Woman, a Queen and an Italian, could command her paſſion, and deprive her- " ſelf of the pleaſure of revenge. 'Tis very likely this Story was taken out of d'Aubigné: But to ſhew how Coſtar accommodated the circumſtances of Facts to his own humour without conſidering the great abuſes that ariſe from ſuch a Liberty, it will not be amiſs to ſet down the words of that Hiſtorian. (g) I have it, ſays he, from the Sieur de (h) Talſi, that the King of Navarre and the Queen Mother being (i) at the Window of a low Room heard two Black-guards, who were roaſting a Gooſe on a wooden Spit and Singing Infamies againſt the Queen: One often ſaid that the Cardinal had lain with her and that ſhe had a Pig in her Belly, the other ſaid 'twas a Mule; and then they curs'd the Bitch that did them ſo much miſchief. The King of Navarre was leaving the Queen to go and have them hang'd; but She looking out of the Window ſaid, why, what has She done? If it was not for her you would not roaſt the Gooſe, and turning to the King of Navarre, and Laughing She told him, Couſin, our anger muſt not deſcend ſo low; that's beneath us. This I mention to ſhew that there was nothing mean in her.

Francis the Firſt is one of the Examples alledg'd by Balzac. But I find one thing in him to be blam'd, which is that this King ſuffered his Miniſters and Courtiers to be abuſed upon the Stage, at the ſame time that he permitted his own faults to be ript up. This was imitating a Conduct that Ancient Greece and Rome found no good in: 'Twas introducing an ill Cuſtom: And if it be an act of Magnanimity in a Prince to deſpiſe the Satyrs that concern his own Perſon, and to forgive the Authors of 'em; 'tis a viſible neglect of his duty to ſuffer his Subjects to be expos'd to the inſults of a Satyrical Pen. He may abate of his own Right; but the Honour of his Subjects ought to appear inviolable to him. Note, That Francis I. did not ſuffer the Players to name People. (k) Accepimus tacitè, libenterque etiam ferre ſolitum, ſe præcipuoſque Regni ſui proceres, quorum ipſe operâ conſiliiſque utebatur, in Fabulis & Comœdiis publicis rodi & configi maledictis; tectè id quidem & involutè, ſed tamen ut ab omnibus perſpiceretur.

XIV. The Romans were more jealous of their Honour than of that of their Gods.

The Romans did not permit the Comick Poets to abuſe the Magiſtrates, but they left them an entire liberty to make ſport with the Gods. St. Auſtin upbraided them with it ſeverely. At Romani, ſays he, (l) ſicut in illa de (m) republica diſputatione gloriatur Scipio, probris & injuriis poëtarum ſubjectam vitam famamque habere noluerunt, capite etiam punire ſancientes tale carmen condere ſi quis auderet. Quod erga ſe quidem ſatis honeſtè conſtituerunt, ſed erga Deos ſuos ſuperbe & irreligioſè. Quos cùm ſcirent non ſolùm patienter, ſed etiam libenter poetarum probris malediĉtiſque lacerari, ſe potius quam illos hujuſcemodi injuriis dignos eſſe duxerunt, ſeque ab eis etiam lege munierunt, illorum autem iſta etiam ſacris ſolennitatibus miſcuerunt. Itane tandem Scipio laudas, hanc poetis Romanis negatam eſſe licentiam ut cuiquam opprobrium infligerent Romanorum, cum videas, eos nulli Deorum pepercisse veſtrorum? Itane pluris tibi habenda eſt exiſtimatio veſtræ curæ, quàm Capitolii, imo Romæ unius quam cœli totius: linguam maledicam in cives tuos exercere poetæ etiam lege prohiberentur, & in Deos tuos ſecuri, tanta convitia nullo ſenatore, nullo cenſore, nullo principe, nullo pontifice prohibente jacularentur? Indignum videlicet fuit, ut Plautus aut Nævius Publio & Cneo Scipioni, aut Cæcilius M. Catoni malediceret: & dignum fuit, ut Terentius veſter flagitio Jovis optimi maximi adoleſcentium nequitiam concitaret. This thought is older than St. Auſtin, for Arnobius had (n) made uſe of it before. A Modern does not mention it upon an occaſion wherein it would have ſerved his turn. 'Tis in a Letter wherein he deſign'd to attack the Houſe of Auſtria. He enters upon the matter in hand not citing Arnobius or St. Auſtin, but Livy. (o) The Spaniards, who firſt were for the ſame " Alliance (p) which their Partiſans blame at preſent, took no care to preſerve the " veneration, due to Holy things, or to maintain the immunities and privileges " of the Prieſthood. Perhaps the reaſon of it was, becauſe thinking themſelves to " be the lawful Succeſſors of the Romans, particularly in their deſign of forming an " Univerſal Monarchy, they fancy they may ſay as well as they, As for Religion 'tis " more the intereſt of the Gods than ours. They may give orders if they pleaſe for hindring ſa- " cred things from being polluted by impure Hands. Ad (1) Deos id magis quàm ad ſe per- " tinere, ipſos viſuros ne ſacra ſua polluantur. Is it not very likely that Charles V. Acted " by this Principle, when in 1552. he diſplac'd three Lutheran Miniſters in Augsburg for

" abuſing

(a) Ad Phil. Coſpeanum pag. 551. edit. 1651. in 12.

(b) In the Remark L. of Lewis XII.

(c) Brantome in his Elogy upon Catherine de Medicis.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Coſtar page 729. of the firſt volume of his Letters.

(f) This is abſurd, being ſeparated from the circumſtances mention'd by d'Aubigné here below.

(g) D'Aubigne hiſt. Univerſ. tom. 1. Book 3. chap. 5. pag. 198.

(h) 'Tis very likely he, who was d'Aubigné's father in in Law, and whoſe name was John Salviati. See d'Aubigné's Hiſtory tom. 2. l. 5. chap. 18. pag. 1143.

(i) During the Parley for a Peace at Talſi in 1562.

(k) Balzac, ejuſd. epiſt. ad Coſpeanum pag. m. 554.

(l) Auguſt. de civit. Dei l. 2. c. 12.

(m) See the 9 Chap. of the ſame Book de civitate Dei.

(n) Nec à vobis ſaltem iſtum meruerunt honorem (Dii) … Carmen malum conſcribere, quo fama alterius coinquinetur & vita, decemviralibus ſcitis evadere noluiſtis impune: ac ne veſtras aures convitio aliquis petulantiore pulſaret, de atrocibus formulas conſtituiſtis injuriis. Soli Dii ſunt apud vos ſuperi inhonorati, contemptibiles, viles: in quos jus eſt vobis datum, quæ quiſque voluerit dicere: turpitudinem jacere, quas libido confinxerit atque excogitaverit formas. Arnob. lib. 4. pag. 150. 151.

(o) Coſtar, Letter 394. of the 1. vol. pag 974. 975.

(p) That of Cromwel.

(1) Livy Book 10.

“ abusing him, and suffered the rest to vilify GOD, his Mother and his Saints; as “ the Duke of (a) Nevers reproach'd him in a Discourse he made to Pope Sixtus V.
“ upon the present State of Affairs. Doubtless the Emperor Charles remembred this “ saying of Tiberius. Let us leave to the immortal Gods the care of revenging injuries that “ are done to them. Deorum (x) injuriæ Diis curæ.

XV. The Council of Trent [illegible] power [illegible] the [illegible] Libels [illegible] of the Church.

I must not forget a thing which very much displeas'd the Civilians who were tender of the Rights of the secular Power. They look'd upon the Authority given to the Bishops by the Council of Trent, as an Act of Usurpation. Let us hear William Ranchin (b) “ This Council to the prejudice of the secular jurisdiction, ascribes to the “ Bishops the (1) punishment of the Authors of Defamatory Libels, and of the “ Printers, &c. . . . . Our Civil Laws give the Cognizance of them to the Judges and “ Magistrates, and not to Ecclesiasticks. Some would except those that concern Re“ ligion; but this Exception is not pertinent, and here is an Argument against it. The “ Laws of Constantin the Great, and of Constantius, made against such Libels, were en“ acted at such a time as this, that is, at a time when many Writings were published in “ point of Religion. Doctor Balduin (2) has very judiciously observ'd it. 'Tis a ma- “ terial thing, says he, to remember what were the times of Constantin and Constantius,
“ in which the Contentions of Religion, not unlike ours, inflam'd the Passions of the Parties
“ who thereupon sent out horrid Calumnies and defamatory Libels, as is done at present. He “ says this, explaining three Laws of the Emperor Constantin, and two of Constan- “ tius, made upon this account, which we find at present in the Theodosian Code.
“ These words (3) of the Emperors Valentinian and Valens are also remarkable: If any “ one is concern'd for his Religion and the Publick Safety, let him declare his Name, and speak
“ with his own Mouth what he would have said in defamatory Libels. This very well agrees
“ to Libels in point of Religion, and was never spoken in any other sense by those “ Emperors. Now (4) all the abovementioned Constitutions, as also some others of “ the same Valentinian and Valens, Arcadius, Honorius, and Theodosius, impose Penalties
“ on the Authors of such Libels, and the Publishers of 'em, and commit the Cogni“ zance and Punishment of them to their Officers and Magistrates, directing such Laws
“ to them, to be observed in their Judgments. Abundance of Ordinances of our Kings “ mention in express words Defamatory and Scandalous Libels that concern Religion, pre“ scribe the Punishment due to them, and the particular Penalties to be inflicted on “ the Authors, Printers and Publishers, and expresly give this Jurisdiction to the Royal “ Judges. As that of Henry II. of the 11th of December, 1547. made at Fontainebleau, “ and another of the same Prince made at Chasteaubriant in 1551. That of Charles IX.
“ made at Mante the 10th of September, 1563. That of the States of Molins in the Ar“ ticle 77. and abundance of others. I shall only set down the words of one of them, “ viz. that of Charles IX. made at Mante the 10th of September, 1563. which speaks of “ Defamatory Libels, Bills posted up, Books, and such-like things concerning Religion;
“ and as to Jurisdiction, it speaks thus: Injoining all publick Magistrates, Commissioners of “ Districts, and Our other Officers to whom it shall belong, to have an eye and regard to them, “ charging Our Attorneys and Advocates to do their duty therein, and to lay aside all other “ Affairs, in order to prove and punish the faults they shall find. And it is moreover enjoined,
“ that they shall observe the same Ordinance in every point, and proceed briefly against the In- “ fractors, by the Punishments herein specified”.

XVI. Libels complain'd of as being the cause of Sedition.

As there is nothing so useful, but in some respects is the cause of evil, it fell out that Printing, amongst a thousand Conveniencies it has brought with it, has occasion'd a notable Inconvenience, which is, that it has afforded Satyrical and Seditious Men a thousand opportunities of quickly dispersing their Venom every where. Du Verdier Vau-Privas has inserted in (c) one of his Books a Latin Poem, entituled, Encomion Chalcographiæ, where, after many Praises bestow'd upon Printing, many Complaints are brought in against the Licentiousness of Libels. The Author of that Poem being a Roman Catholick, it must be observed that he sutes his Style to his Prejudices in the following Verses:

Omnia dente petunt, fœdant spurcaque saliva,
Digni qui Anticyræ præmia sana ferant.
A quibus & Nemesis turpissima facta reposcat,
Quo meritas pœnas improba turba luat.
Principis ac Princeps lacerat caput, atque tacenda
Consilia in chartis vendere quisque solet.
De rebus magnis populi suffragia vana
Captant, quæ semper mens animosa fugit.
Quid non audebit furiosa licentia vulgi,
Talia si primi dant documenta duces?
Quæ non his oritur funesta Tragœdia nugis?
Accendit quas non hæc quoque flamma faces?
Rustica seditio belli cur cornua sumpsit?
Chartæ pellaces hoc docuere nefas.
Hæc quoque Gorgoneo perfudit sacra cruore
Progenies vulgi, quam nova secta tenet.
Quæque Numam simulat modo religione prophana,
Et geminos fertur ferre sub aure polos.
Omnia confundit, vertit sursumque, deorsumque,
Ac gerras præter nil sua sylva crepat.

Hæc

(a) See the Sr. Reynaud's Apology for the Catholicks, part 1, p. 78, 79. a long passage of the Duke's discourse.

(x) Tacit. lib. 1. [illegible]

(b) [illegible] Concile de Trente, [illegible]

(2) Balduin. [illegible] de [illegible] famos. libell. p. [illegible]

(3) Lib. C. Theod. de famos. Libell. Lin. C. Just. eod.

(4) Vide totum Titul. C Theodos. de famosis libellis.

(c) At the end of the Supplementum epitomes Bibliothecæ Gesnerianæ.

Hæc auſa eſt Aquilæ Romanæ vellere pennas,
Atque aves magni commaculare Dei.
Non adeo lædunt Bombardæ fulmina diræ:
Nil præter clades ſit licet illa tonent:
Nec tantùm nocuit cuiquam vis ſæva cicutæ,
Quantùm famoſi ſtigmata nigra libri.
Ita & mille modis eſſent hæc ſæpe notanda,
Aſt iter immodicum noſtra Thaleia fugit.

Eraſmus exclaim'd againſt the abuſes of the Preſs, and confuted the ridiculous excuſes of the Printers, who alledg'd that they ſhould want Bread if they did not publiſh Libels. (a) Dicet hic aliquis: Hem divinator, quid hæc ad Typographos? Quia nonnullam mali partem invehit horum impunita licentia. Implent mundum libellis, non jam dicam nugalibus, quales ego fortaſſis ſcribo; ſed ineptis, indoctis, maledicis, famoſis, rabioſis, impiis ac ſeditioſis: & horum turba facit, ut frugiferis etiam libellis ſuus pereat fructus. Provolant quidam abſque titulis, aut titulis, (quod eſt ſceleratius) fictis. Deprehenſi reſpondent: Detur unde alam familiam, deſinam tales libellos excudere. Aliquanto meliore fronte reſpondeat fur, impoſtor aut leno: Da qui vivam & deſinam his artibus uti, niſi forte levius crimen eſt, clam minuere rem alienam, quam palam eripere famam alienam: aut ſine vi ad quæſtum abuti tuo alienove corpore, quam vitam alterius ac famam vita quoque chariorem impetere. I think that the Author of the abovementioned Poem does the Satyrical Writers more Honour than they deſerve, by accuſing them to be the cauſe of Wars and Seditions. 'Tis certain that very often they aim at ſuch a thing, and are over-joy'd to think that their Libels have produc'd ſo great an effect; nay, they flatter themſelves with it when they have no reaſon to do it, and are very well pleaſed to have this laid to their charge. Can one build any certain Fact upon this Subject? I don't think any general Rule can be grounded upon it. At certain times Defamatory Libels do not ſtir the People, and the Publiſhers are balk'd in their expectations; but at other times they are true Incendiaries, and Trumpeters of Sedition. Beſides, the difference of Parties and Intereſts is to be conſidered; for the effects of Libels are accordingly very different, and even contrary to one another: They ſometimes unite thoſe they would divide, and divide thoſe they would unite. What is certain is, that the Tongue and Pen of a ſingle man are ſometimes more uſeful to a Cauſe than an Army of Forty thouſand Men. Francis I. confeſs'd that the Biſhop of Sion had done him more miſchief by his Words than all Suiſſerland by their Arms. (b) Maxime vero ei glorioſum fuit Franciſci Regis judicium, quum aſſeveraret, me audiente, aliquanto plus ſibi ſumptus atque periculi Sedunenſis facundiæ indomitam vim, quàm tot legionum ejus gentis cuſpides attuliſſe. I will not mention the confeſſion of a (c) King of England; for it would be an ill application of a Thought to the preſent Subject. The Queſtion is not here about the great things a King can do without going out of his Cloſet, by the ſole power of his Pen; nay, the Queſtion is not in general about the efficacy of the Pen in a War. A little Book came out upon this Subject (d) in 1679.

XVII. Whether it be too ſevere a thing to inflict the ſame puniſhment upon the diſperſers of Libels as upon the Authors of 'em. Some Remarks againſt thoſe who approve Libels.

I have call'd the Law of Valentinian and Valens a ſevere one, which condemns to a Capital Puniſhment thoſe who accidentally meeting with a Libel don't deſtroy it, but on the contrary encourage it. Does this ſignifie that I blame this Law? By no means: For I can't conceive that a man who in this caſe diſperſes a Libel, is leſs deſirous of doing miſchief than the Author himſelf, and therefore he deſerves the ſame Puniſhment. But what ſhall we ſay of the pleaſure that is taken in the reading of a Defamatory Libel? Is it not a very ſinful thing before GOD? We muſt diſtinguiſh. Either this pleaſure is only an agreeable ſenſation, that we are affected with when we light upon any Thought that is ingenious, and well expreſs'd; or 'tis a joy grounded upon the diſhonour of the perſon defam'd. I have nothing to ſay upon the firſt Caſe; for perhaps ſome would think that my Morality is not ſevere enough, if I ſhould affirm that a man is not Maſter of thoſe agreeable ſenſations, any more than of thoſe occaſion'd by Sugar or Honey when they touch his Tongue: But in the ſecond Caſe, every body will own that pleaſure to be a great ſin. The pleaſure in the firſt Caſe is of no continuance; it prevents our Reaſon, our Reflection, and is immediately ſucceeded by the grief of ſeeing our Neighbour's Honour blaſted. If it does not ceaſe immediately, 'tis a ſign that the Inſolence of the Satyriſt does not diſpleaſe us, and that we are glad to ſee him defame his Enemy by all ſorts of ſtories; and then we deſerve the Puniſhment to which the Writer of the Libel is liable. Here are the words of a Modern Author: (e) St. Gregory excommunicating the Authors who had diſhonoured the Deacon Caſtorius, does not except thoſe who read that Book; becauſe, ſaid he, if Calumnies have always been the delight of the ears, and the happineſs of the people, who have no other advantage over honeſt men, is not he who takes pleaſure in reading them, as guilty as he who compos'd them? 'Tis a certain Maxim, That they who approve an Action would willingly do it if they could; that is, if ſome reaſon of ſelf-love did not hinder them. There is no difference, ſaid Cicero, (f) betwixt adviſing a Crime and approving it when 'tis committed. The Roman Law confirm'd this Maxim, having ſubmitted the Approvers and Authors of Evil to the ſame Puniſhment. Et ſi erat ſervus omni modo fugiturus, vel furtum facturus, hic vero laudator hujus propoſiti fuerit, tenetur. Non enim oportet laudando augeri malum (g). We may therefore ſay, that thoſe who are pleas'd with reading Defamatory Libels, ſo far as to approve the Authors and Diſperſers of them, are as guilty as if they had compos'd them; for if they don't write ſuch Libels, 'tis becauſe they have not the Talent of Writing, or becauſe they will run no hazard. See in one of the Provincial Letters (h) the

---

(a) Eraſm. in explicatione proverbii Feſtina lente. It is the 1ſt of the 1ſt Century of the 2d Chiliad.

(b) Paulus Jovius elog. virorum bellica virtute inſign. lib. 5. p. m. 389.

(c) He ſaid this of the ſaid King Charles V. There never was a King in France who made fewer Wars than he, who never ſtirs from his Cloſet, being always writing Letters; and yet no King did ever cut out ſo much Work for me. Belleforeſt Chroniques & Annales de France, fol. m. 357. ad ann. 1364.

(d) Intituled, Arma anſerina, ſive armatura epiſtolaris, à doctore militari, Tacito, ſubminiſtrata & in diſſertatione Politica diducta à G. C. W.

the mortal Contagion of Calumny: St. Bernard is cited there, who maintain'd that Calumny kills not only those who publish it, but also those who do not reject it. The Heathens were not ignorant of this Morality: They said that Slandering was an ill thing, both in the Slanderer, and in him that believ'd Slanders. (a) [illegible] Detractio namque importunissima res est: in qua duo sunt qui injuriam faciunt, unus cui injuria fit. Qui enim detrahit, injurius est, quod non præsentem accusat; item qui huic credit injurius est, quod prius credit quam rem compertam habeat; & illi cui absenti detrahitur, ab id fit injuria quod ab altero insimulatur ut malus, ab altero talis putatur. See the Book entituled, Question si (b) Mr. Arnaud est Heretique? On the other hand, we ought to believe that the same baseness which induces some people to fire a Musquet upon their Enemy, would induce them to defame him by a Satyr, if they had no other Arms but their Pen. 'Tis just as amongst Beasts; some don't gore with their Horns, but bite; (c) 'tis because they have no Horns, and know how to use their Teeth. It may be said also, that a Satyrist who assaults the Honour of his Enemies with Libels, would attempt upon their Life with Sword and Poyson, if he had the same opportunity (d). To conclude, it is not always a good excuse to say, Such a Libel has not been answer'd, therefore it contains nothing but Truth: Seneca (e) laugh'd at this way of arguing.

A DISSERTATION

Concerning the

HIPPOMANES.

THE Hippomanes does chiefly signifie two things: 1. A certain Liquor that flows from the Privy-parts of a Mare ready to take Horse; 2. An Excrescence of Flesh which the new-foal'd Colts have upon their Foreheads. It is black, round, and of the bigness of a dry Fig. It's pretended that those two Hippomanes's have a peculiar Virtue in Philtres and other such Compositions design'd for Fascinations; and that the last kind is of such a nature, that a Mare has no sooner dropt her Colt, but she eats this piece of Flesh, without which she would not suckle it. 'Tis added, that if she gives any one time to take away this Hippomanes, the meer smell of it makes her mad. Let us prove, but without a crowd of Passages, that if this be not true, 'tis found at least in the most authentick Authors. Let us hear Virgil:

> Hinc (f) demum, Hippomanes vero quod nomine dicunt
> Pastores, lentum distillat ab inguine virus.
> Hippomanes, quod sæpe malæ legere novercæ,
> Miscueruntque herbas & non innoxia verba.

I don't add to Virgil's Authority that of his Commentator Servius, cited on this Subject by Fungerus in his Philological Lexicon, by Calepinus, Decimator, &c. for I don't find that Servius does any thing explain the sense of the Poet: But I will not forget that of Aristotle. He says (g), That what they call Hippomanes is a certain thing proceeding ex pudendis equæ similis genituræ, sed multo magis tenuis quam semen maris. Now let us hear Pliny, who has this passage: (h) Equarum virus à coitu in lychnis accensum Anaxilaus prodidit equinorum capitum usus repræsentare monstrificè: similiter ex asinis. Nam Hippomanes tantas in veneficio vires habet, ut affusum æris mixturæ in effigiem equæ Olympiæ admotos mares equos ad rabiem coitus agat. Thus much concerning the first signification: now for the second. (i) Et sane equis amoris innasci veneficium, Hippomanes appellatum, in fronte, caricæ magnitudine, colore nigro: quod statim edito partu devorat fœta, aut partum ad ubera non admittit. Si quis præreptum habeat olfactu in rabiem id genus agitur. Aristotle (k) had said the same thing; Virgil dropt a word about it, speaking of the Enchantments the unfortunate Dido had recourse to in her Despair:

> Quæritur (l) & nascentis equi de fronte revulsus
> Et matri præreptus amor.

It is easie to see that Calepinus has quoted those two passages of Pliny wrong, to prove the Hippomanes to be a little Excrescence of Flesh upon the Forehead of a new-born Colt; for Pliny speaks of it in this sense, only in the 42d Chapter of the 8th Book. Besides, Calepinus (m) has quoted the 18th Book instead of the 28th, and put cariæ instead of caricæ; and he ascribes five or six words to Servius, which are not to be found in his Commentary, and which signifie that the Hippomanes being eaten by a Man, makes him mad; quod in humana viscera descendens hominem in furorem agat. Decimator's Dictionary ascribes the same thought to Servius. Martinius mangles the passage of the 8th Book of Pliny; he puts equi for equis; fœtus for fœta, (which is Nonsense) and a Comma instead of a Full-stop betwixt admittit and si quis. See Father Hardouin upon Pliny (n). It may be said in general, That the Writers of Dictionaries take more pains to compile new things, than to mend the faults of others.

I. Two sorts of Hippomanes. Servius and Pliny quoted wrong.

(g) [illegible] Humorem emittunt suis genitalibus similem genituræ, sed multo tenuiorem quam mares, quem Hippomanes nonnulli appellant. Arist. hist. anim. l. 6. c. 18 pag. m. 668. See below n. X.

(h) Plin. lib. 28. c. 11. sub fin.

(i) Idem Plinius l. 8 c. 42.

(k) Arist. ubi supra c. 22.

(l) Virg. Æneid. l. 4. v. 515.

(m) The Edition I make use of, is that of Lions 1681.

(n) In the second Vol. pag. 272.

(c) Res falsa & inanis nisi corrigatur habet communem fidem, multæ sunt homines [illegible] qui nihil audiunt leguntve quod non credant [illegible] refutatum [illegible] Senec.

(f) Virg. Georg. l. 3. v. 280.

II A Plant call'd Hippomanes by Theocritus.

I had reaſon to ſay that the Hippomanes does chiefly ſignifie two things; for there is a third kind not near ſo remarkable as the others, ſince it's found only in a paſſage of Theocritus: (A) Beſides, one muſt engage in a Controverſie with one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVIIth Century to prove it there. This paſſage ſays, (a) That the Hippomanes is a Plant in Arcadia, which makes Mares and Colts run mad. Salmaſius can't endure to hear of this Plant; he maintains that Theocritus did not ſay φυτὸν, but χυτὸν, and that he meant by χυτὸν the brazen Mare that was near the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, which excited Luſt in Horſes in like manner as if ſhe had been alive; a quality ſhe had deriv'd from the Hippomanes that had been mix'd with the Braſs in her caſting. We have already related a paſſage out of Pliny where mention is made of ſuch a thing; but it will be better to conſult Pauſanias, who will give us a larger Account of it. And as what he ſays is the Key of almoſt all the Criticiſms contain'd in this Article, it is neceſſary to inſert his words at length.

III A bra Horſe which cited Lu

Hear then how Pauſanias (b) ſpeaks: Phormis going out of Menalos, his Countrey, went into Sicily, where he ſignaliz'd himſelf in ſeveral Expeditions under Gelon Son of Dinomenes, and Hiero Brother of Gelon. Having been very fortunate, he offer'd up Gifts not only to Jupiter Olympius, but likewiſe to Apollo Delphicus. Thoſe he offered to Jupiter are two Horſes with two Grooms, for each Horſe has a Groom: Dionyſius of Argos made one, and Simon of Ægina the other. Upon the ſide of the firſt Horſe was engraven an Inſcription, whoſe beginning is in Proſe, and much to this purpoſe, viz. Phormis the Arcadian of Menalos, but now of Syracuſa, has offer'd it. The people of Elea ſay, that through the artifice of a Magician ſome Hippomanes had been mix'd in the caſting of this Horſe, to the end it might afford a ſurprizing Spectacle. He is both ſmaller and leſs beautiful than many other Horſes in (c) Altis, and has a cut Tail, which renders him yet more ugly; nevertheleſs he ſtirs up luſtful deſires in all other Horſes, not only during the Spring, but all the Year round; for they break their Halters, or eſcape out of the hands of them that hold them, to ruſh with greater fury on this Statue (d) than if they were to leap the fineſt Mare that ever was. 'Tis true, their feet ſlip, but they don't give over neighing and renewing their furious Encounters till they have been forc'd from the Braſs by mighty whipping and downright ſtrength.

IV Ser juſtly cenſur'd by Sa maſius

(e) Salmaſius has written a long Diſcourſe to ſhew that Theocritus ſpoke of this Statue, and not of a Plant call'd Hippomanes. Let us examin his Reaſons a little; we cannot fail to benefit our ſelves by following the footſteps of ſo Great a Man. 'Tis true, he ſeems not to love the plaineſt and moſt natural way, but rather chooſes to break into the midſt of Buſhes; yet one may ſometimes learn more by running after him through Wilds, than by taking a direct way to Truth under other Guides. He very juſtly (f) cenſures Servius for ſaying that Virgil pretended that the Plant Hippomanes was improperly ſo called. Servius's reaſon is, That Virgil ſpeaking of another Hippomanes, obſerves it was properly ſo call'd, vero quod nomine dicunt. This reaſon is nothing worth, for the Poet did not expreſs himſelf after this manner, but becauſe he ſaw in the very Name the Property of the Thing: Now if this Property agreed with ſeveral other Things, with the Plant of Theocritus, the Matter that proceeded from a Mare, and the like, then might the ſame Name be given them in the proper ſenſe. Salmaſius imagins with a great deal of probability, that Servius took Heſiod for Theocritus, when he ſaid upon the third Book of the Georgicks that Heſiod makes mention of an Herb call'd Hippomanes, which made Horſes mad; for having had occaſion to ſpeak of the ſame thing in his Comment on the fourth Book of the Æneid, he quotes only Theocritus. If he had known two Poets who had ſpoke of this Plant, he would doubtleſs have nam'd them both either in the firſt place or the ſecond; but he has not done it, therefore we muſt believe he had only the Authority of Theocritus. He has nevertheleſs been the cauſe that even at this day the Dictionary of Decimator and the Theſaurus Fabri have quoted Heſiod and Theocritus for the Herb Hippomanes.

V Ser Philarg unjuſtly cenſured by Sa maſius

Servius and Philargyrus ſeem to have had more reaſon when they ſay, the former, that this Herb made thoſe Horſes mad that eat of it; and the latter, that it excited an exceſſive Luſt in Mares. Salmaſius pretends that they don't underſtand it at all, and that Theocritus meant only that the Horſes were enflam'd with a violent deſire of enjoying the Hippomanes; So that if this Poet ſpoke of an Herb, it muſt be underſtood that the Horſes were tranſported with a furious inclination to eat of it. 'Tis

---

(A) The third kind is only found in a paſſage of Theocritus.] I am not ignorant that in Dioſcorides we find an Herb call'd [illegible], and [illegible], and ἱππομανὲς; and in Theophraſtus an Hippomanes made of the Herb call'd Tithymallum, which is excellent and much cultivated at Tegea, (g) a Town of Arcadia. But becauſe Salmaſius (h) pretends that none but Cavillers, like to him who conceal'd himſelf under the borrow'd Name of Cercoëtius (it was Father Petau) would make uſe of the Authority of Dioſcorides, ſince that would be to give us the ſpurious Additions made to that Author for his true and real Writings, I think we ought to paſs by his Teſtimony. As for Theophraſtus, it is not certain whether we ought to read ἱππομανὲς in the paſſage I have quoted; Salmaſius (i) corrects the reading of it, ſubſtituting in its place ὁ ὀπὸς μόνος, pretending that the Author meant that Juice only was drawn from the Tithymallum. Thus we may ſee theſe Teſtimonies are only matter of diſpute. We muſt not ſay the ſame of that of Theocritus, ſince, over and above the Reaſons by which I have overthrown the χυτὸν of Salmaſius, it cannot be deny'd but that from the time of the Grammarian Servius the word φυτὸν was in the Text of that Poet. Nothing can be ſaid poſitively as to the Herb of which he has ſpoken. Aloiſius Anguillara, Cratevas, Dodoneus, and Wecker, who take it for (k) the Stramonia, call'd by the Arabians Nux Methel, and by the French Pomme du Perou, do not give us better Conjectures concerning it than (l) Rodericus a Caſtro, who has taken it for Fern, or (m) Gaſpar a Reies, who took it for the Herb Flavia.

(a) ἱππομανὲς φυτόν ἐστι παρ' Ἀρκάσι, τῷ δ' ἔπι πᾶσαι καὶ πῶλοι μαίνονται ἀν' ὤρεα καὶ θοαὶ ἵπποι. Hippomanes planta eſt apud Arcades qua concitati omnes & equulei inſaniunt in montibus & celeres equæ. Theocrit. in Pharmaceutr. p. m. 15.

(b) Pauſan. lib. 5. ſub fin.

(c) It was the name of one of the Dependencies of the Temple of Jupiter. See Pauſan. p. m. 156. and hereafter n. VIII.

(d) [illegible] Romulus Amaſæus tranſlates it nihil herclè minus furentur, which weakens the ſenſe.

(e) Salmaſ. Exercit. Plinian. p. 939. &c.

(f) Philargyrus, another old Commentator on Virgil, is alſo involved in this Cenſure, ſince he has inſinuated the ſame thing with Servius.

(g) 'Tis thus perhaps that the Greek words of Theophraſtus had to be rendred l. 9 hiſt. plant. c. 15. Καὶ τὸ τιθύμαλλος ἐξ οὗ τὸ ἱππομανὲς, ἄριστον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ περὶ Τεγέαν, καὶ ἐκεῖ μάλιστα σπουδάζεται, Salmaſius Exercit. Plin. pag. 941. refers ἄριστον, &c. to ἱππομανὲς.

(h) Ibid. pag. 940.

(i) Ibid. pag. 941.

has done, though I know Cratevas is more ancient by many

(l) Medic. Polit. l. 4. c. 2.

(m) In Campo Elyſio jucundar. quæſt. 29.

'Tis thus (a) he explains the Greek Phraſe μαίνεσθαι ἐπί τινι. Let it be ſo; but it ſeems to me that the Explication of thoſe two ancient Grammarians is not ill. The Prepoſition ἐπὶ has ſo many ſignifications, that it would be ſtrange if it had not ſometimes that which we give to the Prepoſition upon in theſe Phraſes: He was enraged, he was tranſported, he became furious upon it. Theſe are all Phraſes where the Prepoſition upon does not denote the Object of the Paſſion, but the Occaſion of it.

I do not deny but Philargyrus has made Theocritus ſay what he does not ſay preciſely, viz. That the Herb Hippomanes excites in Mares that eat of it an ardent Lubricity; but it is nevertheleſs very likely Theocritus underſtood it ſo. For proof of this, we need only conſider his wiſh, that the Object of his Love, influenc'd with a deſire like to that of thoſe Mares, might come to him; as alſo what the Naturaliſts obſerve as to the exceſſive Luſt of theſe Animals. Ariſtotle (b) ſays no Female Creatures equal theſe in Laſciviouſneſs; and that to expreſs the Lubricity of other Females exceſſively luſtful, they made uſe of the name which denotes that of Mares. Ælian obſerves the ſame thing in the 11th Chapter of the 4th Book of his Hiſtory of Animals. Others (c) have remarked, that they will go in queſt of the Males even over Mountains and through Rivers.

> Scilicet (d) ante omnes furor eſt inſignis equarum.
>
> \- - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
>
> Illas ducit amor Gargara tranſque ſonantem
> Aſcanium; ſuperant montes & flumina tranant.

Laſtly, Horace foretelling to a Miſtreſs who had taken too much upon her in her Youth, that the time would come Mankind would be even with her, tells her ſhe would then feel the Rage that tranſports Mares. (e) Cum tibi flagrans amor & libido, Quæ ſolet matres furiare equorum, Sæviet circa jecur ulceroſum. Let us infer from hence by the by, that Gallant Poetry was not in the Reign of Auguſtus, as now-a-days, an Enemy to all groſs Ideas; but let us chiefly remember to conclude from the Authorities which have been quoted, that Servius and Philargyrus have well enough underſtood the paſſage out of Theocritus, and did not deſerve the Cenſure Salmaſius has paſs'd upon them. It was much more natural to underſtand it of an Amorous Paſſion excited by the Herb Hippomanes, than of a deſire of eating that Herb: And it ſignifies little that only Theocritus (f) has ſpoken of this Plant, ſince he might have grounded his Aſſertion on ſome old Tradition which might be contradicted by the following Ages. When all's done, it would not be very ſurprizing that there ſhould be ſuch an Herb as could produce this effect. That which the Italians (g) call Sferra Cavallo, becauſe it is pretended Horſes no ſooner tread on it but they are unſhod, ſeems to me much more miraculous. Pliny (h) mentions an Herb by means of which the Woodpecker made a Wedge thruſt into a Tree jump out: Yet of this he ſeems to doubt in (i) another Book of his.

VI. Confutation of the Opinion of Salmaſius.

Let us look a little nearer into the Opinion of Salmaſius, and we ſhall find the changing the word φυτὸν into χυτὸν was not well imagin'd. To defend that Reading, we muſt ſuppoſe, firſt, That Theocritus believ'd that the Temple of Jupiter Olympius was not in Elis, but in Arcadia; or that knowing it was not in Arcadia, he has nevertheleſs averr'd it, either by reaſon of the nearneſs of thoſe two Provinces, or becauſe Phormis who conſecrated this brazen Mare was of that Countrey. This firſt Suppoſition is very abſurd; for who can ſuppoſe that the Ceremony of the Olympick Games could permit a fine Wit to doubt in what Province of Greece they were celebrated? In this reſpect the Greeks were all good Geographers, inſomuch that it can never enter into the opinion of any reaſonable man that Theocritus could err upon that Head, or dare to deprive the People of Elis in favour of thoſe of Arcadia, of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, one of the VII Wonders of the World, and that for two bad Reaſons. But there are other Suppoſitions not leſs abſurd than the foregoing. We muſt ſuppoſe in the ſecond place, that ſpeaking only of the Luſt of Horſes, Theocritus made uſe of the Feminine Gender πᾶσαι ϗ πῶλοι, and all the Mare-Colts; ϗ θοαὶ ἵπποι, and all the Mares (k). What reaſon for this? A brazen Mare is the Object deſir'd; her Hippomanes ſtirs up only the Horſes, as Pauſanias obſerves; and yet Theocritus meant only the Luſt of Mare-Colts and Mares. The Reaſon is this: The Doric Dialect made uſe of the Feminine Article to denote a Horſe, in like manner as the common Dialect employ'd the Maſculine to denote a Mare. Let it be ſo; but as Pauſanias, even in the paſſage which Salmaſius quotes for proof of the Remark concerning the common Dialect, makes uſe of the Maſculine Article for Horſes and the Feminine for Mares, we muſt believe that thoſe who made uſe of the Doric Dialect apply'd to each Sex its proper Article upon certain occaſions: And it would be eaſie to prove that no Grecian has made a Horſe Feminine, as the French do the word Perdrix; or Maſculine, as they do the word Lièvre. Now if a like uſage cannot be ſhewn in the Doric Dialect, Salmaſius's Anſwer will appear to be no better than an Illuſion. Thirdly, we muſt ſuppoſe that the Hippomanes of the brazen Mare extended its Virtue a great way, ſince the Horſes of which Salmaſius will have Theocritus to ſpeak, ran raging over Mountains, and flew to enjoy their beloved Object ſuperatis Montibus. No ſuch thing is hinted in the Relation of Pauſanias, and the quite contrary is to be found in theſe words of Pliny, Mares ADMOTOS ad rabiem coitus agit.

Salmaſius finding himſelf perplex'd with theſe Mountains of Theocritus, had a mind to change them into ſomething elſe that might better agree with his Notions: He pretends therefore we ought to read ἐν ἦρι, in the Spring; and not ἀν' ὤρεα, thro' the

---

(a) μαίνεσθαι ἐπί τινι non dicitur qui alicujus rei guſtu vel hauſtu ad inſaniam adigitur, ſed qui rei ejus cujus cupiens eſt quocunque modo potiundæ ardore inſanit. Salmaſ. ubi ſupra.

(b) τῶν δὲ θηλειῶν ἀφροδισιαστικώτατον [illegible]. Incenduntur libidine ex fœminis equæ potiſſimum. Ariſt. hiſt. anim. l. 6. c. 18.

(c) Infuriatæ agitantur equæ, ſpacioque remota per loca dividuos amne ſequuntur equos. Ovid. l. 2. de arte am.

(d) Virgil. Georg. l. 3. v. 266.

(e) Horat. Od. 25. l. 1.

(f) See the Remark A.

(g) See Matthiol. upon Diſcorides, lib. 3. cap. 135.

(h) Plin. l. 10. c. 18.

(i) Idem l. 25. c. 2.

(k) I don't tranſlate θοαί, which ſignifies ſwift of foot, becauſe that Epithet is not ſuch a one as the French Tongue ought to admit of in a Verſion.

the Mountains; but by misfortune nothing agrees worſe than this Criticiſm of his with the Text of Pauſanias, where it does plainly appear, that without any diſtinction of Seaſons, the Horſes burnt with Luſt after the Statue whatever (a) time of the year it was. Laſtly, Salmaſius had no reaſon to ſuppoſe that this Statue, impregnated with the virtue of the Hippomanes, was a Mare. I know very well Pliny has ſaid it before him; but Pauſanias, who made it his principal ſtudy to examin the Monuments of Greece, and who is an Author incomparably more exact than Pliny, leaves us no reaſon to doubt that this Statue was a Horſe, ſince he every where makes uſe of the Maſculine Article when he ſpeaks of it, and employs the Feminine in the ſame place to denote a Mare (b).

VII

A Reflexion upon the relation of Pauſanias.

I ſhall not examin what credit is to be given to Pauſanias's Relation concerning the Taleſmanick kind of Virtue of this Statue; but ſhall however ſay, that the extreme fury of Luſt incident to Horſes might well enough be rais'd by a Statue without the help of any Philtre. Let us ſuppoſe them to have a Soul; could they not imagin that a Statue is the Animal it repreſents, or at leaſt that it is a very fine Statue? In the firſt caſe, why might not the ſame thing happen to them, mutatis mutandis, as to thoſe Birds who peck'd upon the Picture of a Vine? An Horſe painted by Apelles made the living Horſes (c) neigh. In the ſecond caſe, why ſhould they not be ſubject to the Infirmity many Men have been guilty of, that is, (d) to the laſcivious loving of a Statue? I confeſs it may be objected amongſt other things, that the Eyes (e) are not the ſole Guides in the love of Beaſts, as they very frequently are in that of Men; and that the Smell is the principal Vehicle of this Paſſion in the Machines of Animals; whence it follows, that a Statue is deſtitute with reſpect to them of the main Springs of Love. But the Queſtion is, Whether the skill of the Statuary might not ſupply this defect by the imitated poſture of a Mare exceſſively luſtful; and whether the Story ſo celebrated by the Greek Poets, and by Auſonius (B) after them, concerning Myron's brazen Heifer, can be douted of? Livy, more credible alone than an hundred Poets, relates that at Syracuſa a Bull perform'd the carnal act upon the Statue of an Heifer. (f) Vaccam æream Syracuſis ab agreſti Tauro qui pecore aberraſſet, initam ac ſemine aſperſam. As much has been ſaid of ſome other Animals. (g) Myronis æream buculam Taurus inſcenderet, caniculam, columbam, anatem coloribus expreſſas mares congeneres inſilirent. It muſt not be diſſembled that Livy relates this fact as one of the Prodigies of that Year, and that in point of Prodigies one cannot well depend on him. If with the Carteſians we allow Beaſts to be meer Machines, we ſhall eaſily apprehend how a lively imitation of Poſtures might have notable effects.

VIII

Cardan's faults upon the ſame fact.

Cardan (h) who doubts not of the Fact related by Pauſanias, but moreover aſſigns the beſt natural Reaſons he can for it, did not take the Male for the Female. He was ſo well ſatisfy'd that Pauſanias ſpoke of the Statue of a Horſe, that it is one of the Objections he attempts to ſolve: but otherwiſe he does not ſeem to have well examin'd the paſſage of that Hiſtorian; for he makes him ſay that this brazen Horſe was at (i) Heraclea of Elis, a Province of Peloponneſus, in a place call'd Quialten. A ſtrange complication of Blunders. For, 1. Heraclea is the name of abundance of (k) Cities, but is not the name of any one Province (l). 2. At leaſt it is certain that there was not any Province of that name in all Peloponneſus. 3. There was indeed in Elis a City or Town of this name, (m) but it was not a place that contain'd any pieces of the Treaſure of Olympia. Laſtly, This Quialten is a monſtrous Abſurdity. This in my opinion was the manner how Heraclea and Quialten came to be foiſted in: Pauſanias having been ſpeaking of ſome Gifts which the City of Heraclea upon the Euxine-Sea, a Colony of the Megarians, had conſecrated, obſerves, that over-againſt them there were others conſecrated by Phormis, &c. and that the two Horſes which this Phormis preſented to Jupiter

(B) Concerning Myron's brazen Heifer.] Myron, a Native of Eleuthera in Bœotia, made an Heifer of Braſs, which furniſh'd a fine Topick for the Poets. There are in the * Anthology near forty Epigrams upon this Subject. Auſonius has made eleven upon the ſame Theme, which are of an handſom turn; This is one of them:

Bucula († ſum cælo genitoris facta Myronis
Ærea: nec factam me puto, ſed genitam.
Sic me taurus init: ſic proxima bucula mugit,
Sic vitulus ſitiens ubera noſtra petit.
Miraris, quod fallo gregem? gregis ipſe Magiſter
Inter paſcentes me numerare ſolet.

Mr. Menage has exercis'd his Greek Muſe upon this Heifer with better ſucceſs in Father Hardouin's opinion than all the reſt. See his Commentary upon the 34th Book (h) of Pliny, where he ſays that Tzetzes has mention'd the ſame Heifer in the 194th Story of the 8th Chiliad. See alſo the Anti-Ballet, ‖ in which a Greek Epigram of Andrew Laſcaris is cited. Note, that Dom Lancelotti of Perugia liſts amongſt the Fables whatever the Ancients have ſaid of the love of Beaſts for Pictures. De gli animali, ſays he ‡, porto l'iſteſſa opinione, perche queſti non ſi riſentono al coito ſolamente per la viſta, ma per lo moto, per l'odore, e per la voce, niuna delle quali tre coſe ha la pittura, Farfalloneggi quanto vuole Plinio, Valerio, e chi chi ſia. I have ſaid in the Article Zeuxis, that he is miſtaken about other things of the ſame nature, which he has deny'd; and why may he not about theſe? However, I will cite Athenæus  [illegible] Circa Pyrenæos montes in æneam vaccam bos tanquam initurus conſcendit: pictis verò cani, columbæ, anſeri, fœminis mares ejus generis ſeſe cùm adjunxiſſent & inſiluiſſent, deſtiterunt, quoniam id fieri non poſſe cognoſcerent. Perhaps there is nothing more ſevere or ingenious in Lelio Capilupi's Cento Virgilianus againſt the Monks, than the application of one of Virgil's Verſes, which I ſhall cite below. Here follows a piece of it:

O fortunatos nimium, ſua ſi bona norint,
Non abſunt illis ſaltus, armentaque læta.
Cælati argenti ſunt, auri multa talenta,
Sacra deum, ſanctique patres, & chara ſororum
Pectora mærentum tenebris & carcere cæco
Centum ærei claudunt vectes, & ſæpe ſine ullis
Conjugiis vento gravidæ, mirabile dictu,
Religione ſacræ, non hæc ſine numine divum.
Jam nova progenies cælo demittitur alto.
Credo equidem nec vana fides, genus eſſe Deorum.

(a) [illegible]

(b) De Salmaſius? [illegible]

(c) Plin. l. 35. c. 10. Valer. Max. l. 8. c. 11. ſays it was a Mare, quo excuſabilior error equi, qui viſâ pictura equæ hinnitum edere coactus eſt.

(c) [illegible] Id eſt juxta verſionem Romuli Amaſæi. Illum invadunt nihil hercle minus furenter quàm ſi viventem pulcherrimam equam gregalem inituri adorirentur.

(d) Many Moderns have made a collection of them, amongſt others Balthazar Bonifacius hiſtor. ludicr. l. 14. c. 13.

(e) See the paſſage of Lancelot. of Perugia in Remark B.

(f) T. Liv. lib. 41.

(g) Balth. Bonif. ubi ſupra. See Athenæus cited in Remark B.

(h) De Subtilit. l. 13.

(i) In Heracles Elidis Peloponneſi Provinciis equum æneum fuiſſe narrat in loco cui nomen erat Quialten.

(k) See Salmaſ. in Plin. l. 1. c. 18.

(l) I don't deny that there were ſome little Iſlands of this name.

(m) Strabo, Pauſanias, and Stephanus Byzantinus mention it, but not Emmius in his Græcia Antiqua, nor Ortelius, nor Lloyd, nor Hofman, nor Baudrand, in their Dictionaries.

* Lib. 4. c. 7.

† Auſon. Epigr. 63.

(h) Tom. 5. pag. 113. and not 213. as it is noted in the Anti-Ballet. p. 72.

‖ Tom. 2. pag. 72. & 256.

‡ Secondo Lancelotti da Perugia Abbate Olivetano, Accademico, Inſenſato, Affidato, e Humoriſta, l'Hoggidi, overo 2. diſinganno il mondo non piggiore ne più calamitoſo del paſſato, parte 15. p. 309.

 Athen. lib. 13. pag. 605.

Jupiter were in the Altis, that is, in the Lucus, or Grove that was a Dependance on the Temple.

IX. Errors of John Baptist Porta, and of Wierus, and of the Commentary on Du Bartas.

I have seen in a French Translation (a) of John Baptist Porta's Natural Magick, a pretty long Chapter upon the Hippomanes, which I have not in my (b) Latin Edition. Pausanias's Relation is there faithfully enough reported, excepting two falshoods; one is, that Areas an Olympian mingl'd some Hippomanes with the Metal of the Statue; the other, that he made a Mare. He says that Ælian relates the same Story, but 'tis an Error. John Wierus (c) has only avoided the first of these three faults: he says that Phormis experimented the Hippomanes at Olympia, Novit vim Olympiæ Phormis Areas. Note, That Baptista Porta's Natural Magick printed in Latin at Francfort 1607. is divided into twenty Books; some preceding Editions, which the French Version cited by me went by, have but four. This Author does not say that Areas an Olympian mingl'd some Hippomanes, &c. but that Phormis the Arcadian discover'd the virtue of the Hippomanes at Olympia, Tantam in eo vim novit Olympiæ Phormis Areas. I believe Cardan occasion'd the Error of one Peter Baistuau, sirnam'd Launai, a Native of Bretagne, (for these are the Titles he lov'd to distinguish himself by) highly prais'd by la Croix du Maine. Who wou'd not be surpriz'd, says he (d), at what Pausanias the Greek Historian relates concerning the brazen Statue of an Horse, form'd by a certain Artist in Heraclea, a Province of Peloponnesus, having a cut and deform'd Tail, but perfect in all the other parts of the Body, which however the other Horses endeavour'd to leap with so much heat and transport, as to break their Hoofs by their frequent rearings upon it, whilst the slipperiness of the Brass it was compos'd of still cast them off; and notwithstanding all the blows that could be given them, they could not be driven away, but neigh'd after the Statue as if it had been ready to take Horse? Du Bartas meant to speak of the same Wonder (e) in these Verses:

> Cette jument d'airain sur qui les estalons
> Lançoient estant en rut leurs fragiles talons.

But Simon Goulart, his Commentator, has impertinently imagin'd that he treated there of Myron's Masterpiece, who made, says he, a Mare or Heifer of Brass so very natural, that the Horses ran to leap her. If he had remembred Pausanias's passage, or rather Pliny's, and consider'd that the Epigrams he speaks of in the same place don't permit us to doubt whether Myron made an Heifer or a Mare, he would have been guiltless of this little Error. See the Remark B. in the foregoing page.

X. Whether there is a fourth sort of Hippomanes.

Besides the three sorts of Hippomanes I have mentioned, there are those that discover a fourth. They ground themselves upon Aristotle's Authority, pretending that he acknowledged two sorts of Hippomanes in Mares, one that flows before the Horses approach, the other after they have allay'd their appetite by the first congress. Salmasius, (f) who finds this distinction in Aristotle, has occasion'd my attentive (g) reading the words of this Philosopher: but I have not found it there, tho' I saw in very few Lines the repetition twice over of the Remark concerning the Hippomanes. That repetition ought not to carry our thoughts to two different things: for tho' Aristotle be concise, 'tis nevertheless true that he considers the symptoms of lascivious Mares at two Essays; and the reason of his doing it is, that he particularly explains the accidents of those Mares that took Wind, if I may so speak, quæ ἐξανεμοῦσθαι, eventari dicebantur. He shews that this happen'd not to Mares who had an Horse at hand, in the place where he says that by reason of this accident the Cretans left the Mares and Stallions together: And having spoken of the Courses those took towards the North or South, to which this accident happen'd, he speaks in general of the signs by which the Mares are known to want the Horse; and as he had spoken of the Hippomanes with respect to those which do nothing but run, he speaks of it also with respect to all Mares (C) in general. I see

MARES that took Wind.

(C) He speaks of it also with respect to all Mares in general.] 'Tis thus I explain Aristotle, because otherwise he would seem to contradict himself, as may be seen by this Abstract. We see there that the Lust of the Mares is call'd a furious appetite of enjoying the Male, ἱππομανεῖν; that 'tis said also at that time that they take Wind, ἐξανεμοῦσθαι; that in that condition they depart from other Mares and Horses; that they run not towards the East or West, but towards the North or South; that they suffer nothing to come near them, except they are tir'd down, or come near the Sea-side; that then they cast out something call'd Hippomanes; that the Mares at the season of Copulation gather together; that they love Company more than before; that they move more frequently their Tails; that their neighing changes; that they cast the Hippomanes. They piss also, says Aristotle, more frequently, and sport with one another when they are lustful. I am sorry I am not clear-sighted enough to perceive much clearness and exactness in these words: But however it be, if the ἐξανεμοῦσθαι is not different from the ἱππομανεῖν, as the Species differs from the Genus, it will follow that Aristotle would teach us that lustful Mares avoid all Company, and yet that they associate with greater pleasure than before. Now, as this would be a ridiculous Contradiction, it must be concluded that Aristotle by ἐξανεμοῦσθαι meant only a kind of heat; or if it be said that this contains something common to all Mares, we must conclude it was a state that preceded the maturity of the Passion, and what Aristotle a little after calls ὥρα τῆς ὀχείας, tempus coitus. But this utterly overthrows Salmasius's System, I mean that Explication he is so fond of, and repeats more than once in another page, after having justly censur'd the great Man who thought that Aristotle's ἐξανεμοῦσθαι ought to be understood of the Mares that were impregnated by the operation of the Wind. 'Tis certain that Aristotle does not speak of this, and there would be no Objection against Salmasius, if he had contented himself to affirm that this Greek word signifies the refreshing one's self with the Wind suck'd in with open mouth: but he is unfortunate in what he adds to this Interpretation. Ἐξανεμοῦσθαι, says he (h), est eventilari & vento excepto hiante ore refrigerari, quod equæ faciunt ubi ad satietatem initæ non fuerint. Ex eo quidem interdum & concipere autores tradidere, idque in Hispania tantum. Non tamen ἐξανεμοῦσθαι significat ex vento concipere. Loquitur Aristoteles de iis equabus quæ admiserint sed non satis, nec meminit eo loco conceptionis ullius quæ ex vento fiat. Note, that Salmasius is mistaken in saying that this has been said only of Spanish Mares, since the same thing has been said of those of Cappadocia (i).

Let

(a) Printed at Roan 1626. in 12°. The Chapter upon the Hippomanes is the 27th of the 2d Book. It is found amongst Weckher's Secrets, as coming from Baptista Porta.

(b) Of Francfort 1607. in 8°.

(c) De Lamiis, c. 38.

(d) Treatise concerning the Excellence of Man, printed at the end of the Theatre du Monde by the same Author.

(e) Sixth day of the first Week, v. 826.

(f) Differentiam itaque constituit Aristoteles inter hoc ἱππομανὲς quod equæ tum ejiciunt ubi semel salita fuerint, estque simile [illegible], & illud ἱππομανὲς quod illis defluit ab inguine eo tempore quo maris cupiditate ardescunt nec dum admiserunt. Salmas. Exercit. Plin. pag. 941.

(g) Arist. Hist. animal. l. 6. cap. 18.

(h) Salmas. Exerc. Plin, pag. 943.

(i) See St. Aug. de civit. Dei, l. 21. c. 5.

I see no ground from hence for multiplying the Species: but yet if they were (a) multiply'd, Salmasius would still be mistaken, in pretending that Aristotle's distinction respects the non-enjoyment of some Mares, and the enjoyment of some others far from Satiety, and that those which air'd themselves were of the latter sort. This is by no means Aristotle's Doctrine; on the contrary, we should infer from his Discourse, that they totally abstain'd, since, besides the Reflection he makes upon the Conduct of the Cretans, he says in express words, that they wander'd from Company, and never suffer'd themselves to be approach'd till they were tir'd, or came near the Sea (b), and that then they cast the Hippomanes. (c) [illegible] .... [illegible], &c. Cum vero ita affectæ fuerint, currunt relicta societate ... nec appropinquare quemquam patiuntur donec vel defatigatæ desistant vel ad mare deveniant; tum aliquid emittunt, &c.

(a) Father Hardouin in Plin. t. 3. p. 111. acknowledges two kinds of it.

(b) The Geneva Edition, 1605, and the Paris, 1629, put Marem instead of Mare.

XI. Remarks upon Hofman and Furetiere.

Mr. Hofman (d) speaks of the Hippomanes according to Salmasius's Ideas, as well upon the passage of Theocritus as that of Aristotle; and therefore we need only refer him to what has been said above. Only let me be allow'd to tell him, that if he well consults Pausanias, he will not cite him (e) de Arcad. nor find there that Phormis dedicated a Mare in Olympia; for that Author expresly says at the end of the fifth Book, that Phormis consecrated two Horses and two Coachmen. As to Mr. Furetiere, I have no considerable faults to tax him with; I only observe, that he has been a little unexact in citing Pliny only for the Hippomanes on the Forehead of Colts. This naturally leads us to this fallacious thought, that Pliny speaks of no other Hippomanes. I could wish also he had cited Aristotle, whose Authority is justly greater than Pliny's. As to the other sort of Hippomanes, he shou'd not have cited Servius, but Virgil; Servius being only his Interpreter, without saying whether the fact be true or false. Neither Cæsar de Rochefort's Dictionary, nor Castellus's Lexicon Medicum copiously enlarg'd by Bruno, say any thing of the Hippomanes.

(c) Arist. ubi supra.

(d) Vol. 3. p. 162. & Vol. 4. p. 495.

(e) The Book concerning Arcadia is the 8th; that wherein he speaks of Phormis is the 5th, and the first of the two wherein the Author treats of Elis.

I will

The PRETENDED fœcundity of those Mares.

Let us not part with this Subject without observing that 'tis very probable Aristotle has divided into two parts what was told him concerning the heat of lustful Mares, rejecting what he thought incredible, and preserving the rest. But he would perhaps have done well to have rejected all those rambling Courses from one Pole to the other; to have rejected them, I say, as well as the (f) Conceptions produc'd purely by the Winds. Virgil, invested with all the Privileges of Poetry, would detract nothing from the Tradition; he has feign'd that the Mares sought the Winds, and found them endu'd with a prolifick Virtue. These are his words:

Continuoque * avidis ubi subdita flamma medullis
Vere magis (quia vere calor redit ossibus) illæ
Ore omnes versæ in Zephyrum stant rupibus altis,
Exceptantque leves auras: & sæpe sine ullis
Conjugiis vento gravidæ (mirabile dictu)
Saxa per & scopulos & depressas convalles
Diffugiunt, non, Eure, tuos neque solis ad ortus
In Borean, Caurumque aut unde nigerrimus Auster
Nascitur & pluvio contristat frigore cælum.

From this Description it may be collected that it was the West Wind that impregnated the Mares, and that they rested upon some rising ground to receive it, turning their Heads or Tails to it, (for that's a point that has not yet been clear'd by the Criticks, there being Reasons on both sides) after which they ran as if they had been mad, either from North to South, or from South to North. These Fictions are pardonable in the Poets; but we can't tell how to pardon (g) Varro, Pliny, Solinus, Columella, and some others, their reciting as a certain fact, that in Portugal the Mares produce Colts without any other Sire than the Wind. The Historian Trogus Pompeius (h) has much ridicul'd this. Andrew Resendius (i) a learned Portuguese, relates, that there is no proof of it in his Country. Francis Fernand of Corduba (k) has confuted the same Story with Arguments, Authorities, and Experience.

This shews that St. Austin has not well chosen all the Examples he has oppos'd to the Incredulity he observ'd among the Heathens, relating to the Mysteries of the Gospel: for, amongst other things which (l) he says were not doubted of, but yet were unaccountable to Reason, he speaks of the Mares impregnated by the Wind. It was not a fact that all the Heathens generally agreed in. We find it exploded in Justin, with the approbation of (m) Leonard Coquæus. Eustathius Bishop of Thessalonica looks upon (n) it as a Fable, and every body at present laughs at it (o). But after all, a better Reason might be given for it in the new Hypothesis that all Creatures proceed from an Egg, than from the Courses the Mares affected from one Pole to the other. If Aristotle, who appears not to doubt of this fact, would have exercis'd his Principles of Physick upon it, he would have found himself more work than Descartes did in the direction of the Loadstone. Mr. Descartes himself might here have been nonplus'd for want of a Gutter-work of insensible parts, such as would be necessary to explain the virtue of the Southern and Northern Winds upon Mares that had imbib'd the Western. However it be, I don't think that the present Managers of the Breed could supply Aristotle with Memoirs to corroborate those he has publish'd. Who would believe, for Example, that there was at Opûs (p) a Stallion which could do his Office at (q) Forty years old, tho' he wanted assistance to raise his Fore-legs? Pliny (r) has well copy'd this passage of Aristotle, when he says, Opunte & ad quadraginta durasse aiunt adjutum modo in attollenda priore parte corporis. But Solinus has perform'd the part of a very bad Transcriber in these words: Notatum (s) etiam advertimus Opuntem nomine equum ad gregariam venerem durasse in annos quadraginta. This Horse belong'd to an Inhabitant of Opûs, and Solinus has taken the Name of the Place for that of the Horse. (t) Salmasius has not suffer'd this blunder to escape him. The omission of the need he had to be help'd up by the Fore-feet, which was the principal rarity of the fact, deserv'd an equal Censure.

What I have said of St. Austin is applicable also to Origen and Lactantius, who have endeavour'd to evince the immaculate Virginity of the Mother of JESUS CHRIST by the Examples of Conceptions without the use of a Male, story'd by the Heathens. (u) Quod si animalia quadam vento aut aura concipere solere omnibus notum est, cur quisquam mirum putet cum Spiritu Dei cui facile est quidquid velit, gravatam esse Virginem dicimus? The Fathers made any shift, & ex omni ligno Mercurium. If they had only alledg'd this as an Argument ad hominem, they could not be blam'd; but they affirm it as a certain fact. I don't know whether they cite what Pomponius Mela relates of some Savage Æthiopian Women who became Mothers without the concourse of any Man: (x) Super eos grandis littoris flexus grandem insulam includit, in qua tantum fœminas esse narrant, toto corpore hirsutas, & sine coitu marium sua sponte fœcundas: adeo asperis efferisque moribus, ut quadam contineri ne reluctentur vix vinculis possint. Hoc Hanno retulit, & quia detracta occisis coria pertulerat, fides habita est. You see that Hanno is quoted; but he is falsified, for he has not said that the Women of that Island were without Men: (y) Non recte Hannoni adfingit, insulam hanc habitari à feminis solis, & quidem sua sponte facundis, cum Hanno contrarium dicat: utriusque enim sexus homines in ea insula fuisse scribit, quamvis multo plures feminas.

(f) Many Authors, as Fr. Modius Nov-antiq. lect. Ep. 74. Dausquieius in Silium Italicum l. 3. pag. m. 134. falsly father upon Aristotle these conceptions.

* Virg. Georg. l. 3. v. 271.

(g) See Jo. a Wower de Polymath. c. 11.

(h) Justin. l. 44. c. 3.

(i) Antiq. Lusitanicar. l. 1.

(k) Didascal. multipl. c. 48.

(l) De civ. Dei l. 21. c. 5. See the last paragraph of this Remark.

(p) A Town of the Epicnemidii Locri.

(q) Arist. hist. anim. l. 6. c. 22.

(r) Plin. l. 8. c. 42.

(s) Solin. c. 45.

(t) Exercit. Plin. p. 936.

(u) In lib. adversus Celsum.

(x) Lactan. Divin. instit. lib. 4. c. 12. p. m. 246, 247.

(y) Pompon. Mela lib. 3. c. 9.

(z) Isaac. Vossius in Pompon. Melam ib. Gaspar à Reies quem vide in Elys. jucund. quæst. campo, quæst. 41. n. 13. & seq. knew not Mela's error

---

(m) In his Notes on St. Austin de civit. Dei. (n) In Iliad. lib. 20. v. 225. (o) Harduin. in Plin. tom. 2. pag. 212. Note, that some believe it is Lewis Carion, Observat. l. 1. c. 17. & l. 2. c. 4.

VII. What is to be judged of the Hippomanes.

I will not conclude this Article without observing what Aristotle has so judiciously determin'd concerning the Caruncula on the Forehead of the Foal. He says, * That it is said to grow there, but that the Dam takes it off by licking, and that the Stories concerning its Virtue are to be reckon'd Fables invented by Women and Enchanters. Nevertheless this Virtue has been talk'd of in all Ages, and 'tis easie to observe that the persuasion which first obtain'd of its being serviceable as a Philtre, was grounded upon the Story that if the Mare did not swallow it, she did not nourish her Young. An ancient Poet, cited by Apuleius, reckoning up Philtres, calls this hinnientium dulcedines, which has a notable Analogy to the Matri præreptus amor, which I have cited from Virgil. But as Philtres rather produc'd Fury than Love, thence the Hippomanes came to be consider'd as a baneful Drug. Juvenal says that Cæsonia, by employing it upon her Husband Caligula, caus'd that mad Rage which prompted him to so many Crimes.

Et furere (a) incipias, ut avunculus ille Neronis
Cui totam tremuli frontem Cæsonia pulli Infudit.
Ardebant cuncta & fracta compage ruebant,
Non aliter quam si fecisset Juno maritum Insanum.

- - - - - - - - - -

Hæc poscit ferrum atque ignes, hæc potio torquet,
Hæc lacerat mixtos equitum cum sanguine patres,
Tanti partus equæ, tanti una venefica constat.

The World is not yet recover'd of this Superstition; for we find in a (b) late Romance, which is a faithful and pleasant Copy of the Conduct of many persons, some Parisian Ladies spending a Night in watching a Mare, to catch somewhat they were made to believe a Foal brings into the World on his Forehead, and to dress it with certain Ceremonies, which in their Opinion become a wonderful and irresistible Philtre. This Philtre was to be given subtilly to the Soldiers, and to the Captain himself, if there was occasion for it, and immediately both the Captain and Soldiers were to run through the streets, and offer to do all that should be desir'd of them. The Towers and Gates seem'd, if I may so speak, to be ready to fall of themselves, to give liberty to whomsoever the Ladies pleas'd. If we consult the Journal of the German Naturalists, we shall be (c) fully convinc'd that the Colts are foal'd with the Hippomanes on the Forehead; for they give us the Anatomical Figure and Description of one of them, which had been brought to a Physician call'd Mr. Raygerus. He had often desir'd to see some of them fresh, having before seen some that were dry: He experienc'd that the Mare gave Milk to the Colt as usual, tho' that part was taken from it; so that if on one hand he lends Assistance to the Ancients, he discredits them much on the other. His Hippomanes is much greater than Aristotle or Pliny represent it.

(a) Juven. Sat. 6.

(b) Avantures de Henriette Sylvie de Moliere, part 3. pag. 9. Dutch Edit. 1674.

(c) Annus ... Decur. ... impressus 1678. pag. 54. & seq.

* [illegible] Quod Hippomanes vocant, hæret quidem fronti nascentis pulli, ut narratur, sed equæ perlambentes abstergentesque id abrodunt: quæ autem de hoc fabulantur, figmenta muliercularum & professorum carminis incantamentorum esse credendum potius est. Arist. hist. anim. l. 8. c. 24. pag. 699, 700.

A DISSERTATION
UPON
The DAY.

I. Reflections upon the distinction of the Natural and Artificial Day.

Every body knows that the Word Day has several acceptations, and that there is the Natural Day, the Artificial Day, the Civil Day, the Astronomical Day, &c. I could make many Observations to shew that in the definition of these sorts of Days there's hardly ever any perfect exactness; but as the particularizing these Punctilio's would carry me too far, I shall omit more of them than I shall mention.

'Tis somewhat strange that Authors are not agreed in the definition of the Natural and Artificial Day. Some (d) define the Natural Day, the Time betwixt Sun-rising and Sun-setting, and the Artificial Day, the space included in twenty-four hours. Others define (e) the Natural Day, the space of Time the Sun takes to circuit about the Earth, and the Artificial Day, the Time from Sun-rising to Sun-setting. I confess that this difference lies more in the Terms than in the Thing it self, and that we are not oblig'd to give Words the same Sense that others give them; but it would be very convenient for Readers if the signification of certain Terms was fix'd, and was not converted from White to Black in passing from one Volume to another. Besides, they who define the Day, the time from Sun-rising to Sun-setting, fix upon the least common signification; for, for one Cosmographer who measures each Day's extent by it, in treating of the difference of Climates, (in which 'tis certain that the Sun's rising and setting only is regarded) there are millions that understand by the Word Day all the time that the Horizon is enlightned. This appears by these common Phrases, At break of Day; It was already Day; It was Day still; whereby the Twilight of Morning and Evening is manifestly denoted. 'Tis therefore exposing the Works of the Dogmatists to the Complaints and Censures of most People, to say the Revolution of the Sun comprehends the Day and the Night; but but by the Day is meant the time from the riſing to the ſetting of the Sun, and by the Night the time from its ſetting to its riſing. It would be better to ſay that the Day is all the time we enjoy the Light (a) of the Sun, and that the Night is all the time we are depriv'd of it. Beſides, it is not very reaſonable to call that the Artificial Day, which Nature makes by the real or apparent revolution of the Firmament about the Earth: this Title much better agrees to that part of the revolution in which the Artificers are employ'd in their Labour; and even this teſtifies that the Artificial Day ought not to be terminated by the riſing and ſetting of the Sun, it being not by that the Workmen can meaſure their Labour in the frigid Zones, nor always in the temperate ones.

(d) Father Labbé Chron. abridgment tom. 1. and before him Censorinus as to the Natural Day, to which he opposes the Civil.

(e) Coutel p. 13. of the Eccles. Calculat. Furitiere, & before them Gassendus Instit. Astron. l. 1. c. 22.

In all things elſe we ſee that thoſe things which borrow their Names from Nature, have quite another generality than thoſe that take them from Art: It is therefore more reaſonable that the Natural Day ſhould be that which is uniform throughout the World, and that the Artificial Day ſhould be that which varies according to places, than to eſtabliſh the contrary. Let us ſay then, that the Word Day in its moſt proper ſignification ought to be taken for the time betwixt the Sun's leaving the Meridian, to its returning to it again; that this is the Natural Day, which comprehends (A) Twenty-four hours; that in this ſenſe the Days are not greater nor leſs numerous under the Poles than under the Æquator; that they are equal in all parts of the Earth; but as the moſt excellent parts of a whole have often the privilege of bearing the Name of the whole without addition, and by way of preeminence, it happens that where the Natural Day is compos'd of two parts, one dark and the other light, this, as the more noble, has been ſimply nam'd the Day; whereupon we think we have right to ſay, that in the temperate Zones each Day is longer or ſhorter than the preceding. This was doubtleſs the Origin of this ſecond ſignification of the Word Day. Order requires, that they who treat theſe Subjects dogmatically, ſhould characteriſe it by the addition of ſome Epithet, of Artificial for inſtance. But in ordinary ſpeech (b) there is no need of any addition, in order to conceive that the Day excludes the Night. However, this is not univerſal; there are popular Phraſes in which the Day is taken for Twenty-four hours; as when we ſay, that a Child liv'd but four days, that a Voyage or a Marriage continued but fifteen days; and thus of ſeveral other ways of ſpeaking, in which 'tis plain that the Day excludes not the Night.

II The Gauls and other Nations reckon'd by nights.

The old Gauls gave the Night the preference over the Day, calling the time of Twenty-four hours, which makes up the Night and Day, a Night. (c) Caſar informs us of this, and attributes the Origin of this Cuſtom to an ancient Tradition of the Druids, that the Gauls deſcended from Pluto. The Germans alſo (d) practis'd the ſame thing of reckoning by Nights. Vigenere in his Notes (e) upon Julius Caſar pretends there are ſtill ſome Remains of this Practice. As for the Germans, ſays he, they ſtill obſerve this way of ſpeaking, and commonly ſay, vor drey necthen, before it be three Nights, inſtead of before it be three Days; and Sant Johans nacth, Sant Martins nacth, Saint John's Night, Saint Martin's Night, for Saint John's Day, St. Martin's Day. The French alſo in many places of this Kingdom uſe the ſame way of ſpeaking, (f) anuict (to Night) inſtead of to day. Nicolas Bergier, Advocate in the Preſidial of Rheims, adds to theſe Remarks of Vigenere, That the French who came from Germany, and ſeiz'd on that part of Gaul which is ſituate betwixt the Rhine and the Maeſe, and were call'd Ripuarian French, uſed the word Night to ſignifie the Natural Day of Twenty-four hours, as is manifeſt from theſe words in one of their Laws: Si infra Ducatum eſt ſuper 14 noctes auctorem ſuum repræſentet. He ſpeaks thus (B) in his Poſthumous Traité du Point du Jour. The

(a) Take in alſo the Light that precedes the Sun-riſing & ſucceeds the Sun-ſetting.

(b) Vulgus omne à luce ad tenebras diem obſervat. Plin. l. 2. c. 77.

(c) Galli ſe omnes à Dite patre prognatos prædicant idque à Druidibus proditum dicunt. Ob eam cauſam ſpatia omnis temporis non numero dierum, ſed noctium definiunt, & dies natales & menſium & annorum initia ſic obſervant ut noctem dies ſequatur. De Bello Gall. l. 6.

(d) Nec dierum numerum ut nos, ſed noctium computant. Sic conſtituunt, ſic condicunt: nox ducere diem videtur. Tac. de Germ. c. 11.

(e) Pag. ...

(f) ... are ſome places ... night ... to come.

OF THE duration and equality of Natural Days

(A) The Natural Day, which comprehends Twenty-four hours.] What I ſay here of the duration of Twenty-four hours, ought not to be rigorouſly underſtood: For, if the Aſtronomers and Coſmographers don't deceive us, when they unanimouſly affirm that the ſpace of an hour correſponds to the aſcenſion of 15 Degrees of the Æquator upon the Horizon, the Sun's return to the Meridian will require ſomewhat more than Twenty-four hours. In effect, if the time employ'd in the aſcent of 15 Degrees of the Æquator upon the Horizon be an hour, this Circle will require Twenty-four hours for its revolution: But when that is finiſh'd, the Sun is not yet return'd to the Meridian, becauſe it has a peculiar motion which advances it near a Degree Eaſtward, whilſt the Æquator performs its circuit; and therefore the Sun muſt be carry'd near the ſpace of a Degree Weſtward, to make it anſwer to the ſame Point of the Firmament or the ſame Meridian it anſwer'd to the day before. You ſee then an Aſtronomical Day a little longer than Twenty-four hours. But moreover, an Aſtronomical Day is not perfectly equal to another, becauſe the obliquity and excentricity of the Eclipticſk hinder the Sun's making the ſame progreſs each day towards the * Eaſt. It advances 59 minutes $\frac{1}{3}$ each day, by the middle-motion; when it goes ſwifter, it advances near 2 minutes more; when it goes ſlower, it proceeds near 2 minutes leſs. Nature loves Variety even in the Heavens. The † Ephemerides which Mr. Dalence printed at Paris ſome years ago, ſhew a great deal of variety in the proportions of the increaſe of Days For Example: The 5th of January is longer by two minutes than the 4th; the 6th is longer by two minutes than the 5th; the 7th is longer by two minutes than the 6th; but the 8th is no longer than the 7th. All the other Months are full of the like inequalities, both in the increaſe and decreaſe; and even the increaſes of January don't anſwer the decreaſes of July. It is certain, ſays the Author of ‖ thoſe Ephemerides, that November and December jointly are longer by half an hour and half a quarter than September and October, tho' there be on both ſides an equal number of days, viz. 61.

(B) In his Poſthumous Traité du Point du Jour.] I call this Book Poſthumous, becauſe the Edition of Rheims, 1629. which I uſe, ſhews, that John Bergier, Attorney in the Preſidial of Rheims, printed this Work of his Father deceas'd. The Epiſtle Dedicatory to Mr du Lys, Advocate General in the Court of Aides of Paris, is from the ſame hand, and ſhews that this Magiſtrate was the Author's Patron. The Abbot de Marolles ſpeaks of another Patron in his Alphabetical Catalogue of Authors, who had preſented him with their Works. Claude du Buiſſon, ſays he, declar'd to me the particular eſteem he had as well as I for Nicolas ‡ Berger of Rheims, who has written the Book of the great Roads of the Empire, and who had gone farther had he not been prevented by Death at

OF BERGIER ...

* See Gaſſendus inſtit. Aſtron. l. 1. c. 22. In the Abridgment of Mr. Bernier to. 4. p. 82. there is 56 minutes inſtead of 59.

† The title is, The knowlege of the Times, or the Calendar and Ephemerides of the riſing and ſetting of the Sun, &c. They began to be publiſh'd in 1679.

‖ Pag. ...

‡ He has committed the ſame fault as the Authors of the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library, who thrice put it Berger for Bergier. La Mothe le Vayer in the Hexam. Ruſtic. p. 25. where he cenſures two faults, calls him Berger.

The Printers have foisted some faults into it, as Nipuarian instead of Ripuarian, in the foregoing passage. Mr. du Cange in his Latin Glossary has cited many Laws, Capitularies and Formularies, which shew that not only the French, but also the Northern People, Saxons, English, &c. have reckon'd by Nights. He shews also, that 'tis a most ancient Custom among the Arabians. See Cluverius chap. 33. of the first Book de Germania Antiqua.

III. ...f the ...vil and Astrono- ...mical Days.

Censorinus (a), as I have already observed, divides the Day into Natural and Civil, and calls the Natural Day the time betwixt the two Suns, if I may be allow'd that vulgar expression. The Civil Day he takes for the space of Twenty-four hours, or for an entire Revolution of the Heavens. Bergier (b) affirms that Pliny and Macrobius hold the same division of the Day, calling the Civil Day that of Twenty-four hours, and the Natural the only time of Light, commonly of Twelve hours, or a little more or less. But I have not found this division in either of these two Authors, or in (c) Aulus Gellius, follow'd upon this Head by Macrobius; but only that they give Twenty-four hours to the Civil Day, and relate the different beginnings it had in different Countries. At present most Writers consider the Natural and Civil Day as different, not in duration, but only as the Natural Day in a general manner signifies an entire revolution of the Sun about the Earth, and the Civil Day contains in particular the choice that certain Nations have made of Two Points, to denote the beginning and end of this revolution. Some have chosen the rising or setting of the Sun; others rather Mid-day or Midnight. Hence the Civil Day of some Countries has been included betwixt two risings or settings of the Sun, or betwixt two Noons, or two Midnights. The ancient Romans follow'd this last way, which is at present almost universal in Europe. These different sorts of the Civil Day cannot be perfectly equal, neither to one another, nor to the true Natural Day, because of the continual mobility of the moment of the Sun's rising or setting: but as this inequality is not sensible from one day to another, it is not regarded. And therefore the Nations whose Civil Day reaches from one rising or setting of the Sun to another, no less take the Day for the space of Twenty-four hours, tho' the Sun every day advances or retards his rising and setting, and that unequally, according as it is near the Equinoctial or Solstitial Points, than if they comprehended it betwixt two Noons. Whence it appears, that I had reason to say that the Natural Day in its most proper signification, is the time betwixt the Sun's quitting the Meridian to his recovering it again. It is by this the Astronomical Day is measur'd; for the Astronomers begin the Day at the instant the centre of the Sun touches the Meridian Line, and end it at the instant the same centre comes to touch it again. This is the least unequal Day possible to be found, and that by which all Astronomical Tables are calculated. An (d) Author whom I have cited tells us, That the Astronomers begin their Natural Day at Noon the preceding Day; that for instance the second Astronomical Day of the month of May begins at Noon the first day of May, and ends at Noon the following Day, which is the second of May, the Noon whereof commences the third Astronomical Day. For a greater Illustration he should have added, that tho' all the Astronomers begin their Day at Noon, yet they still are divided; some, as (e) Ptolemy, and Tycho-Brahe, begin their day where Alphonso King of Castile ends his. They, for example, begin the first day of January at Noon the first day of our Civil Year: Alphonso begins the first day of January at Noon the 31st of December; so that the first day of the Year to him is the last day of the preceding Year for the others.

(a) Censorin. de die natali c. 23.

(b) Preface to the point of Day, citing Pliny l. 2. c. 77. and Macrob. l. 1. Saturn. c. 3.

(c) Aulus Gellius l. 3. c. 2.

(d) Bergier Pref. to the point of Day.

(e) See Father Labbé ubi supra.

IV. ...gier's ...ok upon ...e Point ...f Day.

Since I have cited this little Work of Bergier, it will not be amiss to explain the Subject of it; it will serve for a Connexion or Introduction to the rest of this Article. I say then, that this Author intended to determin a Point upon the Earth, in which the Civil Day should begin in such a manner, that the same day (Monday or Tuesday for instance) should be carry'd successively throughout the World, and begin again at Twenty-four hours end in a place that should immediately touch the Point given. By this means there would be two places upon the Earth perfectly contiguous, one whereof should have the beginning of Monday, whilst the other had but the beginning of Sunday; whence it would happen, that each Day would last 48 hours, not with respect to a certain place, but to all the Earth; each Holy-day, for Example, would be kept 48 hours together. The Point Bergier chose for the beginning of the Day, was that wherein the 180 and 181 Degrees of Longitude touch one another in Mercator's Maps: and thus one of the three Subadibes under the Æquator, cut into two by the 180th Degree of Longitude, would first receive the Day; Sunday would begin there in the Western-part, whilst Saturday's Noon would be under the first Meridian, and the same Sunday would not begin in the Eastern-part till Monday began in the other. 'Twas the Pope's business, according at Grignon, at President Belliévre's, who honour'd him with his Friendship. I wonder that in the Edition of 1629. there is no mention of any preceding Edition; for there is in the Catalogue * of Thuanus's Library, the Archemeron, or a Treatise concerning the beginning of Days, by Nic. Berger, 8° Paris, 1617. We also find there † the History of the High-ways of the Roman Empire by the same Nic. Berger, 4° Paris, 1622. It is a very Learned Work, which Father Bacchini, a Benedictin of the Congregation of Mount Cassin, one of the Authors of the Journal of Parma, has put into Latin ‖, and adorn'd with Notes. The Author deserv'd a more honourable Citation than that of la Mothe le Vayer, who says, ‡ One Bergier, who after his Treatise of the High-ways, has written another little Discourse concerning the Point of Day, has bethought himself, &c. It appears by Thuanus's Catalogue, that this other little Book did preced, and not follow the History of the great Roads. Mr. Henninius  has translated this History of the great Roads, and publish'd it with learned Notes in the 10th Volume of the Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum. Mr. Oudinet †† and the Abbot du Bos sent him some Notes, most of which were taken from the Copy in which the Author had written many things. There's a fine Elogy of our Bergier in Father Commire's Latin Poems.

---

 Professor at Duisburg.

†† Keeper of the King of France's Cabinet of Medals.

cording to this Author, to make this new Eſtabliſhment, and to appoint that, for the future each Holy-day, and each Day of the Week ſhould begin when it is Midnight upon the confines of the 180 and 181 Degrees of Longitude; prohibiting all the Catholicks in the World to begin their Day before the Midnight which follow'd that which was under that place. It is plain, that after ſuch an Order they who live under the 181 Degree of Longitude would not be at the end of Lent till 24 hours after thoſe under the 180 Degree had kept Eaſter-day. This would be very advantageous to them, if their appetite to Meat was very preſſing; for they would have but a little way to go, to be in a Country where they might eat it by the Laws of the Church. I need not advertiſe the Reader that this advantage was not put into the Account by Bergier; it would rather be (C) an Objection againſt him: But this is the principal advantage he finds in this new eſtabliſhment of the Point of Day, That there would be no more diſputes about the celebration of Holy-days, when in going round the World, either thro' the Eaſt or Weſt, People ſhould not reckon the ſame Day of the Week with the Inhabitants of the Countries they would land in.

V They who circuit the Globe get or loſe a Day.

There needs no explaining this; for no body is ignorant that they who make the Tour of the World Eaſtward, find themſelves older by a day at their return than thoſe who ſtaid at home; the contrary whereof is experienc'd by thoſe that travel round the World by the Weſt. They who return'd to Seville on board the Victory, which had carry'd Magellan as far as the Moluceques, after the Diſcovery of the Straits to which this Great Man gave his Name, found by their Journal (a) that the day of their arrival was the 6th of September, but at Seville they reckon'd the 7th. If they had gone from Seville to the Moluceques, and then to the Straits of Magellan, they would have found the 8th of September to be reckon'd at Seville, when they counted the 9th. Whence it is eaſie to underſtand, that there may be three Calculations at the ſame time in the ſame place. For if two Veſſels arriv'd at Seville which had circuited the Globe, one by the Eaſt, and the other by the Weſt, it is certain that Saturday the 3d of September at Seville would be Sunday the 4th in the computation of the firſt Veſſel, and Friday the 2d according to the Journal of the other Veſſel. Let each continue their own reckoning, and you'll quickly find three Chriſtmas or three Eaſter-days, &c. in one and the ſame Week, and it would be no longer a Jeſt to bid people ſtay till the Week when two Sundays come together. I add, That a Day is got or loſt, not only with reſpect to thoſe we find in our return home, but alſo to thoſe we meet in the way. Thus the Hollanders who diſcover'd the Strait le Maire in 1616. being arriv'd at the Moluceques the 31ſt of October, found there the 1ſt of November, and (b) found themſelves oblig'd to skip from Monday to Wedneſday, that they might be conformable to their Country-men ſettl'd in thoſe Iſlands. 'Tis thus alſo, that according to the Relation of Joſ. Acoſta, the Portugueſe and Spaniards who penetrated into the Eaſt-Indies, the one by the Weſt, and the other by the Eaſt, eſtabliſh'd there a different Account of Days; ſo that when it is Sunday at the Iſle of Macao, diſcover'd by the Portugueſe, it is but Saturday at Manille in the Philippines, diſcover'd by the Spaniards; and yet it is but about 100 miles from the Iſle of Luſſon, in which is the Town of Manille, to the Iſle Macao. This was the reaſon (c) why Alphonſo Sanctius, arriving from the Philippine Iſlands to this Iſle the 2d of May in his Account, and going to read in his Breviary the Office of St. Athanaſius, found that this was not the Goſpel for the Day in that place, and that the Calendar there noted the 3d of May, which is the Invention of the Holy Croſs. His ſurprize was probably greater than his perplexity, for it is no great matter to paſs from one Day of the Breviary to another; and if Cardinal (d) de Pellevé unthinkingly carry'd from the Day of St. Paul's Converſion to that of St. Polycarp, could have remedy'd this diſappointment by the help of the Breviary, he would have harrangu'd leſs ill than he did at the opening of the States of the League. Nicolas Bergier had no reaſon to ſay (e) that they who travel round the World enter upon a different calculation of the Day but two ways; one is, when they compare their Computation with that of the City in which they finiſh their Circuit; the other is, when they compare it with the Calculation of thoſe whom they meet upon the Oriental Ocean, and who make the Tour of the World another way. 'Tis certain, that this Eoick Sea, as he calls it, has nothing particular in this, abſolutely ſpeaking, ſince in whatever other part of the World two Veſſels meet, making the Circuit of the Earth, one from the Eaſt and the

(a) Francis Drake and Tho. Candiſh, Eng. men, & Oliver Vander Noort of Utrecht, who made the Tour of the World thro' the ſame Straits, have experienc'd ſuch a miſreckoning of a Day.

(b) See W. Schouten's Journal.

(c) Id quidem Alphonſo Sanctio contigit, qui cum è Philippinis ſolviſſet, venit ſupputatione ſua, in inſulam Macaum poſtridie Kalendas Maij. Recitaturus autem preces horarias in honorem S. Athanaſii, deprehendit ibi incolis Inventionem S. Crucis celebrari, quintum enim Non. Maij faſti inibi exhibebant. Idem illi, alio etiam tempore, ſed contrario calculo huc redeunti evenit. Joſeph Acoſta Hiſt. Ind. Occ. l. 3. c. 23.

(d) Id multum Cardinali Pellævæo incommodavit qui Orationem meditatus fuerat occaſione ex converſione B. Pauli ſumpta, quam tranſlato inſequentem diem conventu vix ac ridicule ad B. Polycarpi feſtum accommodare conatus eſt. Thuanus l. 105. ad ann. 1593.

(e) Ubi ſupra pag. 118, 119.

INCONVENIENCIES of the Line of the Point of Day.

(C) Rather be an Objection againſt him.] Thoſe who cenſure a Project, and by their Adverſaries Anſwer find themſelves obliged to reply, ſo diligently collect whatever is unfavourable to the adverſe Cauſe, that we may reaſonably wonder that the Sieur Michalor has not objected to Erycius Puteanus, that his propos'd Circle made way for a thouſand abuſes And indeed, through the whole extent of the Hemiſphere, it would be the eaſieſt thing in the world to elude the Laws of the Church concerning the Days of Abſtinence. A man might come off with one ſlender Dinner a week, if he would recur to the Sophiſtry of the Spaniards Medianoche. Going from home on Friday at midnight, he might find himſelf a moment after in a Country where it is Sunday, and where without violating the Canons of holy Mother Church, he might feaſt upon Capons for his Supper. He might leap over all the Vigils by making but a Journey of two or three ſteps under another Meridian, where it is Holy-day; and if he would not celebrate any Holy-day, no not Sunday it ſelf, (I ſpeak of Holy-days that come not two together) it were only paſſing from one Meridian to another, which would coſt but little time: for tho' one Celeſtial Degree anſwers to the ſpace of many Leagues upon Earth, yet 'tis certain that each Degree is contiguous to another; ſo that the Degree where the Day begins muſt neceſſarily touch another Degree where the ſame Day begins not till Twenty-four hours after. To prevent therefore the paſſing in a ſmall time from the place where it is unlawful to eat Fleſh, to another where it is lawful, it ſhould be order'd that the Eaſtern part of one of theſe two Degrees, and the Weſtern part of the other, ſhould remain uncultivated and uninhabited. Who knows not, that any one that would continue the Carnaval with impunity to the firſt Sunday in Lent, needs but go to Milan, where there is no obligation to Faſt till four days after Aſhwedneſday?

the other from the Weſt, they would find the difference of a Day betwixt their dates. There's no reaſon therefore on this Account to place the Point of Day on the Eaſt Sea rather than in another place.

After having repreſented the inconvenience which Bergier would prevent by his Line of the Point of Day, I think I ought to ſay in a few words, that it might be ſo conveniently remedied without this, that it is no wonder his Counſels had no effect. There are three Calculations at once in the ſame place; ſome reckon Saturday, others Sunday, and others Monday. Well! order the whole matter to be regulated by the date of the Inhabitants, and every Feaſt to be kept by their Calendar, and you remove all this diſorder. This Remedy would fail but very rarely, in caſe that thoſe who had taken the Eaſtern Road, and others who had taken the Weſtern, ſhould meet in a Country wherein there were no Chriſtians; then they could not conform to the date of the Inhabitants, and each would ſtand perhaps upon his own Calculation. This diſorder would be a very little one.

VI. Eryius Puteanus has written about the Point of Day.

I pretend not however to leſſen this Author's Merit: Such Propoſitions are ſeldom imagin'd but by men of a ſtrong Genius and of a great Capacity; and beſides, there is in the Tract I ſpeak of, an Erudition which alone might recommend it. If the Author had liv'd long enough, he would have complain'd, perhaps, of a Profeſſor of Louvain who is celebrated for his numerous Writings, and who a long time enjoy'd the place of Juſtus Lipſius. To ſpeak freely, Eryeius Puteanus does not ſeem to have dealt fairly with Nicolas Bergier. This Profeſſor publiſh'd a little Piece in 1632. with the Title of Circulus Urbanianus, ſive linea [illegible] compendio deſcripta, qua dierum civilium principium hieraticum in orbe terrarum hactenus deſideratum conſtituitur. The Year following he publiſh'd a larger Book, to defend the firſt againſt the Attacks of one Michalor, a Canon of Urbino. Theſe two Pieces in their moſt material points are wholly built upon Bergier's Thoughts; for 'tis no conſiderable difference to place the Line of the Point of Day not in the Meridian oppoſite to that which is the firſt in Mercator's Atlas, as Bergier does, but in the Meridian oppoſite to that of Rome, as Eryeius Puteanus does. This, I ſay, would not ſecure a Man from the imputation of a Tranſcriber and a Plagiary; and yet Puteanus ſays not a ſyllable of the Treatiſe of the Point of Day, printed in 1617. and 1629. but ſets up for a Man who was the firſt Mover in this Subject. Wherein we may admire the good Fortune that preſides over ſome Writings. That of Bergier, which was incomparably more an Original than the other, and which we may ſay had been at all the charges, lay grov'ling in the Duſt, whilſt Puteanus's was enrich'd with the Elogies of many Learned Men, with the Compliments of a Nuncio, of a Cardinal Patron, of another Cardinal, and of the Pope himſelf, and came out with thoſe glittering Ornaments. Bergier might have well ſaid, Hos ego verſiculos feci, tulit alter honores.

VII. How two contiguous places may differ 24 hours as to the beginning of the Day.

It may here be ask'd me, whether there be any part of the World where the Day takes its riſe; and whether it was poſſible for two contiguous Countries to differ 24 hours with reſpect to the Point of Day? I anſwer, firſt, That a Circle has, abſolutely ſpeaking, neither beginning nor end; and therefore the Day depending upon a circular motion, can neither begin nor end, but with reſpect to certain places; ſo that it is always beginning and ending in different reſpects, and is always in all the parts of its duration, at Midnight, at Mid-day, at Five, Six of the Clock, &c. with relation to different Countries. Secondly, It was hardly poſſible, otherwiſe than by a Divine or Human Inſtitution, for two contiguous Countries to differ more than a moment upon the Point of Day; for in whatever point of the Eclíptick we ſuppoſe the Sun to have been created, it muſt neceſſarily illuminate 90 Degrees round at once, which is half the Earth; and the Day muſt begin at once upon that half, naturally ſpeaking. If the Queſtion was about the Civil Day, that is, If all men ſhould agree not to begin the Day till a certain hour, or if God had commanded them to begin it preciſely in that manner, I confeſs there might be two Countries entirely contiguous, one of which would not enter upon Sunday till the other left it. But in this caſe a Day muſt be expung'd, and this Sentence of Excommunication, or rather of Annihilation, ſhould be pronounc'd againſt it:

Que ce jour ſoit raié des choſes avenües,
Jupiter le commande aux trois filles chenües,
Qui tiennent regitre des tems.

But ſtay a little. Chance, without the aſſiſtance of any Divine or Human Order, or the nulling of a Day, may make two contiguous Countries differ 24 hours as to the beginning of the Civil Day. For which we need only ſuppoſe two Ships, which in circuiting the Globe, one Eaſtward, and the other Weſtward, meet, for inſtance, in the mid-way: Suppoſe their Crews ſhould ſettle, one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide of an Iſland, and each ſhould preſerve their own Account of Days; Sunday will begin on one ſide, whilſt beyond the Line of Partition they'll only be beginning Saturday. This is what the Portugueſe and Spaniards experienc'd towards Japan.

VIII. ...till expreſs'd himſelf ... ſaying those who go round the World ... tho' the Eaſt, loſe a day.

Now ſince they who ſail round the Globe Eaſtward think they are at Saturday, whilſt they reckon only Friday at the place they return to; and ſince thoſe who make the contrary circuit reckon no more than Friday, whilſt their Countrymen are already at Saturday, 'tis plain that the former gain a day, and that the latter loſe one. And yet there have been Writers who have ſo confounded their Ideas upon this Subject, that they have aſcrib'd the loſs to the former, and the gain to the latter; this (a) Erycius Puteanus did. Michalor, his Critick, did not let this fault eſcape him; the conſequence of which Cenſure was, That Puteanus, who might eaſily have come off by an honest confession that he had used improper terms, obstinately maintain'd his expression. Had it not been better to have frankly confess'd his fault, since the Dispute turn'd only upon Words? By no means; after so many years Professorship in Justus Lipsius's Chair, after so many Books publish'd, must he confess that he has spoken wrong? No, God forbid he should do so much injury to his Rank. He therefore chose rather to have recourse to all the Cavils his Wit and Reading could suggest to him, than to submit to condemnation. He found himself the worse for it; his Adversary returning to the charge, unmercifully scann'd him even to the least Punctilios, and both as to this part of the Dispute, and the pretended Necessity and Uses of the Line of the Point of Day, he perfectly routed him, and remain'd sole Master of the Field of Battle. His first Critical Book is in Latin, but the Reply is in Italian.

(a) Ab ortu in occaſum navigantibus dies unus uno circuitu in lucro eſt, ab occaſu in ortum unus interit. And a little after, Demet tranſeuntibus quantum unus in occaſum ambitus addit; addet quantum unus in ortum eripit.

I believe that Erycius Puteanus forgot but one Sophism, which would have been, to maintain that on one hand 'tis a loss to bring an Additional Day from a long Voyage, and on the other hand 'tis a gain to return to one's Country with a Day decreas'd. In point of Gallantry, this Thesis would pass for a Principle; and there's no loss more considerable than the getting of many years, nor a gain more important than the having liv'd less than another. The generality in this point follow the Lovers Style, looking upon the superiority they have over their Neighbour in number of years, to be a disadvantage. But as much as such sort of Cavils might avail in a Dispute, where the business should be only to jest, they would be as useless in a Dispute like that of Michalor and Puteanus: For the Question betwixt them was not to know whether those who make the Tour of the World by the East or West, grow older or younger by Twenty-four hours than those who stay at home. 'Tis manifest that the Age of both is precisely what it would be if they had not stirr'd from their Houses; and that the only reason why one counts less Days than the other, is, that the Days of those who travel Westward contain above Twenty-four hours each, and the others contain less. I confess that if two Men born the same day began at fifteen years of age to travel round the Earth, one by the East and the other by the West, and made thirty turns each year; the first would believe himself 54 years old, when the latter would think he was only 48. But this difference, which in case of Marriage, if it was real, might render the latter of these Travellers the more eligible Match, would be a meer Chimera in this Case: They wou'd be strangely impos'd on who should rely upon that advantage. Western Voyages are no Fountain of Youth, that remove Old Age; and, properly speaking, a man neither gets nor loses a moment whatever way he sails to circuit the Globe. It's however true that Erycius Puteanus us'd a most improper expression; for in short, it would be a very ill way of speaking, to say that we get Years by reckoning as the Christians, and lose them by counting as the Mahometans. 'Tis just the contrary, since a Thousand of our Years answer to a Thousand thirty two Mahometan Years, as is manifest, since the Year 1622. was the 1032. of the Hegira (a). This Example removes all the difficulty, because the same reason that lessens our Years with respect to those of the Mahometans, lessens also the number of the Days of those who make the circuit of the Earth Westward. That reason is, that the Years of the Hegira being Lunary, are shorter by eleven Days than ours.

IX. Authors who have committed the same fault.

Puteanus is not the only person who has been mistaken in this. I say nothing against (b) Wendelin, whom he calls the Hipparchus of our Age, and who uses a (c) Phrase which seems to import that he believes the Eastward Circuit gives a Day less, and the Western gives a Day more; for he (d) pretends that if the Pope follow'd Puteanus's Counsel, the Rubricks of the Breviary would shew the Western Travellers the Day they should expunge, and the Eastern that which they ought to intercalate. Does it not seem that the intercalary Day ought to belong to those who have fewer Days than the others? How then comes this learned man to give it to the Orientals, who are already at Tuesday, when the others are but at Sunday? I decide nothing upon this point; there will ever be a Subterfuge by the equivocation of exemptilis and intercalaris. I will content my self therefore with saying, that in one sense Wendelin's expression is not exact. The Reader will own it, if he compares the Pope to a Father, who would reduce the Profit his three Sons had made to an equality, the first by staying at home, the second by circuiting the World Westward, and the third by doing it Eastward. Let us suppose that the Principal of the first is advanced from 10 to 15, that of the second from 10 to 14, and that of the third from 10 to 16. To make all their Gains equal, is it not necessary to take from the third and add to the second? And yet, according to Wendelin, the Pope must do the quite contrary. The Inhabitants of Seville who remain'd at home pass'd from the 10th to the 15th day; the Western Travellers from the 10th to the 14th; and the Eastern from the 10th to the 16th. We must, says Wendelin, take one day from those that have but 14, and give one to those that have 16. Let him rather say one is to be taken from these, and given to those; but the way of giving it is to reckon it to their Account as if they had furnish'd it: For is it not giving, to quit Arrears? Once more let us say nothing against Wendelin, for his expression is good in a certain sense. Take a Day from the Western Travellers, and they will leap from Sunday to Tuesday; oblige the Eastern to intercalate their Tuesday, that is, to count it twice together, and you'll take away from them a Day, and so the Western and they will arrive the same time at Friday.

X. Bembus criticis'd.

A man might more easily make work for Peter Bembus, who speaking of the Return of Magellan's Companions, says, That they found the Years of their Voyage to be grown longer by a day; but that if they had sail'd Eastward, they would have doubtless

(a) The time they call the Mahometan Æra, or Epoch, which began on the 16 of July 622.

(b) Godefridus Wendelinus, much esteem'd by Gassendus who had been his Disciple. See Val. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 194.

(c) In appellatione circuli Urbaniani.

(d) Ut inter Breviarii Rubricas illa quoque cum primis necessaria lex emineat, quæ dierum sacrorum navigantibus in Occidentem exemptilium, contendentibus in Orientem intercalarium formulas præscribat.

leſs found them grown ſhorter by a Day: For, as he goes on, the farther they had advanc'd, the farther they would have gone to meet the riſing Sun; and therefore, after they had finiſh'd their Tour about the World, they would have ſeen that Luminary riſe a day ſooner than when they ſet out. (a) Semper enim tanto citius Orienti ſoli occurrens quanto plus itineris poſt ſe circumvectus reliquiſſet, emenſo demum totius terræ globo die uno prius ſolem ſibi Orientem, quam cum viæ ſe dederat, profecto habuiſſet. Is not this an admirable reaſon? This Hiſtorian proves their Year who circuit the Globe Eaſtward to be ſhorter by a Day, becauſe it contains a Sun-riſing more. But is not this a proof that it contains 366 Days, and conſequently that it is longer by a Day? Note, That the Year being equal, that is, 365 times 24 hours, &c. both for thoſe that ſtay at home, and thoſe that go round the Globe by Eaſt or Weſt, is yet divided into more or leſs Sun-riſings; into 365 for thoſe who ſtay at home, into 366 for thoſe that return by the Weſt, and into 364 for thoſe that come home by the Eaſt. This is all the Myſtery. Michalor has not cenſur'd Bembus for this bad way of Reaſoning, but only for his reverſing the change which a circuit about the World gives to the Year. Bembus did not perſiſt all his lifetime in his Error, but expreſs'd himſelf as he ſhould do in the Italian Tranſlation he publiſh'd of his Latin Hiſtory, and inſtead of theſe words, Uno ſibi annos illos die longiores factos . . . . uno breviores die redeunti ſanè fuiſſent, he put, Quelli anni tutti e tre eſſere d'un giorno fatti minori (b) . . . . d'uno piu lunghi ſtati ſarebbono. Bergier did not perceive (c) this prepoſterous ſenſe of Bembus; for, far from reproving him, he cites him in Latin to confirm the ſame Tranſpoſition he had been making, ſaying, that the time of Magellan's Companions was lengthened by a Day, and that if they had return'd by the Weſt, it would have been ſhortned by a Day (d).

XI. lius Cæ- r Scali- r criti- ſed.

Theſe perplexities will the leſs ſurprize us, when we find the Great Julius Cæſar Scaliger to be a little confus'd. Going to criticiſe Cardan upon this Queſtion, (e) Why the Stars ſeem to Sailers to follow them, and the Shoars to remove from them? he repreſents to him, That ſo common a Subject as that ought to be ſeaſon'd with ſome Novelty, ſuppoſe with this, That in failing towards the Eaſt the Stars ſeem to go before us. Whereupon he relates what the Portugueſe and Spaniards experienc'd in circuiting the World, and gives this reaſon for it: The Spaniards, ſays he, go to China, and from thence to the Cape of Good Hope, following the Courſe of the Sun; the Portugueſe, on the contrary, ſail againſt its Courſe; and therefore (f) the days grow longer to the Spaniards, both becauſe they accompany the Sun, and enjoy the Light longer, and alſo becauſe the Sun retrogrades, and comes to meet them: but it leaves the Portugueſe behind it at Noon, who for their part turn their backs to it, and in the morning it flies from them when they expect its riſing, for it riſes later. What can be more falſe than to ſay that the Sun goes before thoſe who ſail towards the Cape of Good Hope, in the Road taken by the Spaniards? What falſer ſtill than to pretend that the Days grow longer to thoſe who meet the Sun? 'Tis the very reverſe of it, for it brings them a new Day ſo much the ſooner. What can be more falſe in the third place, than to ſay that the Sun flies from the Portugueſe in the morning, and that they ſee it riſe later? How is this poſſible, ſince the readieſt way to meet by a circular motion, is to go to China by the Eaſt as the Portugueſe did, and to go thither Weſtward as the Sun did, after having left them behind it? In fine, what can be falſer than to pretend that if the Sun riſes later, the Civil Day muſt be ſhorter? (g) Michalor has only cenſur'd Scaliger's third fault, except that he has farther obſerved that there was no need of conſidering whether the Portugueſe had as good a Wind as the Spaniards. And indeed, ſince Scaliger did not conſider the ſwiftneſs of motion, celeritatem motus nunc non intelligo, what ſignified the Winds to him (h)? Let the Portugueſe finiſh their round in three Week, and the Spaniards take a thouſand for it, the difference of Days will thence be neither greater nor leſs.

XII. Many ults of liny in few ords.

The Ancients were not abſolutely ignorant that the Artificial Day muſt be longer to a man travelling Weſtward, and that the Sun ſets ſooner to the Eaſtern parts of the Earth than to the Weſtern: But if we were to judge of their Knowledge by Pliny's, we ſhould conclude they had no manner of Notion of this.

In the firſt place, this Naturaliſt (i) ſays, That it has been often experienc'd that the Beacons kindl'd on high Towers at the ſixth hour of the Day to give notice of the approach of Pirates, have been ſeen even into thoſe places where it had been three hours Night. A man needs not above three Lectures on the Globe, to ſee that this is a perfectly abſurd Fable. This ſixth hour of the Day with moſt Interpreters ſignifies Noon. Alciatus will have it to mean Sun-ſetting, and by this means he bates Pliny two thirds of his ſpace; but to no purpoſe, ſince he leaves him ſtill too much: For to make it three hours of Night in one place, whilſt the Sun ſets in another, you muſt allow 45 Degrees difference of Longitude betwixt theſe two places. Now each Degree of Longitude under the Æquator comprehends 25 French Leagues, of 2500 Geometrical Feet each; the Fires then in queſtion muſt have been perceiv'd at the diſtance, not indeed of 1125 Leagues, but at one differing from it only in proportion to the ſpace which ſeparates the Parallel ſpoken of by Pliny from the Æquator; notwithſtanding which abatement, this diſtance would contain ſome hundreds of Leagues. Judge what this would be, if Pliny's ſixth hour was Mid-day; the diſtance would then be triple, and a Watch-light would have been ſeen at a greater diſtance than one third of the circumference of a good large Parallel. This had been a more wonderful thing than what the ſame Author ſpeaks of in the 22d Chapter of the 5th Book, where he ſays that Mount Caſius is ſo high as to be enlighten'd by the Sun three hours before day (k). And yet Father Harduin will not allow of Alciatus's modification, but will have theſe Beacons to be kindled

(f) Longiores ita dies fiunt Hiſpalienſibus. Tum quia ſolis comites ſunt, lux eis productior eſt: tum quia retrocedit ſol atque in eorum occurſum abit. Luſitanos autem & relinquit à meridie non ſolum averſus ſed etiam averſos atque ab eis mane refugit cum ejus exortum, expectant ſerius enim oritur. Jul. Cæſ. Scal. exercit. 86. de ſubtilit.

(g) Antapocriſi, part 1. p. 44.

(h) Non eadem celeritate æquis tamen ventis Luſitani atque Bæthici parem marium tractum metiuntur. Scal. ib.

(i) In queis prænunciativos ignes ſextâ horâ diei accenſos, ſæpe compertum eſt tertiâ noctis à tergo ultimis viſos. Plin. l. 2. c. 71.

(k) Cujus excelſa altitudo quartâ vigiliâ orientem per tenebras ſolem aſpicit. Id. l. 5. c. 22.

) Nous le Pour. le p. 131. s Pariſ. ers. in Bergier vre l. 5. g. 218. ell.

) I have ed this alian as find it in Michalor.

) Ubi pra, pag. 98. 199.

) Theſe alſive preſſions ght be ctified by ying that oſe who turn me Weſt- ard find, t their ar, but at of eir Coun- y, a day rter; & oſe who turn by e Eaſt d it in e man- r a day nger.

)Cardan amine , 14. de Subtil. but does not ex- min either here or in the 12th Book c. 62. uoted Erycius uteanus who did t know hat the oks de Subtilita- e are not divided into Chap- ers) the matter which Pu- teanus aſ- cribes to died at Noon, and pretends to have (a) clear'd all the difficulties of this paſſage. He finds no Subject of Criticiſm in all this Chapter. Note, That this paſſage of Pliny concerning Mount Caſius labours under difficulties. Ariſtotle has ſaid as much of Caucaſus; but ſome (b) Learned Men maintain that there is no Mountain in the World from whence the Sun may be ſeen if he be four Degrees below the Horizon. According to this Aſſertion, the Sun itſelf plac'd upon the top of a Mountain, could not be perceiv'd above an hundred Leagues diſtance. How then was it poſſible to ſee Pliny's Fires? Father Hardouin, upon the paſſage where Mount Caſius is mention'd, affirms that Cabeus has very well ſhewn that Ariſtotle was right in what he relates of Caucaſus. We ſhall ſhew the contrary under the word Caucaſus, by examining what three learned and ſubtil Italians, Mazoni, Blancanus, and Cabeus, have ſaid upon this paſſage of Ariſtotle.

In the ſecond place, Pliny ſays, That Philonides, a Courier of Alexander, (c) went in nine hours from Sicyon to Elis; but in returning was forc'd to travel three hours by night. The diſtance of theſe two Cities was 1200 (d) Stadia, and the way of the former to the latter was up-hill: And thus this Courier employ'd one while nine hours, and another fifteen, in performing the ſame Journey; nine hours in going to Elis aſcending, fifteen hours in returning to Sicyon deſcending. If you ask the reaſon of this prodigious difference betwixt going and coming, Pliny will tell you that this Meſſenger as he went to Elis follow'd the Sun, but in returning to Sicyon he travell'd againſt it. But this reaſon is ſo far from compenſating the difference betwixt nine and fifteen hours, that it can't make amends for the advantage of the declivity of the Road; for to gain an hour in purſuit of the Sun, one muſt make a Stage of fifteen Degrees, and conſequently our Courier gain'd but ſomewhat under ten minutes when he travell'd 60 Leagues from Eaſt to Weſt.

Laſtly, Pliny (e) ſays, That the Reaſon before given is the cauſe that the Navigators towards the Weſt proceed farther in the Day than in the Night, even when the Days are very ſhort. See here a heap of Falſities. For, not to ſay that our Pilots, whoſe Obſervations are more certain than thoſe of the Ancients, don't obſerve that Ships go ſlower by Night than by Day, other things being equal, who ſees not that this pretended ſlowneſs cauſ'd by the Night, can't amount to the proportion Pliny gives, nor proceed from the cauſe that he alledges? Let us ſuppoſe that a Ship in full ſail Weſtward makes 80 Leagues in nine or ten hours of a Winters-day, it gains not a quarter of an hour (f); and what's a quarter of an hour in compariſon of five or ſix hours, more or leſs, by which the Winter-night exceeds the Day in the Countries Pliny had in view? Add to this, That in failing Weſtward we follow the Sun equally by Night as by Day; whence it follows, that a Veſſel ought to proceed as much in the dark as during the Artificial Day, ſince the time of Darkneſs lengthens in the ſame proportion in a Navigation Weſtward with the time of Light. The Navigations of theſe later Times have taught us, that there reigns a conſtant Wind (g) from Eaſt to Weſt in the torrid Zone; ſo that thoſe who ſail there Weſtwards have always the Wind behind them, and thoſe who ſail the contrary way have the Wind in their Teeth. This is the reaſon why a Voyage from Spain to the Weſt-Indies requires leſs time than a Voyage back again. But we muſt not believe, as the Abbot de la Roque did, (h) a Tale that (i) was laugh'd at, viz. That the Spaniards ſometimes ſail to the Weſt-Indies in twenty-four hours, but can't return in leſs than four months, have they never ſo favourable a ſeaſon. Pliny might eaſily be deceiv'd by ſuch as did not well underſtand what they had heard of the effect of this Eaſtern Wind. There's no Sea in which the Eaſt Winds are more favourable than the Pacifick; and yet the Spaniſh Veſſels which croſs it in their way from America to the Philippine Iſlands, ſpend two months and an half in making 130 Leagues a day (k). I wonder that the Commentary Variorum printed at Leyden does not enlarge upon this. There can be nothing more jejune and miſerable than what we find there upon this Subject. We find nothing in it that inſinuates any diſtruſt, except two or three words, which teach us that (l) Melichius thought the ſtory incredible concerning the Beacons of the Towers, and Philonides. But I much more wonder at the great ſimplicity of Salmaſius, who has reported (m) the ſtory of this Meſſenger with marks of approbotion, and ſo little doubted of his diligence, that he made his Journey longer than Pliny. Obſerve, that (n) Allatius relates the Doctrine of Julius Cæſar Scaliger without cenſure, and maintains Pliny againſt Milichius.

XIII. Some faults of du Pinet & la Mothe le Vayer.

I would fain know how this Chapter of Pliny has been interpreted by (o) Erycius Puteanus, who boaſts of being the firſt that underſtood it. Du Pinet has put in the Margin of his Tranſlation, That the Waves of the Sea incline more to the Weſt than to the Eaſt, and that is the reaſon of what Pliny relates concerning Veſſels ſailing Weſtward. But would not this Reaſon be as good for the Night as for the Day? I omit the fault he has committed in tranſlating theſe words, Eundem (Solem) remeans obvium contrario prætervertebat occurſu, thus, He met the Sun, which he left behind him, he went ſo ſwift. I believe that prætervertebat there ſignifies more than Father Hardouin thinks, more than offendebat; and that Pliny's meaning is, that the Courier meeting the Sun, went on and left it behind him. Which does not ſignifie that he went ſwifter than the Sun. Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer (p) alledges this Example of ſwiftneſs without finding any thing falſe in Pliny's paſſage: Nay, he obſerves that Philonides almoſt equall'd the courſe of the Sun; and yet he had been juſt computing Philonides's ſpeed to about eight Leagues an hour (q).

A DIS-

(a) Nihil opus iſthic ambagibus, ubi ſunt omnia per ſe perſpicua, luceque pleniſſima, ut vel ex interpretatione noſtra liquet. Harduinus in Plin. to. 1. p. 277.

(b) See Iſaac Voſſius in Melam p. 90.

(c) Ex Sicyone Elin mille & ducenta ſtadia novem diei confecit horis, indeque quamvis declivi itinere tertiâ noctis horâ remenſus. Plin. lib. 2. c. 71.

(d) That is to ſay 60 leagues, of 2500 geometrical paces each.

(e) Qua de cauſa ad occaſum navigantes quamvis breviſſimo die vincunt ſpatia nocturna navigationis, ut ſolem ipſum comitantes. Id. ib.

(f) To lengthen the day a hour by a progreſs Weſtward one muſt travel Degrees, which under the Æquator make 37 leagues.

(g) See V renius's Geography l. 1. c. 2 and Rohault's Phyſicks part 2. c. 1 where he aſſigns the reaſon of this Phænomeno by the mo tion of the Earth according to Copernicus*'s Syſtem: but ſee in the* Philoſophical Tranſactions the hiſtorical relation of the regular Winds made by Mr. Halley.

(h) Journal de Sçavans 167 pag. 30. Dutch edit.

(i) Ibid. pag. 57.

(k) Hall ubi ſup.

(l) It ſhou'd be Milichius, a Profeſſor of the Mathematicks at Wittemberg, who publiſh'd a Comment on the 2d Book of Pliny in 1534.

(m) Salm exercit. Plin. pag. 45. where he computes Pliny's 1200 ſtadia to 16 miles; they are but 150.

(n) In lib de menſ temp. p. 1

(o) Quem locum per Mazzonium ſuppletum, hactenus tamen non intellectum in Theoreſibus noſtris explicamu Putean. vindic. circuli Urban. Note, That Michalor maintains to him that Mazzoni, Author of a learned Apology for Dant has only cited this place of Pliny, without adding any thing to the common reading (p) Letter 28. in Vol. 10. of the edit. in 1681. Pliny is there ill cited in chap. 7. (it ſhould be 71.) of book 2. (q) 75 leagues of 2000 paces each, in nine hours.

A DISSERTATION

Which was printed before ſome Eſſays or Fragments of this Work in the year 1692. under the Title of, A Project of a Critical Dictionary, dedicated to Mr. du Rondel, Profeſſor of Philology at Maeſtricht.

It has been reviſed and corrected, but not enlarged, except with ſome Citations, and a few Notes put at the bottom of the Pages. We have alſo plac'd there ſome of the Citations which in the firſt Edition were in the Margin. They will here ſerve inſtead of a Comment. The Remark made up of thoſe Citations ſhall be mark'd with a Latin Letter; and if any thing be added to it which is not in the former Edition, it ſhall make a Paragraph, the firſt Word whereof ſhall be printed in great Letters. The new Remarks will be characteris'd with a Roman Letter, and with the Greek Δ.

SIR,

YOU will doubtleſs be ſurpriz'd at the reſolution I have taken. I have reſolv'd to compile the largeſt Collection I can of the Faults that are met with in Dictionaries, and not to confine my ſelf to this Deſign, as vaſt as it is, but to make Sallies upon all ſorts of Authors, whenever occaſion offers. What! will you ſay, a Man from whom we expected quite another thing, and rather a Work of Reaſoning than a Compilation, engages in an Enterprize which requires a much greater expence of Body than Mind? 'Tis certainly a very wrong ſtep. You undertake to correct Dictionaries; a Work that your moſt malicious Enemies would impoſe on you, had they over your Deſtiny the ſame power that Euryſtheus had over Hercules. 'Tis worſe than going to fight Monſters; 'tis attempting to lop off the Hydra's Heads; 'tis at leaſt the Task of cleanſing (a) Augeas's Stables; 'tis, in fine, the Penance that ought to be enjoin'd thoſe turbulent men who have abus'd their leiſure and the Peoples credulity, to vent under the Name and Authority of the Revelation all ſorts of Chimera's, (b) juſſit quod ſplendida bilis. I pity you. Why don't you leave this Employment to thoſe robuſt Conſtitutions who can ſtudy ſixteen hours a day without prejudice to their Health; who are indefatigable in Citations, and all the other functions of a Tranſcriber, and much more qualified to acquaint the Publick with matters of Fact than thoſe of Right?

I. The Reaſons and Deſign of this Undertaking

If theſe are your Thoughts, Sir, you are to fear leſt your Friendſhip for me ſhould miſlead you, and correct your Error by this ſincere Confeſſion of mine, that I find my Capacity very ſmall which-ever way I turn my ſelf. I confeſs, that in this Undertaking I apply my ſmall Forces by their weak part, inſtead of chooſing a Subject that might draw them out to leſs diſadvantage. But, in truth, there is no difficulty in the choice, when a man is convinced, as I am, that the difference betwixt his ſtrong and his weak parts is almoſt inſenſible. And beſides, I will tell you freely, that if I had turn'd my Pen on what you believe the moſt advantageous ſide, I ſhould have been involv'd in the alternative, either of diſpleaſing ſome perſons whom Prudence forbids to provoke, or of diſpleaſing my ſelf. Now you well know that in matter of Compoſitions the Genius ought not (c) to be forc'd, and you are ſenſible that the judicious (A) Anſwer of an ancient Greek may be variouſly apply'd to one's ſelf. And then what's the diſadvantage of not ſhewing one's ſelf on the beſt ſide? 'Tis depriving one's ſelf, perhaps, of the Praiſes one might have received. I ſay perhaps; for the Caprices of Men and Chance have a ſtrange command in this. But omit the peradventure; what would this be after all, but a privation of Praiſe, that is a meer nothing to a man who never govern'd himſelf, and at preſent governs himſelf leſs than ever by this Principle? I could wiſh that the ancient (d) Poet, who had ſo well begun to ſhew the emptineſs of Human Affairs, had carry'd his Thought ſo far as to ſay, cornea mea fibra eſt: you would here ſee the application that might be made of the three Verſes he would have left us in this caſe. If on one hand I am not ignorant that my Enterprize requires great ſtrength of Body, I conſider on the other, that natural Patience, join'd with the cuſtom of medling only with Books, of going little out of one's Study, and avoiding as the Plague the ways of thoſe turbulent men whom I have ſpoken of, who buſily thruſt themſelves into all Affairs, even thoſe of State, may ſupply a great many things.

As for thoſe Learned Men, whoſe Erudition in matters of fact is proportion'd to the indefatigable application their robuſt Complexion allows them, I declare to you, Sir, that (a) It's ſaid that Mr. . . . . deſiring one of his friends to put down upon ſome little piece of Paper the faults he obſerv'd in his Dictionary, was anſwered that it requir'd Quires & Reams of Paper, and not little pieces.

(b) Horat. Sat. 3. l. 2.

(c) See in Eraſmus's Adagia, Noli irritare crabrones.

(d) Tu nihil invita dices facieſve Minerva. Hor. de art. poët.

(a) Non ego cum ſcribo, ſi forte quid aptius exit, Quando hæc rara avis eſt, ſi quid tamen aptius exit, Laudari metuam, neque enim mihi cornea fibra eſt. Perſius Sat. 1.

(A) The judicious Anſwer of an ancient Greek.] We find it in Stobæus. * Θεόκριτος ἐρωτηθεὶς διὰ τί οὐ συγγράφει, ὅτι οὕτως ὡς μὲν βούλομαι, οὐ δύναμαι, ὡς δὲ δύναμαι, οὐ βούλομαι: Theocritus quærenti quare non ſcriberet, dixit, quoniam ut libet non poſſum, ut verò poſſum non libet. An ancient Rhetorician gave this Anſwer for the reaſon of his ſilence: What I know is not ſeaſonable to ſpeak; and what would be ſeaſonable, I don't know.

YOU will find above the words of this ancient Rhetorician, with thoſe of Stobæus, in the Remark F of the Article Ariſtarchus. And ſince that Remark will ſuffice for all the Comment I have occaſion for here, I need only refer to it, repetitions being to be avoided as much as poſſible.

that I don't pretend to uſurp their Rights; on the contrary, I only propoſe to furniſh 'em with an Eſſay, or Rough-draught, which may determine ſome of 'em to perfect this Plan, and to enlarge this Critical Dictionary with many Volumes. I am willing it ſhould be ſaid of me in this reſpect, what was ſaid to Varro upon matters of Philoſophy, That he had ſaid enough to create Emulation, but not to give Inſtruction (a). I even ſubmit to thoſe who ſhall ſay it would be a greater Favour than Juſtice in the Publick to treat me (b) according the Rule that Ariſtotle approves in one of his Writings; and I very ſincerely make the ſame Declaration as the ingenious Author of the Hiſtory of the Royal Society: In anſwer for my ſelf, ſays he (c), I ſhall alledge, that what I have to offer, ſo far from preventing the Labours of others who could adorn ſo noble a Subject, is no otherwiſe deſign'd than as thoſe ſtately Edifices us'd at firſt to be repreſented by ſome few Shadows and little Models, which are not intended to equal the principal Structure, but only to ſhew by way of Abridgment, with what Materials, how much Expence, and how many Hands it might be afterwards raiſed. I labour with the ſame intention; propoſing only to give the Sketch of a Deſign to ſuch as ſhall have the Capacity of executing it; and that they may fall to work as ſoon as may be, I will make all the haſte imaginable to publiſh my Draught, which will contain but one Folio.

II. That there are many faults in Books.

They will not want matter for larger Editions: For if this Subject can furniſh me with Materials for a large Volume, in ſpight of all the indiſpenſable Obligations that interrupt all my Time, and of the ſcarcity of Books I am reduc'd to, what will not Men of great Learning and great leiſure do, who have great Libraries at hand, if they would undertake to make Collections of this kind? They would return from all their Excurſions ſuceſsfully loaded with Booty; and no Prince, whatever care he takes for laying the Toils, and diſpoſing all things for a famous Hunting, can be more ſecure of a numerous Prey, than a learned Critick, who goes in chaſe of Errors, can be aſſur'd of a large Diſcovery of them. It would be ſomething curious, if this Work ſhould have the ſame Fate, as that of a learned Suiß, (d) entituled, Theatrum vitæ humanæ, which has been ſo often enlarged, as to grow at laſt into eight great Volumes in Folio. Doubt not but the faults of Authors would ariſe to as maſſy a bulk as this: And would a Theatre of theſe Faults in as many large Volumes, be in your opinion, Sir, leſs diverting or inſtructive than that of Human Life? Inform me, if you pleaſe, whether the Book entituled, The Hunters, which contain'd the Catalogue of Theopompus's Robberies, had not its Title founded on the Compariſon or the Metaphor of Hunting I have made uſe of? You can inform me, Sir, I ſay, when you pleaſe, there being no body that is ſo well acquainted as you are with the moſt hidden particulars of Antiquity.

We ſhall eaſily be convinc'd that there are infinite Faults in Books, if we conſider that the greateſt men are not exempt from them, and that the leaſt Critick can ſpy out a great many. How often do we find in the Contents and Tables of the moſt indifferent Books, Scaliger notatus, hallucinatio Scaligeri, and the like? Mr. Morus (e) imagin'd there was in this a ſcurvy affectation of proud Authors, who deſire to be talk'd of. This may be true; but no Learned Man can deny that Scaliger may be cenſur'd in abundance of things; for which we need no other proof than (f) Salmaſius's Works, where at every turn we find Scaliger caught in a fault. 'Tis true, he is not named, but pointed at by the lofty Title of vir magnus, vir ſummus: but all theſe great Civilities don't leſſen the reality of the Fault, when the Cenſure is well grounded. Salmaſius, who had not the ſame reaſons to keep fair with other Learned Men, exaſperated ſome of them, who reveng'd themſelves with unmerciful Criticiſms upon his Writings. He made his Defence, and attack'd them in his turn. The Battle was principally fought betwixt him and the Jeſuit Petavius, which was ſo obſtinate, as hardly to ceaſe but with their deaths. We may affirm, that they were two Champions worthy of each other, and that never Gladiators were better match'd than they: For it wou'd be unjuſt to determin the matter, by what thoſe have ſaid (g) who were Judges and Parties in the Quarrel. They were the two moſt Learned Men of France, and they might not only have enlighten'd their Age, but alſo have done it much Honour by their long Controverſies, if, to the ſhame of Learning, they had not tainted them with the exceſſive venom of their Spleen, which dictated almoſt as many Abuſes as Words. All the other Antagoniſts of Salmaſius were not capable of giving him preciſely blow for blow, I mean of diſcovering as many faults in his Writings as he diſcover'd in theirs; but nevertheleſs they made him ſenſible he was often out. Who can doubt, after this, that there is a vaſt Crop of theſe kind of Faults? Where will the Harveſt be wanting, when it is ſo plentiful in the Productions of the Scaligers and Salmaſius's; and who would be diſhearten'd with his Errors upon this conſideration?

A perſon of your Judgment needs not be put in mind that I have propos'd the Example of theſe two Great Men, not ſo much to reaſon from the greater to the leſs, as to give ſome ſort of conſolation to Authors of a ſecond Claſs, and to thoſe who, like my ſelf, are of the loweſt. The conſolation might be more effectual than the reaſoning could be juſt; for 'tis certain that Authors of the firſt rank are thoſe whom ſometimes the greateſt number of Faults eſcape: whether becauſe they are too bold in their de-

(a) Philoſophiam multis locis inchoaſti ad impellendum ſatis, ad edocendum parum. Cic. Academ. quaeſt. l. 1.

(b) Οὐ μόνον δὲ χάριν ἔχειν δίκαιον τούτοις, ὧν ἄν τις κοινώσαιτο ταῖς δόξαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἐπιπολαιότερον ἀποφηναμένοις· καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι συμβάλλονταί τι. τὴν γὰρ ἕξιν προήσκησαν ἡμῶν. εἰ μὲν γὰρ Τιμόθεος μὴ ἐγένετο, πολλὴν ἂν μελοποιΐαν οὐκ εἴχομεν· εἰ δὲ μὴ Φρῦνις, Τιμόθεος οὐκ ἂν ἐγένετο. Verùm non ſolùm illis agendæ ſunt gratiæ quorum opinionibus quis acquieſcet, ſed illis qui ſuperficie tenus dixerunt: conferunt enim aliquid etiam iſti, habitum namque noſtrum exercuerunt. Si enim Timotheus non fuiſſet, multum melodiæ nequaquam habuiſſemus: ſi tamen Phrynis non extitiſſet, ne Timotheus quidem. Ariſt. Metaphyſ. l. 2. c. 1. p. m. 645.

(c) Dr. Th Sprat Bp. of R cheſter) Hiſt. of the Royal So ciety, p.

(d) Theod Zuinger, Phyſician, Native of Baſil, dy in 158

(e) Ille omnino, qui ſatis ad famam nominis adipiſcendam putant ſi præſcribere poſſint illud: contra Scaligerum, vel Scaligeri error ... ſtenſurnec eos præcipuè tango, &c. Alex. Morus præfat. edit Scalig. in Euſebium, 1658.

(f) I don't ſpeak of the Action that Scioppius, the moſt terrible & furious of all the Criticks, brought againſt him (that would be too odious) pretending he had committed 500 falſities in a piece of 120 pages concerning the antiquity of his Family. 'Tis very certain that there are among theſe 500 Lyes imputed to him, many that are imputed with reaſon: To be convinced of it, we need only read what Scaliger and his friends anſwered, and what was replied to them.

(g) As Father Labbe in his French Chronologer, tom. 5. anno 1652. Father Denys Petau, ſays he, the moſt learned Man that was in the World, died the 11th of November, in his 70th year. Salmaſius, who had try'd his skill with him in ſome points of Grammar, impar longe congreſſus Achilli in all the reſt, died the 3d of September.

decisions, and too much addicted to new ways, or whether they yield sooner or later to the vanity of distinguishing themselves by the multitude of their Writings, or for many other reasons, which I could easily expose if I meant to characterise any one by them; but 'tis not less certain, that these Examples afford Consolation. In point of Comfort, men are rather touch'd by popular and plausible Thoughts, than by Reasonings most agreeable to the Rules of Logick. We may say then, that the Scaligers and Salmasius's ought to have the same effect as to other Authors, that Carthage had as to other Nations: (a) Post Carthaginem vinci neminem puduit; None was asham'd to be beaten after Carthage was conquer'd.

I might join Baronius to these two famous Authors, who was undoubtedly a Great Man: They who have examin'd him to write against him, were perhaps his greatest Admirers; and yet how many faults has he in his Annals? They are not reckon'd by Hundreds, but by Thousands (b). He was mistaken, not only through a Party-interest, and an Ultramountain prejudice, but even in a thousand things of no Service to the Court of Rome's Pretensions. This has been manifested as often as he has been attack'd, and very lately the Publick had an opportunity of being convinc'd of it (c) in a solid manner. Baronius seems to have taken delight in deceiving himself, and purposely to have intersp ers'd his Work with Lyes, so thick they grow every where.

III. Yet a good compilation of them cannot be made without much labour.

I am not apprehensive you should conclude from hence that there is nothing easier than to compile Faults, and that these sorts of Collections require but little time, it being but transcribing the Censures Authors have given of one another; I am not afraid, I say, that so judicious a man as you should propose to me this Argument. You know too well, Sir, that there is no Process in which 'tis more necessary to hear both Parties, than in those that commence amongst the Learned. 'Tis folly to depend upon the Observations of the Aggressors; Prudence requires we should hear the Defendants Answers and the Replies of the Aggressors. I ask no more than this; I know that the Readers patience commonly stops short of it: But in a Design like this, it is not too much, in respect of many things, to compare together four Pieces successively published; two by the Assailant, and two by the Assaulted; and I dare even say, that in some Facts this is not sufficient. It will be granted me, that there are many Censors who commit more faults than they correct (d); at least it will be own'd, that the most Learned leave room to be censur'd in their turn. This is what Casaubon has been tax'd with in respect to his Critical Work on Baronius. Some (e) have reproach'd him with this in gentle terms; others in a very extravagant manner; tho' we must own a certain fatality which caus'd this Work, very good and very learned in other respects, to do more ill than good to the Reputation of the Author. But, in short, I desire only this Example to shew that after the reading of a Critical Book, we must suspend our Judgment till we have seen what the criticis'd Author or his Friends have to say. They who think all that's censur'd by the Aggressor to be faulty, and whatever he opposes not to be good, commonly find themselves in the end the Cullies of that Writer; for 'tis manifest to them that he has condemn'd good things, and pass'd by what really deserv'd condemnation, and that he himself has been guilty of many Blunders. An Author in other respects very sensible of Censure, will turn Critick upon himself, when he can hope to mortifie his Censors by it, by shewing them they were ignorant that such and such things deserv'd reproof. I would give you instances of this, but that I am satisfy'd they are well known to you, with the Reflection naturally resulting from it: which is, that a man chooses rather to do himself mischief, provided it redound to his Enemy, than do himself any good that might turn to his Enemy's advantage. Now, as the Fate of the Censor and the Apologist is sometimes the same, that is, that neither of them do see but part of their Adversary's defects, and do commit faults respectively in their turn, we see the necessity of pursuing them through the whole progress of a Dispute in the attempt of making such a Collection as this: For it ought to consist only of Faults averred and certain, as are, for instance, those upon which the animaverted Authors pass Sentence themselves, either expresly or by their silence, and those which they are disabl'd from defending but by notorious Absurdities. Not that I deny there are Faults which the first Censure brings to conviction; so that if I should resume the Metaphor of Hunting I used before, I ought to say, that indeed those who pursue the Faults of Authors, frequently find the Beast already slain, or upon his last Legs; but sometimes also they find one that puts them on a wrong scent, or avoids the blow, or even still vigorously defends himself, tho' wounded in an hundred places. The Cavils suggested to criticis'd Writers by vanity and a false shame, make the Application of the Metaphor but too just. But this is a proof that the Art of Transcribing is not sufficient to set a man up for this Hunting, and that the Edifice will be of no little cost, notwithstanding the plenty of Materials. Let me add farther, That of all Dictionaries there is none more difficult than this. In labouring upon others, we meet with abundance of things ready prepar'd in the preceding ones, which cost only the taking them; and as many others that want but a little alteration. Whatever we find good, is good Prize. But all this is of no use to me: what I find bad, is the only thing that can serve me, provided I know how to rectifie it.

You have seen a Reflection, supply'd to me by the reading of some of those Disputes, that contain a succession of Answers and Replies, &c. See here another arising from

---

(a) Florus ... 2. c. 15.

(b) Baron. Annales in quem ... divi Blondellus mille castigavit ...ntis, aliquando proditu...ris quibus erant exemplaris sui praetexuit: quod exemplis are suo redemptum bea...te proceres Amstelodamenses Bibliothecae publicae inferri curaverunt. Super haec vero & ea quae ab aliis animadversa sunt, quae subnotavimus etiam nos justum fere volumen implerent. Alex. Morus ubi supra. Holstenius could shew 8000 falshoods in Baronius, and prove them by the Manuscripts of the Vatican. See Patin lett. 164. p. 17. tom. 2. edit. 1691.

(c) By the Critica historico-chronologica of Father Pagi, printed at Paris in fol. in 1689. and by the Exercitat. Sam. Basnagii Flottemanvillei printed at Utrecht in 4° in 1692.

(d) Saepe in judicando majus est peccatum judicii quàm peccati illius de quo fuerat judicatum. Amb. in Psal. 50.

(e) Mr Godeau for instance, in the Preface of his Hist. of the Church: Casaubon, says he, who was a good Scholar, should have treated Baronius with more civility, he who never names Scaliger without the title of Divine, and content himself with censuring the things he believed him mistaken in, without attempting to make him pass at every turn for a man that had no good Learning. If he had engag'd in a carier as long as his, we should have seen whether he would not have made false steps. His Exercitations have produc'd others. Just subject of Censure has been found in his Censures, by which it appears that in such subjects there's nothing but may be defended and opposed with an almost equal probability, especially as to the Dates of Times.

the ſame Fountain. After the reading of ſome Animadverſions upon a Book, we think our ſelves undeceiv'd in many things, which were taken for true in reading it. Hence we paſs from the Affirmative to the Negative. But if we happen to read a good Anſwer to this Critical Piece, we ſeldom fail, in reſpect of ſome things, to return to our firſt Affirmation: whilſt, on the other ſide, we proceed to the Negation of ſome things which we believ'd upon the credit of the Animadverter. We experience a like revolution of Thoughts, when we come to read a good Reply to the Anſwer. Now, is not this likely to caſt the greateſt part of Readers into a continual diffidence? What can eſcape the ſuſpicion of falſhood with reſpect to thoſe who have not the Key of the Sources in their hands? If an Author advances things without citing the places he takes them from, he leaves room to believe that he only ſpeaks by hear-ſay; if he cites, 'tis fear'd that he unfairly relates the paſſage, or underſtands it ill, ſince we ſeldom fail in reading Animadverſions to find a great many ſuch Faults in the Book that's cenſur'd. What muſt be done then, Sir, to remove all ſubjects of diſtruſt, whilſt there are ſuch a great number of Books that were never anſwer'd, and ſuch a great number of Readers who have not the Books containing the ſequel of theſe Literary Diſputes? Were it not to be wiſh'd there was a Critical Dictionary in the World, to which recourſe might be had, to be aſcertain'd whether what we find in other Dictionaries and in all ſorts of other Books be true? This would be the Touch-ſtone of other Books; and you know a man ſomewhat nice in his Language, who would not fail to call a Work of this nature, The Inſurance-Office of the Republick of Learning.

Thus you ſee in groſs the Idea of my Project. My deſign is to compoſe a Dictionary, which, beſides the conſiderable Omiſſions of others, ſhall contain a Collection of Faults concerning each Article. And you perceive, Sir, that if, for inſtance, I had accompliſh'd a Collection under the Word SENECA, of all that is falſly attributed to that famous Philoſopher, there needs no more than to conſult this Article to know what we ought to believe concerning what we read about Seneca in any Book whatſoever: For if it was a falſhood, it would be noted in the Collection; and whatever is not put down there as falſe, might be look'd upon as true. This ſuffices to ſhew, that if this Deſign was well executed, the reſult would be a Work moſt uſeful and moſt convenient to all ſorts of Readers. I well underſtand, methinks, what ought to be done for the perfect Execution of this Enterpriſe; but I am much more ſenſible of my incapacity to execute it: And therefore I confine my ſelf to the producing only a Specimen, and leave the Continuation of it to perſons of requiſite Abilities, in caſe it be thought that this Project, rectified where-ever it ſhall be neceſſary, ſhall deſerve to employ the Pens of the Learned.

V. Why theſe fragments are publiſh'd beforehand, and their character.

But as I have foreſeen that my Specimen will be of extent ſufficient to engage me in a moſt painful task; and beſides, as I am very dubious of the method of executing this Project: do you know, Sir, the reſolution I have haſtily taken; which is, to hazard ſome Pieces of my Draught, and to ſend them out as the Forlorn-hope to ſcour the Country, ſound the Fords, and get Intelligence of the Enemy. If they make an unſucceſsful Sally, and return not with good News, I will take a Stoical Reſolution of giving my ſelf Repoſe; if the Succeſs be otherwiſe, I ſhall proſecute my Deſign. Thus you ſee what obliges me to ſet out with this little Forerunner. Whatever Deſtiny it meets with, it will afford me the opportunity of giving publick Teſtimonies of my ſingular Eſteem and Friendſhip for you; and if any thing be capable of diſturbing me for its ill Succeſs, it will perhaps be the conſideration that it was unworthy of your Patronage.

In the mean time I'll intruſt a little Secret with you; which is, that for the conſtruction of this Prelude I have been ſo far from publiſhing the beſt Fragments of the Critical Dictionary, that I have choſen thoſe that I moſt ſuſpected. 'Tis not hard to conjecture the reaſon of my Conduct, ſince common ſenſe teaches that the ſafeſt way of prognoſticating the future Fate of a Book, by feeling the Pulſe of the Publick, is to take the Specimen we expoſe from the worſt part of the Piece, rather than from the beſt. Beſides, when we deſire to profit by the Reader's Advice how to guide our ſelves better in the execution of a Project, we ought eſpecially to lay before the eyes of the Publick the Parts that are of the moſt doubtful goodneſs. I have therefore choſen the Pieces I moſt miſtruſted, or which contain'd each in its kind the moſt ſenſible Irregularities, as you would call a long Train of Reflections, a Digreſſion reſembling a Diſſertation in form, &c. I like the ſimplicity of a Plan; I admire its uniform and unperplex'd execution; and in this I place the Idea of Perfection. But when I come from the Theory to the Practice, I find it difficult to govern my ſelf by this Idea of Perfection. A mixture of ſeveral Forms, a party-colour'd Variety, and not ſo much Uniformity, are much my Talent.

I fancy this falſe Taſte is an effect of my Lazineſs: I would have the ſame Book to ſatisfie my curioſity upon all the things it leads my thoughts to, and I don't love to be oblig'd to paſs from Book to Book to find this ſatisfaction. As it is natural to judge of others by our ſelves, I imagin we do the Reader a ſignal pleaſure when we ſpare him the trouble of going out of his place, and ſearching in another Book for ſome little Explications he may deſire. This will immediately poſſeſs you with fears that this Book will be ſtuff'd with Parentheſes all over: But take courage; for, for their ſakes who love not Interruptions, I will take care to diſengage the Text from acceſſory Obſervations, which I ſhall throw into the Margin, and to the end of each Article, in favour of thoſe who deſire to know immediately the Dependances or Relations which connect things to one another. To refreſh the Readers, I will take care now and then to give them ſome gayer Touches, without abuſing the Privilege allow'd to theſe ſorts of Works, of expreſſing one's ſelf naturally; nothing is more neceſſary than ſuch paſſages in a Dictionary, which is naturally a dry and fatiguing Book. I heartily wiſh that theſe were all the bad ſides of it; but there are others more diſcouraging, ſince there is no Work that is judged of by ſo bad Principles as this. You find many Readers complaining that they meet with common things in it; what then would they have? nothing but exquiſite Learning, and what they knew not before? If ſo, it would not be ſuch a Book as it ought to be, that is, for every body's uſe and comprehenſion.

I refer my ſelf to you, Sir, who can definitively judge of every thing relating to Books: Would it be reaſonable to exclude from this Dictionary the Cenſure of a Fault, under pretence that this Fault is incapable of miſleading the great Doctors, however it be ſpread in the Works of a great many Writers? Doubtleſs you'll not be of this opinion: Every Falſhood that's diſpers'd in many Books may deceive a great many people, and that is a ſufficient reaſon to note it in a Critical Dictionary: And for this reaſon the Faults of the firſt Editions may be taken notice of, tho' they have been corrected in the ſecond; for how many are there who make uſe of the firſt Edition all their life, without ever conſulting others?

Have I not reaſon to fear that by thus giving you the Character of this Work, you ſhould aſk me whether this be the way of acquitting my ſelf of my Obligations to you; and whether I am not aſham'd to dedicate a Book to you (A△) loaded with the faults of the Latin Country, and an heap of Ordures of the Republick of Learning? I am as fully perſuaded as any man living, that nothing ought to be dedicated to you but a Collection of fine Thoughts, and Curioſities of Learning; and that the Preſent might be perfectly worthy of you, it ought perfectly to reſemble the Writings you have publiſh'd: Am not I then very much in the wrong to deviate ſo extravagantly from this Model, and without any reaſon; and even in quite different Circumſtances to recur to Catullus's Expedient, and put his Menace in practice?

(a) Ad librariorum
Curram ſcrinia, Cæſios, Aquinos
Suffenum, omnia colligam venena,
Ac te his ſuppliciis remunerabor.

But, whatever may be ſaid of it, I am certain, upon mature conſideration, that if my Rhapſody deſerves not your Patronage, 'tis not for the reaſon I have alledged. I ſhould think it a much more paſſable Preſent, if it was compos'd of a far greater number of Lyes; and I ſhould not deſpair of procuring it your whole approbation one day, if I had a Noſe as ſagacious for the Falſities of Authors, as a Poet of your acquaintance boaſts he had in other reſpects (b).

It would be time to conclude this long Letter; but I have ſome difficulties to clear up, which will ſtay me ſome time longer.

VI. Anſwer to ſome Objections; 1. That this Book may create Enemies.

Firſt, Sir, the liberty I have taken to gather into heaps the Errors ſcatter'd in divers Books, may be thought a notable piece of raſhneſs: Is not this to create a vaſt number of Enemies on purpoſe? In attacking the Ancients, we bring upon our hands their numerous Partiſans among the Moderns; and when we cenſure the latter, we expoſe our ſelves to their own reſentment if they are living, or to that of their Family if they are dead. Now the reſentment of thoſe Gentlemen is no little one: They are reputed to be an extremely ſenſible, impatient, and vindictive Race of Men; and one would think their Relations think themſelves oblig'd to perpetuate, after their death, the blind love they had for their Productions. As for the Intereſt the Moderns take in the Reputation of the Ancients, I can't better repreſent it than by the paſſage I cite, in which (c) la Mothe le Vayer is angry with Balzac, who had criticis'd an Anſwer of Pompey.

In

(a) Catull. Epig. 14.

(b) Namque ſagacius unus odoror, Polypus an gravis hirſutis cubet hircus in alis Quam canis acer, ubi lateat ſus. Horat. Epod. Od. 12.

(c) In truth I confeſs to you, that ſo unjuſt a treatment of all Antiquity raiſes ſuch an indignation in my ſoul, that I had rather it ſhould be you, or any body than my ſelf, who ſhould give this ſort of temerity the name that it deſerves. Exclamet Melicerta periiſſe Frontem de rebus. A man muſt have loſt all modeſty and judgment to proceed to ſuch a want of reſpect, and to ſo preſumptuous an extravagance, ut inſolenter parentis artium antiquitatis reverentiam verberemus. (Macrob. 1. Saturn.) Hexam. Ruſtic. pag. 142, 143.

(A△) A Book to you loaded with the faults of the Latin Country, and an heap of Ordures of the Republick of Learning.] As every thing has two Faces, perhaps ſome people will ſay that I incur the Cenſure we read in a fine Treatiſe of Plutarch. But this would be a perverſe conſidering of the matter, and not by its fair ſide. It ought to be conſider'd according to the Idea of thoſe collections of Phyſical Obſervations, which only contain the Diſtempers incident to human Bodies, but which treat of them only to teach the Cure of them. However it be, theſe are Plutarch's Thoughts: * "If any one rummaging the Ancients, "ſhould pick and cull all the worſt things he could "find, and make a Book of them, as the defective "Verſes of Homer, beginning with a ſhort Syllable, "or the incongruities met with in Tragedies, or "the obſcene and baſe Objections Archilochus makes "againſt the Female Sex, diſgracing himſelf by it; "would he not deſerve this Tragical Malediction,

"Pox on your Taſte! muſt you, like Li e and Fleas,
"Be always fed with Scabs and Naſtineſs?

"But ſetting aſide that Curſe, it would be a Col"lection that would neither bring him Honour nor "Profit, thus to rip up all the Faults of others; "as we read that Philip made a Collection of the "moſt wicked and incorrigible Men of his time, "whom he lodg'd together in a City he built for "'em, and call'd it Poneropolis, that is, the City of "Villains: So the curious collecting and amaſſing "together the Faults and Imperfections on all hands, "not of Verſes or Poems, but of the Lives of Men, "make very diſagreeable Archives and Regiſters of "their Memory, which they carry always about "them. And juſt as at Rome there are perſons who "care not to buy handſom Pictures, or fine Sta"tues, or even handſom Boys and Girls of thoſe "who expoſe them to ſale, but rather affect to buy "Monſters in Nature, ſuch as have no Legs, or "their Arms wrong-plac'd, or three Eyes, or the "Head of an Oſtridge, and are pleas'd with enqui"ring

"Where Kinds of unlike Form oft blended be
"Into one hideous Deformity.

"But he that ſhould commonly carry us to "ſuch Spectacles, would trouble and torment us "with the ſight. So thoſe who are curious in the "ſearch of other Mens Imperfections, the Infa"mies of Extractions, and the Faults and Errors "happening in other Families, ought to call to "mind as the former, that ſuch Obſervations have "neither conduc'd to their Pleaſure nor Profit.

* Plut. de Curioſitate pag. 520.

In anſwer to this difficulty, I ſay, Sir, that I don't think my Deſign to be dangerous in that reſpect; and therefore this Sentence might reaſonably be apply'd to me,

Periculoſæ (a) plenum opus aleæ
Tractas, & incedis per ignes
Suppoſitos cineri doloſo;

and yet, properly ſpeaking, I could not be call'd raſh. I repreſent not Authors under the diſadvantageous Idea that Slander employs to characteriſe them; I think they are too rational to take it amiſs, that for the ſake of the Publick Good I ſhould ſhew that they have been ſometimes in the wrong. I declare that in doing this I have no deſign to leſſen the Glory they have acquir'd, and that I ſhall carefully abſtain, where-ever Civility requires it, from all diſobliging terms, reſpecting their Perſons, or the body of their Work. The Fate of a Book depends not on ſome little Faults ſcatter'd here and there; nor will they diminiſh its juſt Price, or rob the Author of the Praiſes that are due to him. The Injuſtice and Malice of Mankind, as great as they are, are not grown to ſuch an exceſſive degree, as to hinder the generality of Readers from giving Praiſes to a good Book, notwithſtanding the Faults that are in it. This fine Maxim of a Poet of Auguſtus's Time will always live:

Ubi (b) plura nitent in carmine, non ego paucis
Offendar maculis, quos aut incuria fudit,
Aut humana parum cavit natura.

Eſpecially a Pardonis to be granted to the Faults, tho' numerous, of thoſe who are the Authors of large Dictionaries; and this Maxim is particularly to be urged on their behalf, (c) Opere in longo fas eſt obrepere ſomnum; and with that aſſurance I ſhall be the leſs ſcrupulous to criticiſe them, for I ſhould be very ſorry to leſſen the Praiſes that are due to them. The Publick is infinitely indebted to them for the Inſtructions they have given with the Sweat of their Brows, and the moſt oppreſſive Toil that can be undergone in a Pen-production. I refer my Reader to Mr. Morus's Preface already cited, where he ſhews that the Faults of Scaliger, Salmaſius, and Baronius, ought not to deprive them of the Glory they have obtain'd. You ſee, Sir, to what my excuſes tend: I do not deſign to injure the Merit of Authors, nor to depart from the Rules of Civility towards them; and I have ſo good an opinion of their Modeſty, and their Zeal for the Inſtruction of the Publick, that I don't believe they'll reſent the liberty I ſhall take to ſhew wherein they have been miſtaken. Moſt commonly I ſhall not be the Diſcoverer of their Faults, but only the Reporter of what others have ſaid. I ſcruple to appropriate to my ſelf what I borrow from other hands; ſo that the Reader may be aſſur'd, that when I note a Fault without citing any one who obſerv'd it, I was ignorant of its being ever made publick. After all, I don't think that I ought to ſhew a greater Indulgence to my Neighbour than to my ſelf, and it will appear that I ſhall not ſpare my ſelf. In fine, it ought to be conſider'd that the Intereſt of the Publick ought to be regarded before that of private perſons; and that an Author deſerves no Complaiſance, who is ſo unjuſt (d) as to prefer the concealing of his Faults before the undeceiving of the Publick.

I know not whether it proceeds from my judging of others by my ſelf; but I don't think that thoſe whoſe Miſtakes I ſhall civilly relate, will be provok'd at it: for which reaſon I produce ſome which concern ſome perſons for whom I have an extraordinary eſteem, and who honour me with their Friendſhip. Thoſe whom I ſhall ſpare will have ſome reaſon to complain, becauſe it will be a ſign of my thinking them uncapable of heark'ning to Reaſon, or unable to bear the leaſt loſs. This laſt Motive is not always abſolutely to be rejected: For if there are any Authors whoſe Faults ought to be conceal'd, they are chiefly thoſe poor ones whom we could quickly ſtrip to their ſhirts, ſhould we fall upon them; and if there be others whoſe Faults ought to be diſcover'd, they are principally the great and famous ones, ſince, beſides that their Errors are infinitely more contagious, they have ſuch abundant Funds of Reputation and Treaſures of Fame, that an hundred Shipwrecks could not incommode them (e). For which reaſon there are few that retract (f) with leſs reluctancy, or bear Cenſure with a better grace, than thoſe who have moſt juſtly obtain'd the Title of Great Authors (g). Prepare your ſelf, Sir, to behold your ſelf in this Dictionary, if any Miſtake has eſcap'd you; but I have no hopes of being able to give you this Teſtimony of my good Opinion of you. You are too exact and penetrating, not to expel all ſorts of Falſhood from your Writings; and beſides, you are ſo great a Maſter of the Greek and Roman Antiquities, as to draw out nothing but what is rare and curious; ſo that a man ought to be I know not how many times more learned than my ſelf, to diſcover whether you have err'd or not. If theſe Anſwers are not ſatisfactory, I add on one hand, that the Publick Inſtruction deſerves I ſhould ſacrifice my ſelf to the ill humour of ſome private men; and on the other, that I ſhall give but too much occaſion to the Authors I cenſure to revenge themſelves. I heartily conſent to a retaliation either from Themſelves or their Poſterity. I'll take it as a kindneſs done me to correct me, and to furniſh me with better light; and I beſeech this favour of all my Readers. I will endeavour not to commit Faults, but am very certain I ſhall commit but too many. The complaint therefore will not lie againſt me, which is urg'd againſt thoſe Criticks who print nothing (B) for fear of Repriſals.

In

(a) Horat. Od. 1. l. 2.

(b) Horat. de art. poet.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Nimis perverſè ſe ipſum amat qui & alios vult errare ut error ſuus lateat: quanto enim melius & utilius, ut ubi ipſe erravit, alii non errent quorum admonitu errore careat: quod ſi noluerit, ſaltem comites erroris non habeat. Auguſtin. epiſt. 7. p. m. 28.

(e) Theſe words of Juvenal may be applied to them, Non tam tenuis cenſus tibi contigit ut mediocris Jactura te mergat onus. Juv. Sat. 13.

(f) A futuris ſe deceptum eſſe Hippocrates memoriæ tradidit, more ſcilicet magnorum virorum & fiduciam magnarum rerum habentium. Nam levi ingenia quia nihi habent, nihil ſib detrahun Magno ingenio multaqu nihilomi nus hab turo co venit et am ſimplex ver erroris confeſſi Celſus de Medic. l. c. 4. Se alſo Quintil. l. 3. c. 6.

(g) Nu patienti reprehe duntur, quam q maxime laudari merent Plin. e 20. l. 7.

(B) Who print nothing for fear of Repriſals.] Regnier in his 9th Satyr calls upon his Cenſors to publiſh ſomething.

Qu'ils facent un ouvrage,
Riche d'inventions, de ſens & de langage,
Que nous puiſſions draper comme ils font nos eſcris,
Et voir comme l'on dict, s'ils ſont ſi bien apris,
Qu'ils monſtrent de leur eau, qu'ils entrent en carriere.

To

VII. 2. That it will cenſure ſlight Faults.

In the ſecond place it will ſeem ſtrange that I amuſe my ſelf with cenſuring little Faults, where the want of exactneſs is ſcarce ſenſible. Now I have my Reaſons for this, Sir: I well foreſaw what would be ſaid of it, and that the minutiſſimarum rerum minutiſſimus ſciſciator would be caſt in my teeth; nevertheleſs I have determin'd that theſe Ralleries were to be deſpis'd, and that even the leaſt ſlips were to be obſerv'd; for the more we criticiſe things with reaſon, the more we ſhew how difficult it is to be perfectly exact, Now, in carrying the Idea of perfect exactneſs ſo high, we oblige Authors to be the more upon their guard, and to examin every thing with the utmoſt circumſpection. Man is but too much accuſtom'd to remain on the hither-ſide of the Rules ſet before him; we muſt therefore ſtrain them to as high a pitch as poſſible, if we would have him come up cloſe to the point of Perfection. And moreover, ſince this Work may be ſerviceable to thoſe who will compoſe a very exact Hiſtorical Dictionary, which it is moſt neceſſary to engage in, I ought to deſcend to particulars with ſome ſort of nicety, or captiouſneſs if you'll have it ſo. 'Tis not out of inclination, but choice, that I deal in Trifles, and I ought to be thank'd for it, ſince it is a ſort of a ſacrificing one's ſelf to the good of one's Neighbour. 'Tis taking a Road out of the way of Praiſe, to bring others to a juſt accuracy; and is not this a conſiderable Sacrifice? There are not many who would make the like, for which I refer my ſelf to Quintilian (a).

I ſhall ſay ſomething below, that may ſerve as a Supplement to the diſcuſſion of this ſecond difficulty.

VIII. 3. That it will contain uſeleſs Diſcuſſions.

In the third place, I may be charg'd with giving my ſelf an uſeleſs trouble: For of what import is it, you'll ſay, to know there was a Caſſius Longinus who has been confounded with another; or whether he was capitally puniſh'd, or only baniſh'd? Is the Publick concern'd in this? What matters it whether Scaliger was angry or not angry with Eraſmus for having been call'd a Soldier? and ſo with the reſt. To this I have an hundred things to anſwer; and from the multitude of Thoughts which immediately offer themſelves to my mind, I find I could make a long Diſſertation upon this Subject, which would perhaps be tolerable: But as 'tis time to conclude, I reduce my ſelf to a few Notes; the reſt may come out at another more ſeaſonable time, or perhaps is unneceſſary, ſince every one may find it either by his own Meditation or in Books.

(a) Sive contemnentes tanquam parvaquæ prius dicimus ſtudia . . . . ſeu, quod proximum vero, nullam ingenii ſperantes gratiam circa res etiamſi neceſſarias, procul tamen ab oſtentatione poſitas. Quint. l. 1. in Proœmio.

I ſay then, Sir, that this Objection, which might perhaps be ſolid, abſolutely ſpeaking, and without reſpect to time and place, is of no force when referr'd to the Age and the part of the World that we live in. If Men were perfectly reaſonable, they would beſtow themſelves wholly upon the care of their eternal Salvation; One thing alone would be neceſſary, as our Lord told Martha, (b) Porro unum eſt neceſſarium. Who knows not alſo the good and wiſe Maxim, Nature is content with a little? Who can doubt but that if we contain'd our ſelves within the bounds of natural neceſſity, we muſt aboliſh almoſt all the Arts as things ſuperfluous? But Man can be no longer treated upon that foot; he has been time out of mind in the poſſeſſion of ſeeking the Conveniences of Life, and all ſorts of Pleaſures and Delights. Amongſt other things unneceſſary, it has pleas'd the Europeans to employ themſelves about, the Greek and Latin Tongues have been the Subject of their Study and Enquiry, or at leaſt the Contents of the Books which remain in thoſe two Languages. Nor are they content to know in general what is contain'd in thoſe Books, but they are inquiſitive whether every thing in them be certain, and whether they cannot explain that wherein one Author contradicts another: And when they have been able to clear theſe Difficulties, and thoſe of all ſorts of Hiſtories, they have found it a very agreeable ſatisfaction, and have much diverted their Readers, and procur'd great Encomiums to themſelves, though theſe Illuſtrations were of no uſe to bring down the Price of Proviſions, or to keep off Cold or Heat, Rain or Hail. It ought not then to be reckon'd an impertinent raſhneſs in me to go to expoſe, as a Merchandize of great Price, a thing rejected by all the World as uſeleſs; for in this I govern my ſelf only by the long-eſtabliſh'd Taſte of the World. Whether men have reaſon or not in being pleas'd that they are not in an Error upon any point of Geography, Chronology, or Hiſtory, that's nothing to me: I am no wiſe anſwerable for that; 'tis ſufficient to my purpoſe, that (c) the Publick will exactly

(b) Luke 10. 42.

(c) By this word I don't mean that every body is pleas'd with the ſame Confutations, but that ſome are pleas'd with one ſort, and others with another.

To which he applies the Italian Story.

Qu'une fois un paiſant,
Homme fort entendu, & ſuffiſant de teſte,
Comme on peut ayſement juger par ſa requeſte,
S'en vint trouver le Pape & le voulut prier,
Que les Preſtres du temps ſe puiſſent marier,
Afin ce diſoit-il que nous puiſſions nous autres
Leurs femmes careſſer ainſi qu'ils font les noſtres.

Martial had thoughts of this nature before in his 92d Epigram of the firſt Book.

Cum tua non edas, carpis mea carmina Læli:
Carpere vel noli noſtra, vel ede tua.

And he ſaith in the 64th Epigram of the 12th Book,

Corrumpit ſine talione cælebs:
Cæcus perdere non poteſt quod aufert.

See Mr. Saldenus pag. 44 & 419 of the Treatiſe de libris varioque eorum uſu & abuſu.

YOU will find a Supplement to this in the Article Ariſtarchus. I have obſerved in another place, That the Readers who never write are very often more rigid and unjuſt in their Cenſures than thoſe who know by experience the pains of Compoſition. I think I may ſay there are two things which hinder the univerſal and unmerciful Criticks from ſhewing themſelves in Print. One is, the fear that every body ſhould fall upon their Works, and make them ſuffer the puniſhment of retaliation without mercy: The other, that they come not up to the Idea of Perfection which was the Rule of their Cenſures. † 'Tis eaſier to imagin an high Perfection than to find it; and it is the Fate of moſt Criticks to be able to find fault, and not be able to do better: They don't ſeem to have the faculty of ſpeaking or writing, they are ſo dry and barren. The Author of this Judgment obſerves, That Mr. Conrart, who had a moſt judicious and delicate Taſte, and whoſe Criticiſms were certain, and penetrating into all the folds and corners of a Work, had the prudence to publiſh nothing of his own, and that the little which come out is not very conſiderable.

† Vigneul Marville Melanges d'hiſt. & de literature tom. 3. pag. 183. Rouën Edit. 1701.

actly know all the Falſhoods that are current, and makes Account (a) of theſe Diſcoveries.

Let it not be ſaid that our Age, cur'd of the Critical Spirit that reign'd in the preceding, looks upon the Writings of thoſe who correct the falſities of Fact, concerning either the particular Hiſtory of Great Men, or the Names of Cities, or the like, as a meer Pedantry; for 'tis certain, all things conſider'd, that men were never more devoted to ſuch ſorts of Explications. For one experimental Philoſopher, for one Mathematician, you find an hundred that throughly ſtudy Hiſtory with all its Dependencies; and the Antiquarian Science, I mean the ſtudy of Medals, Inſcriptions, Baſſo Relievo's, &c. was never cultivated as it is at preſent. To what does it tend? To the better eſtabliſhing the Time in which certain particular Facts happen'd; to prevent one Town or Perſon being taken for another; to fortifie Conjectures upon certain Rites of the Ancients; and to an hundred other Curioſities which the Publick has nothing to do with, by the ſqueamiſh Maxims which make the Subject of this third Difficulty; Maxims that have not diſcourag'd a (b) Great Man, as conſummate in the Affairs of State as in the Study of Human Learning, from publiſhing a great Book upon the Excellence and Uſe of Medals.

You, Sir, of all men in the World are the beſt convinc'd of the impertinence of theſe Maxims; they tend (c) to nothing leſs than the Ruin of all the fine Arts, and almoſt of all the Sciences which moſt poliſh and exalt the Mind of Man. According to theſe fine Reaſonings, we ſhould have nothing left but the uſe of Mechanical Arts, and as much Geometry as is neceſſary to perfect Navigation, Carriages, Agriculture, and the Fortification of Places. Amongſt all the Profeſſors, we ſhould have hardly any thing but Engineers to invent only new ways of Deſtruction to Mankind. It muſt be allow'd that the Publick has a very great Intereſt in all theſe things, ſince hereby we may commodiouſly ſtore our Towns with Plenty, and maintain an offenſive or defenſive War. It muſt be own'd on the other hand, with Cicero's leave, that all the (d) Beauties of Painting, Sculpture, Architecture, ſerve only to pleaſe the eyes, and give an agreeable admiration to good Judges. The courſe productions of all thoſe Arts ſuffice to ſatisfie the Neceſſities of men; a man may be ſafely and commodiouſly lodg'd without the help of the Corinthian or the Compoſite Order, without Frizes, Cornices and Architraves. Much leſs is it neceſſary for the Conveniences of Life, to know all that is ſaid either of the incommenſurability of the Aſymptotes, or of Magical Squares, or the Duplication of the Cube, &c. The Turks amidſt their groſs Ignorance, are no leſs robuſt, and ſpend no leſs merrily Ten thouſand Livres a year, when they have 'em, than the Chriſtians; and that Governour of Neuhauſel, who (e) complain'd after the raiſing of the Siege of Vienna of the Inſincerity of the French, who had given the King of Poland paſſage through their Country, enjoy'd the Authority of his Poſt as pleaſantly as if he had been better skill'd in Hiſtory and Geography. So that if a man was at liberty to deſpiſe a Work which treats not de pane lucrando, or is of no uſe πρὸς τὰ ἄλφιτα, as your good Friends the Ancient Greeks ſaid, or in ſhort when the Publick can be without it, there are few Books but would be contemptible, and deſerve the blunt ſaying you doubtleſs have read in Malherbe's Life. Mr. de Meziriac, attended with two or three of his Friends, brought him his Commentary on Diophantus; thoſe Friends extraordinarily prais'd this Book, as very uſeful to the Publick: Malherbe ask'd them whether it would bring down the Price of Bread? Another time he approv'd the giving Recompences to thoſe only who ſerv'd the King in his Armies and Affairs; and he ſaid that a good Poet was no more uſeful to the State than a good player at Nine pins.

It muſt therefore be granted me, that there are infinite productions of Human Minds, which are eſteem'd, not becauſe they are neceſſary, but becauſe they divert us: And is it not juſt on this ſcore to obſerve the Falſities of the Authors, when there are ſo many men who delight to know the Truth, even in things wherein their Fortune is not at all concern'd?

Is it not certain that a Shoemaker, a Miller, a Gardener, are infinitely more neceſſary to a State than the ableſt Painters or Statuaries; than a Michael Angelo, or a Cavalier Bernini? Is it not true that the meaneſt Maſon is more neceſſary in a City than the moſt excellent Chronologer or Aſtronomer; than a Joſeph Scaliger, or a Copernicus? And yet the Works of theſe Great Men (f) which the World might well enough diſpenſe with, are infinitely more valu'd than the abſolutely neceſſary productions of theſe Trades. So true it is, that there are things whoſe Prices are determin'd only with reſpect to an honeſt Diverſion, or a meer Ornament of the Soul.

IX. The ſame Arguments that prove the uſefulneſs of other Sciences, prove the uſefulneſs of critical Learning.

Here, Sir, you will not fail to foreſee that the Enemies of good Literature will invent an hundred Exceptions. Since they cannot deny that their Maxims tend to revive Barbariſm in all reſpects, they will expatiate on the Uſefulneſs ariſing from certain Sciences: But they will get nothing by it; for as ſoon as they place in the number of things uſeful, ſuch as have an Utility either by Reſult or Emanation (ſuffer me to uſe this old Sholaſtick Diſtinction, ſince it ſo well expreſſes both thoſe kinds of acceſſory Utilities, (g) which may come here into account) they'll find themſelves oblig'd to bring in Polite and Critical Learning. I can retort all their Obſervations againſt them. Here is a Specimen of it.

If

(a) If it is not neceſſary to know them, neither is it neceſſary to be ignorant of them. Scaliger at the beginning of his Notes on Catullus, has this ſaying, Etſi candide lector, hoc epigrammate patienter carere poteras, habet tamen quod te ſcire melius fuit quàm ignorare. See the News from the Republic of Learning, in the Advertiſement of Auguſt 1684. Lipſius was curious of truth even in little things: Admirabilis Lipſius alicubi ait ſe cupere etiam in minimis vera ſcire. Epiſt. Hoffm. ad Reineſium. pag. 100.

(b) The Baron de Spanheim

(c) See the News from the Repub. of Learning, Septemb. 1684. art. 4.

(d) He endeavours in book 3. of the Orator to prove this Theſis, In pleriſque rebus incredibiliter hoc natura eſt ipſa fabricata, ut ea quæ maximam utilitatem in ſe continerent eadem haberent plurimum vel dignitatis vel ſæpè etiam venuſtatis.

(e) Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans Nov. 1687. pag. 366.

(f) Plus interfuit Reipub. Caſtellum capi Liga tum qu bene defendi ca ſam M. Curii. Credo,ſe Athenie ſium qu que plus interfuit firma tecta in do miciliis habere, quàm Minervæ ſignum ex ebore pulcherrimum: tamen ego me Phidiam eſſe mal lem qu vel optimum fabrum lignarium quare n quantu quiſque proſit, quanti quiſque ſit pon randum eſt: p ſertim cum p ci ping egregi poſſint aut fin re, op rii au aut ba deeſſe poſſin Cicero Brut.

(g) H we give a greater latitude to this Diſtinction than the Sch

If they tell me that the moſt abſtract Theorems of Algebra are moſt uſeful to Life, becauſe they contribute to the perfecting of certain Arts: I will anſwer them, that likewiſe a ſcrupulous enquiry into all Hiſtorical Facts, is capable of producing very great advantages. I dare ſay, that the ridiculous conceitedneſs of the firſt Criticks, who fell Tooth and Nail upon Trifles, for example, upon the Queſtion whether we ought to ſay Virgilius or Vergilius, has by accident been of great uſe; they thereby inſpir'd an extreme Veneration for Antiquity; they diſpos'd men to a ſedulous enquiry into the Conduct of ancient Greece and Rome, and ſo gave occaſion to Profit by thoſe great Examples. And what effect, Sir, do you think, would not a grave and majeſtick Sentence, taken from Livy or Tacitus, and utter'd as having heretofore inclin'd the Roman Senate to a certain Reſolution (a), have upon hearers thus diſpos'd? I will not ſcruple to ſay that it is capable of ſaving a State, and perhaps has ſav'd more than one. The Preſident of an Aſſembly pronounces thoſe Latin words with an Emphaſis; he makes an impreſſion upon their minds by the reſpect they have for the Roman Name; every one goes home convinc'd, and diſpoſes his Neighbours to a ſenſe of Obedience; and thus you ſee a Civil War ſtiff'd in its birth. Malherbe had no Notion of this, when he ſaid that a Poet is no more uſeful to a State than a player at Ninepins: For, not to deſcend to all (b) the particular good things a Poet can effect, don't you think, Sir, that one of the topping Men of a Pariſh has often by a Stanza of Pibrac emphatically pronounc'd, happily deſtroyed all the Contrivances of a Factious Declaimer? And in Domeſtick Affairs, do you think that thoſe golden Sentences recommended by Moliere are always ineffectual? I believe they are ſo often, but not always; and I don't think that Horace in the Verſes (c) I cite in the Margin ſpoke only of a Profit in Idea.

It will be ſaid, perhaps, that what ſeems never ſo abſtract and unfruitful in Mathematicks, brings at leaſt this advantage, that it leads us to undoubted Truths; whereas Hiſtorical Diſcuſſions, and Enquiries after Matters of Fact, leave us always in the dark, and generate Seeds of new Diſputes. But how imprudent it is to harp upon this ſtring! I maintain that Hiſtorical Truths may be carry'd to a more undoubted degree of certainty than what Geometrical Truths are advanc'd to, provided we conſider theſe two ſorts of Truths in the kind of Certainty peculiar to them. I explain my ſelf. In the Diſputes that ariſe betwixt Hiſtorians, to know whether a Prince has reign'd before or after another, 'tis ſuppos'd on both ſides that a Fact has all the reality and exiſtence it is capable of out of our Underſtanding, except it be of the nature of thoſe related by Arioſto and other fabulous Authors; and no regard is had to the difficulties alledged by the Scepticks, to make it doubtful whether the things which ſeem to exiſt do really exiſt out of our Minds. Thus an Hiſtorical Fact is plac'd in the higheſt degree of certainty that can belong to it, when once we have been able to prove its apparent exiſtence: For no more is required for this ſort of Truths; and it were denying the common Principle of Diſputants, and going from one kind of things to another, to bid us prove not only that a bloody Battle appear'd to all Europe to be fought at Senef in 1674. but alſo that the Objects are ſuch ad extra as they appear to us to be. Thus we are deliver'd from the impertinent Cavils which the Pyrrhoniſts call Reaſons of Suſpenſion; and tho' Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm can't be rejected in abundance of Facts, 'tis certain there are many others which we can prove with a full certainty; ſo that Hiſtorical Enquiries are not fruitleſs in that reſpect. We certainly ſhew the Falſity of many things, the Uncertainty of many others, and the Truth of the reſt: And thus you have ſome Demonſtrations of uſe to many more people than Geometrical ones; for few people have a taſte for theſe, or find occaſion to apply them to the reformation of Manners: but it will be confeſs'd, Sir, that all ſorts of people may profit, morally ſpeaking, by the reading of a great Collection of Hiſtorical Falſhoods well proved, tho' it were only by growing more circumſpect in judging of their Neighbour, and more capable of avoiding the Snares that Satyr and Flattery lay on all ſides to catch the poor Reader. Now, is it nothing to correct the bad inclination we have to make raſh Judgments? Is it nothing to learn to ſuſpend our aſſent to what we ſee in Print? Is it not the very Nerve of Prudence (d) not to believe too haſtily?

In vain ſhould we ſeek for theſe Moral Advantages in a Collection of Quinteſſences of Algebra. Beſides, by the Mathematicians leave, it is not ſo eaſie for them to arrive to a due certainty, as it is for Hiſtorians to come at the certainty they demand. No ſolid Objection will ever be made againſt this Truth of Fact, that Cæſar vanquiſh'd Pompey; and whatever Principles we diſpute upon, nothing will ſtand more immovably than this Propoſition, Cæſar and Pompey have exiſted, and were not a meer modification of the Souls of thoſe who writ their Life. But as for the Object of Mathematicks, it is not only very hard to prove that it exiſts out of our mind, but it is very eaſie to prove that it can be nothing but an Idea of our Soul. And indeed the exiſtence of a Square Circle without us ſeems not much more impoſſible, than the exiſtence of the Circle, of which Geometry gives us ſo many fine Demonſtrations; I mean, of a Circle from the Circumference whereof to the Center may be drawn as many Lines as there are Points in the Circumference. 'Tis ſenſibly manifeſt, that the Center, which is but one Point, can't be the common Subject in which ſo many different Lines terminate as there are Points in the Circumference. In a word, the Object of Mathematicks conſiſting of Points abſolutely indiviſible, of Lines without breadth or depth, and of Superficies without profundity; 'tis evident it cannot exiſt

---

(a) Compare with Seneca's 94th Epiſtle.

(b) Hor. Epiſt. 1. l. 2. recites them up.

(c) Os tenerum pueri balbumque poeta figurat: Torquet ab obſcœnis jam nunc ſermonibus aurem; Mox etiam pectus præceptis format amicis: Aſperitatis, & invidiæ corrector & iræ. Hor. Epiſt. 1. lib. 2.

(d) Νᾶφε ϗ μέμνασ' ἀπιστεῖν· ἄρθρα ταῦτα τᾶν φρενῶν. Sobrius eſto atque illud teneto nervos atque artus eſſe ſapientiæ non temere credere. Epicharmus apud Ciceronem, Polybium, Lucianum, &c.

exiſt otherwiſe than in Imagination. Thus it is metaphyſically more certain that Cicero has had a Being out of the Intellect of any other man, than it is certain that the Object of Mathematicks exiſts out of our Underſtanding. I omit what the learned Mr. Huet (a) has repreſented to theſe Gentlemen, to teach them not ſo much to undervalue Hiſtorical Truths.

The abſtracted depths of Mathematicks, it may be ſaid, give lofty Idea's of God's Infinity. Be it ſo: But do you think that a great Moral Good cannot reſult from a Critical Dictionary? The infallible Oracle affirms that Science puffs up; and therefore there is nothing wherein 'tis more important to humble the Pride of Man. In mentioning Pride, we ſpeak a Fault the moſt remote from true Vertue, and the moſt diametrically oppoſite to the Spirit of the Goſpel. But what could be imagin'd more proper to give Man a true Notion of the emptineſs and vanity of the Sciences, and of the weakneſs of his Mind, than to ſhew him by heaps the Falſities of Fact that Books are fill'd with. Innumerable men of Letters, the moſt penetrating and ſublime Wits, have taken upon them for many years to illuſtrate Antiquity. That Attempt of the Criticks having the Actions of Men for its Object, ſhould be more eaſie than that of the Philoſophers, which has the Actions of GOD for its Object, and yet the Criticks have given ſo many Proofs of Human Infirmities, as to leave room to compoſe vaſt Volumes of their Falſhoods. Theſe Volumes may therefore mortifie Man with reſpect to his greateſt Vanity, I mean his Science. They are ſo many Trophies or Triumphal Arches erected over Human Ignorance and Infirmity.

Hence you ſee, Sir, that the leaſt Faults will have their uſe, ſince by the very Collection of numerous Lyes upon every Subject, Man will be the better taught to diſcover his weakneſs, and ſee the prodigious variety his Errors are capable of. This will make him more ſenſible that he is the ſport of Malice and Ignorance; that the one takes him when the other leaves him; that if he be intelligent enough to know a Lye, he is wicked enough to vent it againſt his Conſcience; or if he is not wicked to this pitch of propagating Falſhood, he is blind enough not to ſee the Truth. For my own particular, when I think that perhaps I ſhall make it my ſerious employment all my life to gather Materials for this kind of Triumphal Arches, I find my ſelf thoroughly penetrated with the conviction of my Nothingneſs. This will be a continual Leſſon to me of Self-contempt. No Sermon, no not of the Preacher, or Eccleſiaſtes by way of Excellency, could more firmly rivet in me this grand Maxim, (b) I have ſeen all the works that are done under the Sun, AND BEHOLD ALL IS VANITY AND VEXATION OF SPIRIT. (c) You ſee how conceited I am of my own Work: I ſhall ſpeak ill of it more than any body elſe, and I eſteem that Circumſtance more than all the reſt.

I was going to finiſh with this fine Morality, when it came into my head that I had not intimated I ſhall uſe the ſame Liberty and Civility towards Authors of all Nations and Religions: I therefore declare it here. Nothing is more ridiculous than a Dictionary where the Author turns Controverſiſt. This is one of the greateſt Faults of Mr. Moreri's, in which we find an hundred places that ſeem to be taken from a true Cruſade Sermon. For my part, I ſhall not ſay with Annibal, (d) Hoſtem qui feriet mihi erit Carthaginienſis, quiſquis erit, (e) Civis; but rather that all thoſe who depart from Truth ſhall be equally ſtrangers to me. You know ſome People who will ſeem aggriev'd at this, but who will rejoice at it in the bottom of their Soul, becauſe it will furniſh them with pretexts for Slander, and for playing the Zealots, two things which always attend them. But I ſhall go on in my own way, whatever they may ſay, and I will let 'em pick the bones they may find in it. Take with you the reaſon of my proceeding.

This Dictionary not concerning Errors of Right, Partiality in it would be incomparably more inexcuſable than in Hiſtorical Dictionaries; for a man is oblig'd in theſe to relate a thouſand things which are true in the Judgment of ſome, and falſe in that of others: He ought therefore to ſuppoſe a great difference of Principles in Readers, and to imagin that in the hands of ſome he will be in an Enemy's Country, and in the hands of others among Friends; and for that reaſon 'tis juſt he ſhould proportion his Style and way of deciding accordingly. But when a man only propoſes to collect Errors of Fact, he reaſonably ſuppoſes the ſame Principles to be in all his Readers, and that there's no man but will admit as falſe what he ſhews to be ſo: For the Proofs of a Falſhood of Fact are not the Prejudices of a Nation or particular Religion, but are Maxims common to all men. You hereby ſee, Sir, that Philoſophical or Theological Falſhoods make no part of the Plan of my Work: however it is true that Books wherein they are diſputed might furniſh out a kind of Falſhoods of Fact, which would not perhaps be the leſs uſeful to the Reader.

It moſt commonly happens that Diſputes in writing upon any Point degenerate into Perſonal Differences, and turn moſt times upon the Queſtion, whether an Adverſary's paſſage has been well or ill cited, well or ill interpreted. Here the Publick abandons the Diſputants, and, as was not long ſince ſaid by a good Wit, the Antagoniſts are oblig'd to part for want of Readers or Bookſellers. Whoever could have the patience to make an Analyſis of theſe Perſonal Quarrels, would have a great Harveſt of Faults belonging to the Juriſdiction of this Dictionary, many falſe Citations, or falſe Interpretations. Now theſe are Errors of Fact. You muſt acknowledge, Sir, there could be no Logick comparable to this, to teach the juſtneſs of Reaſoning, without reckoning this great Moral Advantage, that we ſhould at the ſame time diſcover abundance of tricks, or

(a) Præfat. demonſtrat. Evang.

(b) Eccleſiaſt. 1. 14.

(c) Confer quæ Vigneul Marville Melang. tom 3. pag. 206. & ſeq. & pag. ult. of the Edition of Roüen, 1701.

(d) Thus Cicero Orat. pro Corn. Balbo pag. m. 679. relates the words of Ennius: but to make it a Verſe, it ſhould be ferit, and not feriet.

(e) Some Criticks would have it read cujati' ſiet.

or at leaſt the Imperfections of our Souls; for what proceeds not from inſincerity, muſt be the product of dimneſs or weakneſs of mind.

'Tis a misfortune, that this kind of Knavery ſhould go unpuniſh'd ſo much as it does, by the little care that Readers take to compare the Anſwers and Replies together. But if any one took the pains to deſcribe in a few words the Progreſs of a Diſpute, he would bring to light all the Obliquities of the Caviller, and make 'em deteſted.

Pardon me, Sir, ſo long an Epiſtle Dedicatory, and make haſte to enrich the Republick of Learning with the Learned Works it expects from you. Your Modeſty and our Friendſhip forbid me to make their Encomium: But I could gladly wiſh the Publick might immediately give you the Praiſes you will receive when they ſhall appear. I am with all imaginable Reſpect,

SIR,

Your moſt humble and moſt obedient Servant,

May 5th. 1692. * * * * * *

NOTE, That in the Compoſition of this Dictionary I have not followed all the Ideas of this Project. The deference I had to the Advices of ſome intelligent Readers made me follow another Method upon ſome Heads.

EXPLANATIONS

Of ſome things diſpers'd in this Dictionary, which may be reduc'd to Four General Heads.

I. To the Praiſes given to ſuch perſons as deny'd the Providence or Exiſtence of GOD. II. To the Objections of the Manichees. III. To the Objections of the Pyrrhoniſts. IV. To Obſcenities.

A General and Preliminary Obſervation.

IN compoſing this Work, I well perceiv'd that ſome Reflections ſtole in, which were ſomewhat free, and little agreeable to common Judgments; but I did not foreſee that they could give any Scandal. I imagin'd that the perſons whoſe Judgment ſerves for a Model, and corrective to that of others, would take notice of many things which might afford me an Apology.

I. I hop'd in the firſt place, that the Reader would conſider the nature of this Dictionary. 'Tis a vaſt Compilation, neceſſarily loaded with infinite particulars of Criticiſm, diſguſting and tiring to the laſt degree thoſe who are not of the Profeſſion; and I was oblig'd in theſe heaps of all kinds of matters, to ſuſtain two Characters, that of Hiſtorian and that of Commentator. It was not poſſible to reſcue it from the Contempt of a great many Readers, otherwiſe than by introducing ſome uncommon things into it. They that neither value Grammatical Diſputes, nor the Adventures of an inconſiderable private perſon, are a numerous party, and deſerve to have their Taſte conſulted; 'tis therefore allowable for an Author to ſeaſon his Book with ſomething that will recommend it to their Palate; and if he writes as an Hiſtorian, he ought not only to ſay what Hereticks have done, but alſo to ſhew wherein the ſtrength and weakneſs of their Opinions conſiſt. This muſt eſpecially be done by him, if he be himſelf the Commentator of his Relations; for in his Commentary he muſt diſcuſs things, and compare Arguments together pro and con, with all the impartiality of a faithful Relator.

II. I hop'd, in the ſecond place, that regard would be had to the manner of my mentioning ſome Opinions; it being neither in the ſtrain of a Dogmatiſt, nor with the biggotry of a Proſelyte-maker. They are Thoughts thrown at random, and accidentally, and which I would have to paſs for Sports of Wit, and be rejected entirely as ſhall be thought convenient, and that with a greater liberty than I have given my ſelf. 'Tis eaſie to perceive that an Author who deals thus has no ſiniſter intentions, and is not laying Snares; and if Reflections eſcape him that might be dangerous under another Form, no great Offence is to be taken at it.

III. I hop'd the Circumſtances would be obſerv'd that either make an Error formidable or not. The conſequences of it are to be apprehended when it is taught by thoſe, whoſe relation to the People gives them an opportunity of authoriſing themſelves, and forming a party. It ought to be follow'd cloſe, to be obſerv'd, and carefully reſtrain'd, when a man of a Venerable Character, a Paſtor, a Profeſſor of Divinity, ſows it in his Sermons, in his Lectures, in little Syſtematical Tracts, or by way of Catechiſm, and by (a) Emiſſaries that go from houſe to houſe to recommend the reading of his Books, and invite the People to go to the Conventicles where the Author explains his Reaſons and his Method more particularly. But if a Layman, and of no Character, as my ſelf, ſhould drop amongſt vaſt Collections of Hiſtory and Learning, ſome Error in Religion or Morality, I don't ſee any reaſon a man has to be concern'd at it. 'Tis not in ſuch Works as theſe that the Reader ſeeks the reformation of his Faith. No man takes an Author for a Guide in this matter, who ſpeaks only occaſionally, and by the by; and who by his very throwing his Sentiments, as Pins into a Meadow, makes it viſible that he cares not to be follow'd. The Errors of ſuch a Writer are of no conſequence, nor deſerve that the World ſhould be diſturb'd about them. And thus it was the Faculty of Divinity in France dealt with Michael de Montagne's Book. They left untouch'd all this Author's Maxims, who, without following any Syſtem, Method or Order, heap'd together and ſpun out whatever his Memory preſented to him: But when Peter Charron, a Prieſt and a Theologal, came to vent ſome of Montagne's Sentiments methodically in a Syſtematical Treatiſe of Morality, the Divines were no longer ſilent.

(a) Note, That I joyn all theſe things together, without ſuppoſing that none is obnoxious to the Laws but thoſe who are guilty of it all: A part of it is ſufficient for it.

IV. I hop'd in the fourth place, which was the main foundation of my confidence, that theſe two Points would eaſily be diſtinguiſh'd: 1. That I never advance any Doctrine as my own Opinion which is repugnant to the Articles of the Confeſſion of Faith of the Reformed Church in which I was born, and which I make profeſſion of. 2. That when I relate as an Hiſtorian what may be objected and reply'd to the Orthodox, dox, and when I confeſs that by Natural Light we can't ſolve all the difficulties of the Unbelievers, I always make a Digreſſion, to draw from thence a Conſequence in favour of the Principle which the Reform'd conſtantly oppoſe to the Socinians; That our Reaſon being ſo weak as it is, ought not to be the Rule or Meaſure of our Faith.

Theſe are the Reaſons that made me believe, that if I ſometimes us'd the liberty of Philoſophiſing, as they call it, it would not be taken amiſs. I ſhould have deny'd it my ſelf, if I had foreſeen that the foregoing Conſideration would not have been Satisfactory.

But the Event has diſappointed my hopes. Complaints have been made againſt thoſe places in my Dictionary. I have never been covinc'd that they are juſt; yet I am ſorry that I have ſaid any thing that was ill took, and have always been diſpos'd to remedy the Scruples in a ſecond Edition. Underſtanding in what the Grievances conſiſted, it ſeem'd to me no hard thing to apply a Remedy, either by the ſuppreſſion of ſome Pages, or ſome changes of expreſſion, or by Explanations that might place things in a due light. I have engag'd in this without any reluctancy, as all Authors ought to do who are not bigotted to their Opinions, but are pleas'd to ſacrifice them to the Edification of the Reader. I wiſh the World may be ſatisfied with my Conduct, both as to what has been ſuppreſs'd, and to thoſe things I am about to explain; and methinks I have reaſon to promiſe my ſelf that they will. I have propos'd to my ſelf this End, and have us'd great application to arrive to it.

EXPLANATION I.

The Reflection that has been made on the good Morals of ſome perſons who had no Religion, cannot any ways prejudice the Chriſtian Faith.

SUch as have been ſcandaliz'd at my ſaying that there have been Atheiſts and Epicureans who have outdone moſt Idolaters in good Morals, are intreated to reflect well upon all the following Conſiderations; which if they pleaſe to do, their Scandal will vaniſh, and entirely diſappear.

I. The Fear and Love of God are not the only Spring of Human Actions. There are other Principles that actuate a Man; the love of Praiſe, the fear of Diſgrace, the Natural Temper, Puniſhments and Rewards in the Magiſtrates hands, have a mighty influence upon the Heart. He that doubts of it, muſt be ignorant of what paſſes in his own Breaſt, and what the common courſe of the World may give him an ocular demonſtration of every moment. But 'tis not probable there is any one ſtupid enough to be ignorant of ſuch a Truth. What therefore I have aſſerted concerning theſe other Springs of Human Actions, may be plac'd in the number of common Notions.

II. The Fear and Love of God are not always a more active Principle than the reſt: The love of Glory, the fear of Infamy, Death or Torments, the hopes of Preferment, act with greater force upon ſome men, than the deſire of pleaſing God, and the fear of breaking his Commandments. If any one doubts of it, he is ignorant of ſome of his own Actions, and knows nothing of what is doing daily under the Sun. The World abounds with People who chooſe rather to commit a Sin, than diſpleaſe a Prince who can make and ruin their Fortune. Men daily ſubſcribe Formularies of Faith againſt their Conſcience, either to ſave their Eſtates, or to avoid Impriſonment, Exile, Death, &c. A Soldier who has quitted all for his Religion, finding himſelf under the neceſſity of offending God if he revenges himſelf for having receiv'd a Box o'th' Ear, or of being accounted a Coward if he does not, never reſts till he has Satisfaction for this Affront, tho' at the peril of killing or being kill'd in a ſtate that muſt be follow'd with Eternal Damnation. 'Tis not likely that any one is ſo ſtupid as to be ignorant of ſuch things. Therefore let this Moral Aphoriſm take place amongſt firſt Principles, That the Fear and Love of God are not always the moſt active Principle of Human Actions.

III. This being ſo, it ought not to be reckon'd a ſcandalous Paradox, but rather a very poſſible thing, that ſome Men without Religion ſhould be more forcibly excited to a good Moral Life by their Conſtitution, in conjunction with the love of Praiſe and fear of Diſgrace, than ſome others by the Inſtinct of Conſcience.

IV. The Scandal ought to be much greater, when we ſee ſo many people convinc'd of the Truths of Religion, at the ſame time over head and ears in Vice.

V. Nay, it is more ſtrange that Heathen Idolaters ſhould do good Actions, than that Atheiſtical Philoſophers ſhould live like Virtuous Men: For the former muſt have been led to Crimes by their very Religion; it muſt have been a Point of Faith with them, That to make themſelves Imitators of God, which is the End and Subſtance of Religion, they ought to be Cheats, Envious, Fornicators, Adulterers, Pederaſts, &c.

VI. Whence we may conclude, that the Idolaters who lived virtuouſly, were only guided by the Ideas of Reaſon and Virtue, or by the deſire of Praiſes, or by their Natural Temper, or ſuch other Principles as may all be found in Atheiſts: Why then ſhould we expect to find more Virtue amongſt the Idolatrous Heathens than amongſt Men who have no Religion?

VII. I deſire you to obſerve, That ſpeaking of the good Morals of ſome Atheiſts, I have not aſcrib'd any true Virtues to them. Their Sobriety, Chaſtity, Probity, Contempt of Riches, Zeal for the Publick Good, Officiouſneſs to their Neighbour, neither pro-

proceeded from the Love of God, nor tended to honour and glorifie him. Themſelves were the Principle and End of all this: Self-love was the only ground of it. They were only ſhining Sins, ſplendida peccata, as St. Auguſtin ſays of all the good Actions of the Heathens. I have not therefore prejudic'd true Religion in the leaſt by ſaying of ſome Atheiſts what I have ſaid; it is ſtill true that good Works are only produc'd by religious Men. And what is it to the true Religion if the Worſhipers of the falſe Gods are no better in their actions than thoſe who have no Religion? What advantage would accrue to it, if the Adorers of Jupiter and Saturn were not equally plung'd in the gulph of Perdition with the Atheiſts?

VIII. If thoſe who are ſcandaliz'd pretend that one can't praiſe the good Morals of Epicurus, without ſuppoſing it all one to a good Life, to have no Religion, or to profeſs any Religion whatever, they are ignorant in the Art of Conſequences, and perfect ſtrangers to the Queſtion. I never compar'd Atheiſm except with Heatheniſm, and therefore the True Religion is no way concern'd in it; the Queſtion being only about Religions introduc'd and kept up by the Devil, and to enquire whether thoſe who have profeſs'd a Worſhip ſo infamous in its Origin and Progreſs as this, have been more regular in the practice of Morality than the Atheiſts. I ſuppoſe it is a point undoubted and fully determin'd, That in the true Religion there is not only more Virtue than elſewhere, but that there is no true Virtue at all, nor any fruits of Righteouſneſs out of it. To what purpoſe then is this pretended fear that I injure true Religion? Is it concern'd in the ill that may be ſaid of the falſe one? And is it not to be fear'd that this great Zeal that is ſhewn, will ſcandalize Men of Senſe, who ſee that this is pretending to niceneſs in favour of a Worſhip, deteſted by GOD, and ſet up by the Devil, as is own'd by all the Doctors of Divinity.

IX. I could not have taken juſt exception to theſe Complaints, if I had made a Romance in which the Perſons ſpoken of had been virtuous, and atheiſtical: For, as I ſhould have been Maſter of their Words and Actions, I had been at liberty to deſcribe them in a manner ſuited to the taſte of the moſt ſcrupulous Readers. But my Dictionary being an Hiſtorical Work, I ought not to repreſent People as they ſhould have been, but as they actually were. I can neither ſuppreſs their Faults nor their Virtues. Seeing then I advance nothing concerning the Morals of ſome Atheiſts, but what the Authors I cite relate of them, no body has reaſon to be offended with me. To make my Criticks ſenſible of the truth of what I ſay, I need only aſk them, Whether they believe the ſuppreſſion of true Facts to be the Duty of an Hiſtorian? I aſſure myſelf they will never ſubſcribe to ſuch a Propoſition.

X. Not but I believe, there are ſome Ingenuous enough to confeſs, that a matter of Fact ought to be ſuppreſs'd by an Hiſtorian, when it is likely to leſſen the abhorrence of Atheiſm, or the veneration of Religion in general. But I moſt humbly intreat them, not to take it amiſs that I continue to believe, that GOD has no need of the Artifices of Rhetorick; and if this may be allow'd in a Poem, or a Piece of Eloquence, it does not follow, that I ought to admit it in an Hiſtorical Dictionary. They muſt give me leave to tell them, That it is enough for me to promote the Intereſt of true Religion; for all that ſhould be done for Religion in general, would ſerve as well for Paganiſm, as Chriſtianity.

XI. I ſhould have been ſo much the more blameable for ſuppreſſing the Truths complain'd of, becauſe, beſides the acting againſt the fundamental Laws of Hiſtory, I ſhould have omitted things which, at the bottom, are moſt advantageous to the true Syſtem of Grace. I have ſhewn in another place (a), that nothing can be more proper to prove the Corruption of Men, which is naturally invincible, and only ſurmountable by the Holy Spirit, than to ſhew, that thoſe who have no ſuper-natural aſſiſtances, are as bad under the practice of a Religion, as thoſe who live in Atheiſm. I add here, that no better office can be done to the Pelagians, than to ſay, that the fear of the falſe Gods was able to induce the Heathens to renounce ſome Vices; for if thro' fear of incurring the malediction of Heaven, they could abſtain from evil, they might alſo riſe up to Virtue by the deſire of ſpiritual Rewards, and in order to procure to themſelves the love of GOD; that is, they might not only have been able to fear, but alſo to love GOD, and act upon this good Principle. The two Handles by which Man is mov'd, are the fear of Puniſhment, and deſire of Reward. If he can be mov'd by the former, he may alſo by the latter; for one can't well be admitted without the other.

(a) See the Penſes diverſes ſur les Cometes, p. 437, 490, 599. and the additions to that Book, p. 58, 110.

XII. If any Perſons more equitable and intelligent than ordinary, ſhould alledge as the only reaſon of their Scandal, the affectation wherewith, they think, I have acquainted my Readers with the good Lives of ſome Atheiſts; I would deſire them to conſider, that in the preſent Caſe, Affectation is very excuſable, and may even be look'd upon as a ſubject of Edification. To underſtand which, one needs only call to mind an Epiſode of my Treatiſe concerning Comets. The true Deſign of that Book (b) was to confute by a Theological Argument, what is commonly ſaid about the preſages of Comets. The neceſſity of inforcing this Argument, put me upon drawing a Parallel between Atheiſm and Heatheniſm, without which, my Proof had lain open to an Objection which would have made it unfit to evince what was neceſſary for me to demonſtrate. Therefore there was a neceſſity for me either to leave that Objection, unanſwer'd, or to confute the Arguments of thoſe who ſay, that the Pagan Idolatry was not ſo great an Evil as Atheiſm. All the ſucceſs of the Combat depended very much upon the Succeſs of this Attack, and therefore according to the Rules of a Diſpute, and by virtue of the Rights belonging to an Author, I was oblig'd to take advantage of whatever Logick and Hiſtory could afford me, to anſwer the Objection. It was not therefore deſignedly, or out of boldneſs, that I alledg'd ſome Matters of Fact tending to evince, that Atheiſts are not neceſſarily more diſorderly in their Lives, than Idolaters. The Laws of Diſputation, and the Right that every one has to anſwer the Objections his Aſſertion is expos'd to, laid upon me a neceſſity of taking ſuch a courſe. Great Complaints have been made againſt this part of my Book, and ſome endeavours have been us'd to make it appear dangerous. I was therefore oblig'd to maintain it, as far as Reaſon and Truth would permit; and conſequently, no body ought to be offended, if I acquaint my Readers, when occaſion offers, That Hiſtory informs us, that ſuch and ſuch Perſons, who deny'd either the Exiſtence, or the Providence of GOD, or the Immortality of the Soul, did nevertheleſs live like honeſt Men. This Affectation, which would perhaps be a juſt Subject of Scandal in another Book, is none at all in mine: On the contrary, it may ſerve to edify my Readers, ſince it ſhews, I have not advanc'd a Paradox out of a Principle of Vanity, but a Remark moſt ſolid and certain, and which ſeems falſe to none, but ſuch who have not examin'd it. There's nothing more offenſive, than a Man who to diſtinguiſh himſelf, raſhly leaves the common Road: And if there are any Writers, who have been ſuſpected upon that account not through their own Fault, but becauſe the Readers were not throughly acquainte, with the thing, nothing can be more edifying than to ſee ſuch Authors juſtify themſelves.

(b) Voize la preface de la 3, édition.

XIII. Entirely to remove all ſuſpicions of a vicious Affectation, I have taken care to remark (a), as often as poſſible, the bad Morals of Atheiſts. If I have not done it oftner, 'twas becauſe matter was wanting. The Publick (b) knows, that I call'd for Examples to be ſhewn me: No body has taken this pains, and I have not as yet, been able to diſcover them by my own Inquiries. I don't pretend to deny, that there have been in all Countries, and at all Times ſuch, as by their Debaucheries, and long criminal Habits, have ſtifled the explicit Faith of the Exiſtence of a GOD. But Hiſtory having not preſerv'd their Names, 'tis impoſſible to ſpeak of them. 'Tis probable, that amongſt thoſe Banditti, and hired Aſſaſſines, who commit ſo many Crimes, there are ſome who have no Religion; but the contrary is ſtill more probable, ſince amongſt ſo many Malefactors, who paſs thro' the Hang-man's Hands, there are none (c) found to be Atheiſts. The Ordinaries, who prepare them for Death, find them always ſufficiently diſpos'd to deſire the Joys of Heaven. As for thoſe profane Epicures, who in the Judgment of Father Garaſſe, and many other Writers, are downright Atheiſts, I have not brought them into the Liſt; the Queſtion not being concerning thoſe we call Practical Atheiſts, People that live without any fear of GOD, but not without a perſuaſion of his Exiſtence; but concerning Atheiſts in Theory: As for Example, Diagoras, Vanini, Spinoza, &c. whoſe Atheiſm is atteſted, either by the Hiſtorians, or their own Writings. The Queſtion only turns upon the Morals of this Claſs of Atheiſts in Theory, Examples of whoſe bad Lives, I deſir'd might be ſhewn me. If I had found any, I had made an ample mention of them. There's nothing eaſier to be found in Hiſtory than ſome Wretches, whoſe abominable Actions make the Readers tremble; but their very Impieties, and Blaſphemies, are a Proof that they believ'd a Deity. This is a natural Conſequence of all the conſtant Doctrine of Divines, That the Devil, the moſt wicked of Creatures, but incapble of Atheiſm, is the promoter of all the Sins of Mankind; whence the greateſt Wickedneſs of Man, muſt have the Character of that of the Devil, which is to be joyn'd with the Perſuaſion of the Being of a GOD. A (d) Maxim of the Philoſophers confirms this Reaſoning.

XIV. If what I have ſaid, is capable of edifying tender Conſciences, by ſeeing that the Poſition which frighted them, well agrees with the moſt Orthodox Principles, they'll find no leſs a Subject of Edification in what I am going to propoſe. That the moſt wicked Men are not Atheiſts, and that the greateſt part of Atheiſts, whoſe Names are come down to us, were virtuous Men, as the World goes, is a Character of the Infinite Wiſdom of GOD, and ought to make us admire his Providence, that has ſet bounds to Man's Corruption, that there might be Societies upon Earth; and if it has favour'd but a few with a Sanctifying Grace, it has diſpers'd a Repreſſing (e) Grace univerſally, which like a ſtrong Bank reſtrains the Floods of Sin, as much as is neceſſary to prevent an univerſal Innundation, which would deſtroy all Monarchical, Ariſtocratick, and Democratick Governments. 'Tis commonly ſaid, that the Means GOD has made uſe of to arrive at this End, has been, to preſerve in the Soul of Man the Ideas of Vertue and Vice, and a Senſe of a Providence which ſuper-intends all, which puniſhes Vice, and rewards Virtue. You'll find this Notion in the Common-places of Divinity, and in abundance of other Orthodox Works. What's the natural Conſequence of this Propoſition? Is it not to ſay, That if there are ſome People whom GOD does not forſake ſo far as to ſuffer them to fall into Epicurus's Syſtem, or that of Atheiſts, 'tis eſpecially thoſe bruitiſh Souls, whoſe Cruelty, Boldneſs, Avarice, Fury and Ambition are capable of ruining quickly a moſt capacious and flouriſhing Country? Is it not to ſay, That if He forſakes ſome, ſo far as to permit that they ſhould deny his Exiſtence, or Providence, they are eſpecially Perſons, whoſe Temper, Education, lively Ideas of Virtue, love of Fame, or ſenſe of Diſhonour, ſerve as ſtrong Bridles to keep them to their Duty? Theſe are two Conſequences that naturally flow from the above-mention'd Principle of Divinity. Now, by informing my Readers, in ſome places

(a) As in the Articles of Bion Boryſthenita & Critias.

(b) See the additions to the Penſées ſur les Cometes, p. 86. See alſo, p. 75.

(c) I ſpeak thus, becauſe I don't remember I have ever read, or heard of any Relations concerning the final Atheiſm of theſe People.

(d) Ἀεὶ δὲ δ᾽ ὑπάρχει ἕκαστον, ἐκεῖνο μᾶλλον ὑπάρχει. Propter quod unum quodque eſt tale, illud ſemper eſt magis tale. Ariſtot. analyt. poſter. lib. 1. cap. 2. p.m. 105. etiam Metaphyſ. lib. 2. cap. 1. pag. 645. F.

(e) I had it from a Divine, that 'tis under this Idea they ſpeak of the Providence of GOD in as much as it has not permitted an inundation of Crimes to deſtroy Societies.

places of this Dictionary, that the moſt wicked Wretches have had ſome Religion; and that thoſe who have had none, have liv'd by the Rules of Virtue, I have ſaid nothing but what agrees with theſe two Conſequences; and therefore there's no longer ground for a juſt offence.

XV. It will be much more juſt to conſider in this the Finger of GOD, and the admirable Conduct of his Providence, which arrives to the ſame End by different ways: the Repreſſing Principle, ſo neceſſary for the preſervation of Societies, as Divines teach, works its effects by the Bridle of Idolatry, in ſome Countries, and in certain Perſons, and by Conſtitution, or the vivacity of Ideas, and a liking to Moral Virtue in ſome others. The Greeks Ingenious and Voluptuous, and thereby obnoxious to a frightful train of Crimes, had need of a Religion that ſhould burden them with infinite Obſervances. They would have had too much time to run into Evil, if the multitude of Ceremonies, Sacrifices and Oracles, had not given them many avocations, and ſuperſtitious Terrors had not alarm'd them. The Scythians, a Stupid People, unexperienc'd in Cloaths and Diet, needed only to deſpiſe Pleaſures, or not to know them. (a) This alone maintain'd their Republick, and hindred them from injuring one another. They were ſo fram'd, as to be all content with what they had at home. Such a Nation has neither occaſion (b) for a Code not Digeſts.

These Fifteen Conſiderations ſeem ſufficient to remove the Stumbling-block, which was thought to be laid in ſome places of my Dictionary. They might afford Matter for a large Book: I have only curſorily propos'd them; for I have ſomewhat more largely treated of them in another place (c), and I ſhall treat of them more amply (d) in a Work that I have promis'd.

(a) Aurum & argentum perinde aſpernantur, ac reliqui mortales appetunt.... Hæc continentia illis morum quoque juſtitiam edidit, nihil alienum concupiſcentibus: QUIPPE ibidem divitiarum cupido eſt, ubi & uſus. Atque utinam reliquis mortalibus ſimilis moderatio & abſtinentia alieni foret.... Prorſus ut admirabile videatur, hoc illis naturam dare, quod Græci longa ſapientium doctrina, præceptiſque philoſophorum conſequi nequeunt. Juſtin lib. 2. cap. 2.

(b) Juſtitia gentis ingeniis culta, non legibus. Id. ibid.

(c) See the Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes.

(d) See the Preface of the 3*d. Edition of thoſe Thoughts.*

EXPLANATION II.

How what I have ſaid concerning the Objections of the Manichees, ought to be conſidered.

THOSE who are ſcandaliz'd at ſome things that I have obſerv'd in the Articles wherein I have treated of Manicheiſm, would be wholly inexcuſable if they went only upon my ſaying, That the Queſtion about the Origin of Evil is very difficult. For the Ancient Fathers ingenuouſly confeſs'd it, as does every Orthodox Divine at this Day. I don't think then, that the rock of offence conſiſted in this; but rather, in my ſuppoſing the Objections of the Manichees inſoluble, whilſt only diſcuſs'd at the Bar of Reaſon.

This muſt needs ſcandalize thoſe, whoſe great Zeal for Evangelical Truth perſuades them, that it triumphs over Error in all kinds of Combat, and whatever Arms it oppoſes. They find ſo much pleaſure in the reading of a Book, wherein Tranſubſtantiation is routed, whether it be aſſaulted by the Teſtimony of the Senſes, and the Principles of Philoſophy, or whether impugn'd by the Scripture, and the Tradition of the firſt Ages; they find, I ſay, ſo much ſatisfaction in ſo compleat a Victory, that they eaſily fancy all other Diſputes of Orthodoxy have the ſame fate. Agreeably flatter'd with ſo ſweet a Perſuaſion, they fret and fume if any one maintains, that all the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, defended and attack'd by the Arms of Philoſophy, don't happily leave the Field; that ſome of them give ground, and are forc'd to retire into the Fortreſſes of Scripture, and to ask leave for the future to arm themſelves in another way, or otherwiſe they'll refuſe to enter the Liſts.

Thoſe, who are vex'd to ſee themſelves thus diſturb'd in the poſſeſſion of an imaginary compleat Triumph, fear moreover that by the confeſſion of a ſort of inferiority, Religion will be expos'd to a total defeat, or at leaſt its Certainty notably weakned, and the Intereſt of the Enemies of the Goſpel advanc'd.

A Scandal receiv'd in this manner, has two favourable Circumſtances; one that it proceeds from a good Principle, the other that it may be eaſily remov'd. It is produc'd by the love of Truth, and it is only riſing up to the conſideration of the Character of Goſpel Truths, to be deliver'd from all this diſturbance. For we ſhall ſee, that far from being the property of thoſe Truths to be reconcil'd with Philoſophy, 'tis on the contrary (e) eſſential to them, not to be ſquar'd by its Rules.

(e) Re- ſtrain th to Goſp Truths, which c tain My ſteries; it muſt b confeſs'd that the Moral P cepts of JESUS CHRIS are eaſily reconcil'd with N tural Reaſon.

THAT the Myſteries of the Goſpel being above Reaſon, it follows, that the Objections of the Unbelievers can't be anſwer'd by natural Reaſon.

The Roman Catholicks and Proteſtants fight it out upon abundance of Articles of Religion, but they perfectly agree in this Point, That the Myſteries of the Goſpel tranſcend Reaſon. There are even ſome Divines who acknowledge the Myſteries deny'd by the Socinians, to be againſt Reaſon. I will not take advantage of that Conceſſion, it ſufficing me, that they are unanimouſly acknowledg'd above Reaſon; for from thence it neceſſarily reſults, that it is impoſſible to ſolve the difficulties of the Philoſophers; and conſequently, that a Diſpute, wherein Natural Light only is imploy'd, will always terminate to the diſadvantage of the Divines, who will be forc'd to give, ground and to retire under the Artillery of Revelation.

'Tis evident, that Reaſon can never reach what is above it; but if it could afford Anſwers to the Objections that oppoſe the Doctrines of the Trinity, and the Hypoſtatick Union, it would reach to theſe two Myſteries, it would get the maſtery of them, manage and ply them, even to the comparing them with its firſt Principles, or with Aphoriſms deduc'd from common Notions, till at laſt, it had concluded, that they agree agree with Natural Light. It would therefore exert it ſelf beyond its Strength, and exceed its own Limits, which is expreſly a Contradiction. It muſt be ſaid then, that it cannot furniſh Anſwers to its own Objections; and therefore they remain victorious, till recourſe is had to the Divine Authority, and the neceſſity of captivating the Underſtanding to the Obedience of Faith.

Let us try to put this in a clearer Light. If ſome Doctrines are above Reaſon, they are out of its reach; If they are out of its reach, it can't attain to them; If it can't attain to them, it can't comprehend them; If it can't comprehend them, it can't find any Idea or Principle that can afford Solutions; and conſequently, its Objections will remain unanſwer'd, or, which is the ſame thing, will be anſwer'd by ſome Diſtinction as obſcure as the Theſis it ſelf which is attack'd. Now 'tis very certain, that an Objection founded upon diſtinct Notions remains equally victorious, whether it have no Anſwer to it, or ſuch an one as no body can underſtand. Can the Match be equal betwixt a Man who objects to you what you both moſt clearly conceive, and You who defend your ſelf with Anſwers which neither You nor He comprehend at all?

HAT
he end
a Phiophical pute, that n't be in'd en it ne up-
Myſte-

Every Philoſophical Diſpute ſuppoſes the contending parties to be agreed about certain Definitions, and to admit the Rules of a Syllogiſm, and the Characteriſticks of falſe Reaſoning. After this, the whole buſineſs conſiſts in examining, Whether a Theſis be mediately or immediately conſiſtent with the Principles agreed upon; Whether the Premiſſes of an Argument are true; Whether the Conſequence is well drawn; Whether a Syllogiſm be imploy'd with four Terms; Whether any Aphoriſm be violated of the Chapter de Oppoſitis, or de Sophiſticis Elenchis, &c. The Victory is obtain'd either by ſhewing that the Subject of the Diſpute has no Connexion with the Principles agreed upon, or by reducing the Reſpondent to an Abſurdity. This may be done, either by ſhewing that the Conſequences of his Poſition are contradictory, or conſtraining him to anſwer things wholly unintelligible. The End of this kind of Diſputes is to clear up Obſcurities, and make Evidence ſhine forth. Hence we judge, that during the courſe of a Diſputation Victory declares more or leſs for the Opponent or Reſpondent, according to the greater or leſs perſpicuity in the Propoſitions of the reſpective Diſputants; and at laſt we determine that ſhe wholly declares againſt him whoſe Anſwers are ſuch as we comprehend nothing in, and who acknowledges they are incomprehenſible. Hereupon we condemn him by the Rules of adjudging the Victory; and even when he can't be purſued into the Miſt he is involv'd in, which forms a ſort of an Abyſs betwixt him and his Antagoniſts, we conclude him utterly defeated, and compare him to an Army, which having loſt the Battle, eſcapes the Conquerours purſuit only by the favour of the Night.

The Concluſion from this is, That the Myſteries of the Goſpel being of a ſupernatural Order, neither can nor ought to be ſubmitted to the Rules of Natural Reaſon: They are not adapted to the Teſt of Philoſophical Diſputes; their Greatneſs and Sublimity hinders them from ſtooping to them. It would be againſt the Nature of Things, for them to come off victorious from ſuch a Combat, whoſe eſſential Character it is to be the Object of Faith, and not of Science: They would be no longer Myſteries, if Reaſon could ſolve all the Difficulties of them; and therefore, inſtead of thinking it ſtrange for any one to ſay that Philoſophy may attack them, but not repulſe the Attack, it would be a ſubject of Scandal (a) to hear the contrary.

If thoſe, whoſe Scruples I would cure, yield not to theſe Conſiderations, in which they'll find, perhaps, ſomething too abſtracted, I intreat them to have recourſe to Reflections that are more adapted to every one's Capacity: I beſeech them to conſider a little the Genius that reigns in the New Teſtament, and in the Miſſion of the Apoſtles.

CON-DERA.
ON on the thod
:
SUS
HRIST
d the oſtles
d anci-
Fa.
rs have ſerved teach-

The humour of diſputing is a thing which ſeems no-wiſe approved in the œconomy of the Goſpel. JESUS CHRIST commands immediately Faith and Submiſſion. 'Tis his common Exordium, and alſo of the Apoſtles, (b) Follow me, (c) Believe, and thou ſhalt be ſaved. Now, that Faith which he requir'd was not procur'd by a Train of Philoſophical Diſcuſſions and great Reaſoning; but was the Gift of God, a pure Grace of the Holy Spirit, which fell for the generality (d) on ignorant perſons. It was not even produc'd in the Apoſtles by reflecting on the Holineſs of the Life of Jeſus, and the Excellence of his Doctrine and Miracles. They ſtood in need of a Revelation from (e) God himſelf, that He whoſe Diſciples they were, was his Eternal Son. If JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles ſometimes deſcended to reaſoning, they ſought not their Proofs in Natural Light, but in the Books of the Prophets, and in Miracles; and if ſometimes St. Paul made uſe of ſome Argument ad hominem againſt the Gentiles, he did not much inſiſt upon it. His method was entirely different from that of Philoſophers: They boaſted of ſuch evident Principles, and of a Syſtem ſo well built, as to fear no other Obſtacles to Perſuaſion but the ſtupidity of the Auditors, or the malicious artifice of their Competitors; and they offered to give an Account of their Doctrine to all the World, and to defend it againſt all Gainſayers. St. Paul, on the contrary, own'd his Doctrine to be obſcure (f), that he knew it but imperfectly, and that nothing of it was to be underſtood (g), unleſs God communicated a ſpiritual diſcernment, without which it muſt be reckon'd Folly. He confeſſes (h), that moſt of thoſe converted by the Apoſtles were ignorant and of mean condition. He does not challenge the Philoſophers to Diſputation, but exhorts the (i) Believers to ſtand well upon their Guard againſt Philoſophers (k), and to avoid the Conteſtations of that Science, which had ruin'd the Faith of ſome perſons.

(a) Note, That we deſign not to condemn thoſe who labour to reconcile theſe Myſteries with Philoſophy; their motives may be good, & their labour, by the bleſſing of God, may ſometimes be uſeful.

(b) Luk. 5. 27. & 9. 59.

(c) Act. 16. 31.

(d) Matth. 11. 25.

(e) Ibid. 16. 17.

(f) 1 Cor. 13. 12.

(g) 1 Cor. 2. 14.

(h) Ibid. 1. 26.

(i) Coloſ. 2. 8.

(k) 1 Tim. 6. 20, 21.

The ancient Fathers govern'd themſelves by the ſame Spirit; they demanded a ready ſubmiſſion to the Authority of God, and regarded the Diſputes of Philoſophers (a) as one of the greateſt Obſtacles the true Faith could meet in its way. Celſus the Philoſopher laugh'd at the Conduct of the Chriſtians, who, ſaid he (b), will neither hear your Reaſons, nor give you any for what they believe, contenting themſelves with ſaying, Examin not, only believe; or elſe, Your Faith will ſave you; and 'tis a Maxim with them, that the Wiſdom of the World is an evil . . . . (c) If, as uſually, they confine themſelves to their Examin not, only believe, they muſt at leaſt tell me what things thoſe are they would have me believe. But obſerve how he is anſwer'd. (d) " If it were poſſible for all men, neglecting the " Affairs of Life, to apply themſelves to Study and Meditation, we need ſeek no other " way to make them embrace the Chriſtian Religion: For, not to ſay any thing of- " fenſive to others, no leſs exactneſs will appear in it than elſewhere, whether in the " diſcuſſion (e) of its Doctrines, or in the illuſtration of the enigmatical expreſſions of " its Prophets, or in the ſignification of its Goſpel-Parables, and abundance of other " things which happen'd, or were ſymbolically ordain'd. But, ſince neither the Ne- " ceſſities of Life, nor the Infirmities of Men, will permit many perſons to apply them- " ſelves to ſtudy, what more profitable method could be found for all the reſt of the " World, than that which JESUS CHRIST was pleas'd to uſe for the Conver- " ſion of the People? And I would fain be told, with reſpect to the great number of " thoſe who believe, and thereby have eſcap'd the Deluge of Corruption in which they " were plung'd, Which is better for them, to have thus chang'd their Morals, and cor- " rected their Life, by believing without examination, that there are Puniſhments for " Sins, and Rewards for Good Actions; or to have waited to be converted till they " were receiv'd, when they not only believ'd, but had carefully examin'd the founda- " tions of thoſe Doctrines? It is certain, that in following this method but few would " arrive whither their pure and naked Faith has conducted them; but moſt of 'em " would have remain'd in their Corruption . . . . (f) But ſince they make ſo much " noiſe about believing without examining, we muſt tell them, that as for us who " obſerve the Profit which hence redounds to the Generality, we frankly confeſs, that " we recommend it to thoſe who are not in a capacity of abandoning all things, to ap- " ply themſelves wholly to the ſearch of Truth".

This paſſage of St. Paul, (g) We walk by faith, and not by ſight, would alone ſuffice to convince us, that amongſt the Philoſophers there's nothing to be gain'd by him that attempts to prove the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion, or to ſtand upon the defenſive: For herein lies the difference betwixt the Faith of a Chriſtian and the Science of a Philoſopher; This Faith produces an accompliſh'd Certainty, but its Object ſtill remains inevident; Science, on the contrary, at once produces the Evidence of the Object, and a plenary Certainty of Perſuaſion. A Chriſtian therefore attempting to maintain the Myſtery of the Trinity againſt a Philoſopher, would oppoſe an inevident Object againſt evident Objections: Would not this be fighting blind-folded and with hands ty'd, with an Adverſary who has the uſe of all his Faculties? But if the Chriſtian could ſolve all the Philoſopher's Objections, only by the Principles of Natural Reaſon, the Aſſertion of St. Paul would not be true, that we walk by faith, and not by ſight: for Science, and not Divine Faith, would be the Portion of a Chriſtian.

Can any Scandal ariſe from an acknowledgment which is a Natural Conſequence of the Evangelical Spirit, and of the Doctrine of St. Paul?

If theſe Reflections upon the Conduct of the firſt Ages have not ſufficient force; if, I ſay, ſuch Objects conſider'd at a diſtance, make not an impreſſion deep enough, let me intreat you to be at the pains of examining the Maxims of the Modern Divines.

The Catholicks and Proteſtants agree in this Poſition, That Reaſon is to be rejected in the judging of a Controverſie about our Myſteries; which comes to this, That this Conceſſion ſhall never be made, That, if the literal ſenſe of a paſſage of Scripture includes inconceivable Doctrines impugn'd by the moſt evident Maxims of the Logicians and Metaphyſicians, it ſhall be declar'd falſe; and Reaſon, Philoſophy and Natural Light ſhall be the Rule to be followed in the choice of a certain Interpretation of Scripture preferably to all others. They not only ſay, that all thoſe are to be rejected who make ſuch a Preliminary demand in the Diſpute, but alſo maintain that they are engag'd in a way that can lead only to Scepticiſm, or Deiſm, or Atheiſm: So that the moſt neceſſary Barrier to preſerve the Chriſtian Religion, is the Obligation to ſubmit to the Authority of God, and humbly to believe the Myſteries he has been pleas'd to reveal, however inconceivable and impoſſible they appear to our Reaſon.

It ſeems that the Papiſts and Lutherans ought more ſtrongly to inſiſt upon this Principle than the Calviniſts; for the Doctrine of the Real Preſence has a more particular occaſion for it; and yet the Calviniſts are as jealous of this Theſis as the others, and drive it with great Zeal againſt the Socinians; and whenever they ſee ſome of their Doctors ſtraggle from the common Road, to make more work for Reaſon, they vehemently anſwer them, and make them ſuſpected of the Socinian Hereſie.

It would be eaſie to gather up the Proofs of all I have ſaid, but it would be to very little purpoſe; for whoever is acquainted with Books of Controverſie, muſt know that the Roman Catholicks continually recommend the Sacrifice of Reaſon, and the Captivity of the Underſtanding, and that the Miniſters impute the Socinian Impieties to the refuſal of this Sacrifice. The Diſputes of (h) the Univerſity of Franeker, ſilenc'd by Authority, and thoſe of the two (i) French Miniſters put to an end by (k) the Walloon

Synod,

(a) See the paſſages of the Fathers which Mr. de Launoe has compiled, chap. 1. de variâ Ariſtotelis fortunâ.

(b) Origen againſt Celſus, book 1. c. 2. p. 5. of Bouhereau's Verſion.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 7.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 5.

(e) This muſt be underſtood not with reſpect to the Principles of Logick & Metaphyſicks treated of in this Diſſertation (for 'tis certain the Fathers did not diſcuſs the Doctrines of the Trinity and Incarnation by thoſe Rules) but to Principles taken from the word of God when the Queſtion is about a Myſtery of the Goſpel.

(f) Ibid. pag 6.

(g) 2 Cor. 5. 7.

(h) In 1687. There are in the Bibliotheq; Univerſelle, Extracts of many Books publiſhed pro and con upon this Controverſie.

(i) Mr. Jurieu and Mr. Saurin.

(k) In Sept. 1696.

Synod, have made too much noiſe, and are of ſo late a date, that there's no need of uſing any Citations. I will only ſay, that one of thoſe two Miniſters maintain'd as the Univerſal Doctrine of the Church, and particularly of Calvin and his Followers, That the Foundation of Faith is neither the Evidence of Objects, nor the Evidence of Revelation; and that the Holy Spirit perſuades us of the Myſteries of the Goſpel, without evidently ſhewing us either what we believe, or the Divinity of the Scripture, or the truth of the ſenſe of ſuch and ſuch paſſages. He was acknowledg'd to be Orthodox; his Adverſary obtain'd a like Teſtimony of his Orthodoxy; but this proves nothing againſt me, for he own'd that Faith is inevident as to the Object, and that the Evidence accompanying it as to Revelation is an effect of Grace. He is therefore one of thoſe who ſay that Myſteries are not under the Juriſdiction of Reaſon, and that Reaſon or Philoſophical Light is not the Rule we are to conſult in our Diſputations about 'em.

Now, if all Orthodox Divines, upon the Myſteries of the Trinity and Hypoſtatick Union, both Catholicks and Proteſtants, unanimouſly reject the arbitration of Reaſon, 'tis a manifeſt ſign they find it incapable of giving Proofs or Solutions in the Controverſies about thoſe Myſteries; for when the Queſtion is about the Divine Exiſtence, they deſire nothing more than to diſpute by the Light of Reaſon, becauſe it furniſhes Arms both to attack and repulſe the Enemy, and to give an entire Victory. The reaſon therefore that they act quite otherwiſe with reſpect to the Trinity and Incarnation, &c. is their knowing Philoſophical Principles to be inſufficient to do good, but capable of doing much harm. If Juſtice and Prudence allow the excepting againſt a Judge, 'tis only in caſe of Incompetence and Partiality. The more Zeal a Man has for his Cauſe, the leſs he neglects his Advantages; and if he has a true ſenſe of his Intereſts, he never refuſes well-affected perſons.

I conclude from all this, That there is nothing eaſier than to ſatisfie thoſe who have been offended with my Conceſſion; for 'tis only deſiring them to obſerve, that if they will be ſcandaliz'd at it, they muſt complain that all the Orthodox Divines are a Scandal to them. There's no medium betwixt taking well what I have ſaid, and taking ill what is ſaid by the Divines moſt contrary to the Socinian Hereſies.

AN ANSWER to ſome Objections: the firſt is, That we give too great advantage to Hereticks and Infidels, by owning that their Philoſophical Objections againſt the Myſteries of the New Teſtament can't be anſwer'd.

If it be objected, That my Conceſſion is really offenſive, ſince 'tis giving too great an advantage to the Unbelievers, to allow their Objections againſt our Myſteries to be philoſophically unanſwerable: I anſwer two things. Firſt, That Scandal muſt then be given not only by what I have ſaid upon this Subject, but alſo by what the moſt Orthodox Divines have publiſh'd upon it. I ſay, ſecondly, That this is not giving to Unbelievers any advantage they can juſtly boaſt of, as they might do if our Preachers imitated thoſe Philoſophers, who ſignifie by poſted Si quis's that they are ready to defend ſuch and ſuch Propoſitions againſt all Oppoſers, and that at ſuch a day, and at ſuch an hour and place they will make 'em appear as clear as Noon-day. If the Apoſtles, St. Paul for example, when amongſt the Athenians, had petition'd the Areopagus to permit him to enter the Liſts with all the Philoſophers; if he had offer'd to maintain a Diſputation upon the Three Perſons which are but One God, and upon the Unity of the Hypoſtaſis of the Divine and Human Nature in Jeſus Chriſt; and if before the beginning of the Diſpute he had agreed about the truth of the Rules eſtabliſhed by Ariſtotle in his Logick, whether concerning the Terms of Oppoſition, or the Character of the Premiſſes of a demonſtrative Syllogiſm, &c. if, laſtly, theſe Preliminaries being well adjuſted, he had anſwer'd that our Reaſon is too weak to comprehend the Myſteries againſt which they propos'd their Objections, he had incurr'd all the ſhame that a non-plus'd Reſpondent could ever ſuffer. The Victory of the Athenian Philoſophers had been compleat; for he would have been judg'd and condemn'd by the very Maxims whereof he had own'd the Certainty before. But if theſe Philoſophers had attack'd him by ſuch Maxims, after he had declar'd to them the Foundation of his Faith, he might have oppos'd this Barrier to them, That his Doctrines were not under the Precinct of Reaſon, that they were reveal'd by God, and ought to be believed without comprehending them. The Diſpute, if it were regular, was not to turn upon the Queſtion, Whether theſe Doctrines were contrary to the Maxims of Logick and Metaphyſicks; but upon the Queſtion, Whether God had reveal'd them. St. Paul could not have the worſt of it, except it had been proved to him that God did not require the belief of thoſe things.

You ſee by this how imaginary is the pretended Triumph of the Unbelievers; for our Divines don't pretend to prove the Trinity and Incarnation by Philoſophical Arguments, admitting only the Word of God for the Foundation of their Proofs and Solutions. This is their Fortreſs, their place of Arms, which it ought to ſuffice them to defend, and ward off all the blows levell'd at them by an Heretick, who bottoms upon the ſame Principle with them, the Divine Authority of the Scripture. It is no great matter if the Enemy ſeize the reſt, being a Country which they have voluntarily abandon'd. 'Tis no great Victory to ſeize a place which no body deſign'd to keep. (a) Facile erat vincere non repugnantes.

To the end that thoſe who read this, having no other Book, may be fully aſſur'd I don't advance a thing at random, I'll remove all their Scruples: I'll cite the Teſtimony of two (b) famous Writers, one a Prieſt, and the other a Miniſter, and both very Orthodox, upon the Trinity, Incarnation, Satisfaction of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſome other Myſteries. "This (c) proceeding is unreaſonable, as being contrary to the "firſt Principles, and the very Foundations of the Chriſtian Religion. If this Reli-"gion told men that it propoſes to them a Faith exempt from all difficulties; that "nothing

(a) Cicero Tuſcul. quæſt. lib. 1. init. fol. m. 2454 C.

(b) Mr Nicolle and M. Claude.

(c) That is, to make a Collection of Reaſons which have ſomething ſurprizing againſt the Trinity, &c.

" nothing can be alledged againſt its Myſteries with any ſort of probability; and " that the Proofs upon which it eſtabliſhes the Truths it teaches are ſo clear, as to force " the incredulity and reluctance of all ſorts of perſons, however prepoſſeſs'd; theſe " would be grounds for pretending to overthrow its Doctrines, by thus heaping up pro- " bable Objections againſt what it commands us to believe. But it is very remote " from this Language: It not only does not tell them that the Truths it teaches can't " be aſſaulted by any probable Reaſons, but tells them it is neceſſary they ſhould be, " and that 'tis an infallible Conſequence of the Deſign God has had in the diſcovery " of Himſelf to Mankind by the true Religion (a)." Mr. Claude having ſaid nothing againſt this paſſage of Mr. Nicolle, ought to be thought the approver of it; for if he had found any Subject of Cenſure in it, he was oblig'd by all ſorts of Reaſons to cenſure it in refuting, as he did, the Book concerning the perpetuity of Faith.

THE SECOND Objection is, That Anſwers are given to theſe Philoſophical Objections.

Let us ſee whether any one can have any reaſon for Scandal, under pretence that the Philoſophical Objections againſt the Doctrine of the Trinity, &c. ſilence not the Profeſſors of Divinity, and that in the Theſes they frequently expoſe to diſpute upon theſe Points, they ſolve all the Difficulties that can be propos'd to them. I deſire ſuch as ſhall urge me with this, to conſider two things: One is, That their Objection can't be good againſt me, but it muſt be ſo againſt all the Divines who acknowledge the great Myſteries of the Goſpel to be inexplicable by Natural Reaſon: The other is, That the Proteſtants can't make uſe of this Objection; for it proves too much; namely, that the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is not expos'd to invincible Attacks, philoſophically ſpeaking. 'Tis the general Doctrine of the Roman Catholicks, that a Body may be in ſeveral places at once. The Thomiſts contenting themſelves with what's neceſſary, have not dar'd to affirm it can be ſo circumſcriptively, but at moſt as JESUS CHRIST is under the Sacramental Species. The other School-men, eſpecially the Jeſuits, have been much bolder; they have maintain'd the circumſcriptive Replication (b), and in this have reaſon'd more conſequently than the Thomiſts; for if the Reaſons alledg'd againſt this Replication were good, the definitive Replication (c) would not be tenable. The Replication is not only taught by the Divines, but alſo in all the Bodies of Philoſophy, and 'tis ever one of the Theſes order'd to be publickly maintain'd in the Schools of Natural Philoſophy. All imaginable Objections are diſcuſs'd in the Books of Scholaſtick Divines, who treat of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and in the Bodies of Philoſophy, in the place where the Queſtions de loco are explain'd: not one of thoſe Objections remains unanſwer'd. Does this hinder the Proteſtants from perſiſting to maintain that the poſition of a Body in many places at once is involv'd in a thouſand Contradictions, and abſolutely impoſſible? Nothing therefore can be inferr'd to the advantage of an Opinion, from the poſſibility of oppoſing ſome Diſtinction (d) or School-term againſt whatever the moſt ſubtle Adverſaries can object. All does not conſiſt in giving an Anſwer, but in giving a Solution which raiſes ſome Ideas, and is exempt from the petitio principii, and which ſhews the Objection to be built upon foundations that have no connexion with common Notions. Here you ſee three Characters which are wanting in the School-mens Anſwers to the Objections againſt Tranſubſtantiation: Therefore their laſt and principal Refuge is to ſay, That the Omnipotence of God ſupplies what Reaſon can't comprehend, and that 'tis our Duty to captivate our Underſtanding, and ſacrifice our Knowledge to the Authority of the Church.

They have been no leſs ſubtil and ingenious to invent Difficulties and Anſwers with reſpect to the Trinity, than to Tranſubſtantiation. But the Socinians are as ill ſatisfied with theſe two kinds of Anſwers, as the Proteſtants are with thoſe relating to Tranſubſtantiation: Both, ſay the Socinians, want the three Characters obſerved before: They ſuppoſe what is in queſtion; they are as obſcure, or obſcurer than the Doctrine it ſelf which is the Subject of Controverſie; they are too inconceivable to be confuted; 'tis a Diſpute wherein Night parts the Combatants; for if the Reſpondent wraps himſelf in a Diſtinction wholly incomprehenſible, the Opponent muſt neceſſarily retire; or if he ſtays, he ſees no opportunity of ſtriking a blow. No man will ſhoot, where there is not the leaſt glimpſe whereby to diſcover or gueſs at the Mark; and as the higheſt degree of Evidence has this property, that it can't be prov'd, the loweſt degree of Inevidence has this deſtiny, that it cannot be aſſaulted. So that no Conſequence can be drawn in favour of a Doctrine from this, that its Opponents, tho' never ſo well provided with Philoſophick Weapons, at laſt meet with an Intrenchment of Diſtinctions, involv'd in ſo impenetrable a Cloud, that they are forc'd to proceed no farther.

There are both in the Proteſtant and Roman Communion a great many perſons who are diſſatisfied with the Explications of the School-men, and think that theſe people have more confounded than explain'd the Myſteries of Religion. Some Proteſtant Divines could wiſh that the Scripture-terms had been inſiſted on, that the Doctrine of the Trinity had been included in five or ſix Lines, and that, inſtead of following the Diſputers from one Objection to another, they had been told, We don't propoſe this to you as a thing you are to comprehend, but as a thing you are to believe: If you can't believe it, beg the Grace of God that you may; if you obtain nothing by your Prayers, your Diſtemper is incurable: Our Diſtinctions and Subtilties will ſerve only to harden you; you'll never leave complaining that we explain an obſcure Doctrine by another more obſcure, obſcurum per obſcurius. 'Tis very probable that this Myſtery propounded in a few words, according to the ſimplicity of the Scripture, would much leſs ſtartle and fright Reaſon, than it does by that great train of Explications which accompanies it in Thomas Aquinas's Commentators. Many Roman Catholicks would heartily ſay, if they durſt, againſt the Subtilties of the School-men,

---

(a) Nicol Prejuge de la Fo. pag. m.92, 93.

(b) 'Tis th the Schoo call the po ſition of th ſame Bod in ſeveral places, without penetrati of dimenſions.

(c) Thu they call the poſiti of the ſa Body in many pl ces at on with pe tration o dimenſi

(d) Compare wit this w I have ſaid in t Article of Zeno about th Objectio relating the divi bility of Matter.

men, what the Abbot Faydit has publiſh'd of them: But tho' they want his Courage to print a ſtrong Invective, as he did, upon this Subject, they nevertheleſs think as he does. See the Margin (a).

Mr. de Balzac has ſaid excellent things in the fifth (b) Diſcourſe of his Socrate Chrétien, of which this is a piece. (c) "Thoſe who have tranſlated from one Language into "another with the greateſt Reputation, have taken Rivers for Mountains, and Men "for Cities. The miſtakes of your Doctors are not leſs than thoſe. Human Rea"ſon falls into more ſtrange Ambiguities when it treats of Divine things: Being "weak and ſhort as it is, it ought to be cautious, and conſider its own ſtrength; it "ought to be more diſcreet and reſerv'd: there may be an intemperance in the deſire "of learning and enquiring: 'tis a Vice to know too much News; Ancient Morality has "condemn'd it; Theophraſtus's Characters don't forget it. And if it be true what was "heretofore ſaid, THAT WE OUGHT NOT TO BE CURIOUS IN A "FOREIGN REPUBLICK; what Audaciouſneſs is it, I pray, what Sacrilege, "for a Citizen of the lower World, an Inhabitant of the Earth, to meddle ſo much "with the Things above, and the Affairs of Heaven? In what Country is he more a "Stranger than in that? Is there any Republick more unknown to him? Is there any "foreign place he is more remote from, or has leſs Society and Correſpondence with? "We owe ſo much Reverence to That Majeſty which conceals itſelf, as not to pry "after Him with ſo much diligence and forwardneſs. Let us ſtop at His Outworks and "Ramparts, without purſuing Him into His Fort and Intrenchments; Let us adore "the Veils and Clouds He has plac'd betwixt us and Him. Since He inhabits a Light in"acceſſible, let us leave off attempting the place of His abode: Let us not endeavour "to ſurprize Him by the ſubtilty of our Queſtions, to force Him with the violence of "our Arguments. If the preſervation of our Eyes be valuable, if our Life be dear to "us, let us ſhun that formidable Preſence, that fatal Light, that Light which dazles "Angels and Men. . . . . (d) At the unmeaſurable diſtance we are from Him, con"fin'd to the loweſt Story of the World He has built, we would aſcend His Throne, "and touch His Crown. We aſpire to His ſtricteſt Confidence and Familiarity; at "leaſt, we pretend to ſee Him with the Eyes of Fleſh, to comprehend Him with a "Mind drown'd in Blood, and bury'd in Matter. We undertake to diſcourſe of His "Nature and His Eſſence, to give relations of His Conduct and Deſigns, with the "Jargon of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy".

Balzac had the Spaniſh School-men in view; but there is no Subject for which they better deſerve this Cenſure, than their Explications of the Myſtery of the Trinity: So little reaſon is there to conclude they have ſucceeded well, under the pretence of their inventing Anſwers to Objections.

But to be impartial to every body, we muſt ſay, that thoſe who engage in Diſputes with the Socinians, and take new Roads, ſeldom fail to loſe their way. This has been experimented in England (e) five or ſix years ago: A famous Divine, thinking he could not confute ſome Socinian Writings by the School-Hypotheſis, imagin'd another; but he was thought to eſtabliſh Tritheiſm, and it was not ſuffer'd to take footing. From whence we may infer how impoſſible it is to confute the Philoſophical Objections of the Socinians; and ſince they acknowledge the Scripture, they ought immediately to be aſſaulted by it. This is the weak part in their Defence; the other is the ſtrong part.

As ſtudious as I am to be ſhort, I muſt obſerve the Method an able Divine, who has ſince been many years Biſhop of Salisbury, took to refute the Objections of a famous Libertin (f) whom he converted: He has given us the Hiſtory of the Conferences he had with him, where we find, amongſt other things, that in anſwering the Difficulties upon the Myſteries of the Goſpel, he had only recourſe to this, That the incomprehenſibility of a Doctrine is not a ſufficient reaſon to reject it, ſince there are a great many moſt certain things in Nature which 'tis impoſſible to comprehend. He mention'd ſome of them, and particularly the Union of the Soul and Body. The Objection made to him was, That it is not in the power of Man to believe what he does not conceive; and that 'tis opening a door to all the Impoſitions of Prieſts, to give Credit to Myſterious Doctrines. (g) Ne myſteriis fidem adhiberet, elabendi viam quærebat; autumabatque à nullo mortalium id fieri poſſe, quandoquidem credere, quod concipere, vel cogitatione comprehendere nequimus, non eſt penes hominem. Credere myſteriis inquiebat nihil aliud eſſe, quam feneſtram aperire præſtigiis ſacerdotum; cum enim populo hac in re obſequente uterentur, omnia illi pro lubitu perſuaderent, qui, impoſito rudi myſterii nomine, domabatur, nulloque negotio credebat. He anſwer'd (h), That it ought not to be wonder'd that the Eſſence of God is incomprehenſible, ſince there is (i) in each Being ſomething we can't account for, and (k) the poſſibility of many Facts acknowledg'd to be true by all the World, may yet be attack'd by ſpecious Arguments; and therefore the Revelation of the Myſtery of the Trinity and Incarnation, and ſome others, being certain, we ought to ſubject our Reaſon to 'em; for the ſole Argument that can be oppos'd to 'em is, that they tranſcend our Reaſon: but is not the ſame difficulty to be found (l) in many things which we admit the truth of? He was ſo far from reckoning the School-mens Anſwers any thing, that on the contrary he confeſs'd they only ſerv'd to render the Difficulties more obſcure. (m) Curioſitatis revera nimium introductum, eaque magis conducit difficilioribus obſcurandis, quam explanandis. Sunt autem defenſa vacillantibus argumentis, illuſtrataque ſimilitudinibus non adeo idoneis ac congruis, additaque nova ſubtilitates, magis intricantes, quam extricantes, quæ omnia haud quaquam negavi. Oppoſitio Hæreticorum priſcis temporibus

(a) To know to what a ſtrange nonplus the Abbot Faydit has reduc'd the School-men, we need only conſult the Author who has attempted to anſwer him, or the excellent Extract Mr. de Bauval has given of his Anſwer, in Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Scavans, May, 1699. pag. 214. & ſeq.

(b) Intitul'd, Concerning the too great ſubtilty in matters of Religion.

(c) Balzac Chrétien Socrate, pag. m. 57. & ſeq.

(d) Id. ib. 62, 63.

(e) I writ this in Novemb. 1701.

(f) John Wilmot E. of Rocheſter, born April 1648. who dy'd penitent in 1680. See the Hiſtory of his Converſion by D. Burnet. I uſe the Latin Tranſlation publiſh'd at Utrecht, 1698.

(g) Roſtæ Comitis in extremis poenitentia, ſeu pœnitentia ſalutaris, pag. 51.

(h) Ibid. pag. 53.

(i) Certum in unaquaque re quid eſſe cujus ratio reddi nequit. Ibid. pag. 52.

(k) Ibid. pag. 53.

(l) Note, That the Author who publiſh'd a Treatiſe of Religion againſt the Atheiſts, Deiſts, and new Pyrrhoniſts, at Paris, in 1677. ſtrongly preſs'd the Argument, That Unbelievers cannot avoid in their Principles believing things incomprehenſible. See Chap. 3, 4, & 5 of the ſecond part.

(m) Comitis Roſtæ in extremis poenitentia, pag. 54, 55.

peribus nimium curioſitatis inter Patres excitavit, quam Scholaſtici ſequiorum ſeculorum mire adauxerunt; verum ſi myſteria potius ea ſimplicitate, qua in ſacris tradita ſunt literis, quam ſecundum abſurdiſſima in ea fanaticorum hominum commentaria accepta fuiſſent, non minus (a) incredibilia viderentur, quam aliqua eorum objectorum, quæ quotidie in ſenſus incurrunt.

Let us not omit this Obſervation. Luther and many other Proteſtant Divines had never maintain'd that there are things falſe in Philoſophy which are true in Divinity, if they had believ'd that the Anſwers to the Philoſophers Objections againſt our Myſteries were ſatisfactory; for they maintain'd this only on account of thoſe Myſteries.

I don't ſee then that hitherto the Objections I had to ſolve in this Explanation have been able to give me any diſturbance. Let us try in ſome others.

THE THIRD Objection, That I ought not to have applied to the Arguments of the Manichees, what might be acknowledged with reſpect to the Arguments oppos'd to the Myſteries of the Goſpel.

If it be objected, That my Conceſſion is ſcandalous, becauſe it relates not to the Philoſophical Reaſons which may aſſault the Trinity, Incarnation, and ſome other Myſteries, but to the Diſputes about the Origin of Evil, many Faults will be committed: For, firſt, the Objector will be ignorant that the Decrees of God about the Fall of Man, and the Conſequences of this Fall, are one of the moſt incomprehenſible Myſteries of Religion; Secondly, That our moſt Orthodox Divines acknowledge it.

The Writings of St. Paul teach us, That this great Apoſtle propoſing to himſelf the Difficulties of Predeſtination (b), could get out of them no otherwiſe than by aſſerting the abſolute Power of God over his Creatures, with an Exclamation upon the Incomprehenſibility of his Ways. Could he more clearly ſignifie, than by ſuch a Solution, the inexplicable Doctrine of the Decrees of God about the Deſtiny of the Elect and Reprobate? Is not this telling us in plain terms, that Predeſtination is one of the Myſteries which moſt puzzle Human Reaſon, and moſt unavoidably command it to humble itſelf under the Authority of God, and ſacrifice itſelf to the Scripture? The Objections it forms againſt the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, are for the moſt part ſenſible only to thoſe who have ſome Tincture of Logick and Metaphyſicks; and belonging to the Speculative Sciences, they have leſs force upon the generality of Men: but thoſe it forms againſt Adam's Sin, and Original Sin, and the Eternal Damnation of innumerable People, who can't be ſav'd without an efficacious Grace, which God affords only to his Elect, are founded upon Principles of Morality, which are known to every body, and which conſtantly ſerve for a Rule both to the Learned and Ignorant to judge whether an Action be unjuſt or not. Theſe Principles carry the utmoſt Evidence, and work upon the Mind and Heart; ſo that all the Faculties of Man revolt, when we muſt impute to God a Conduct not conform to this Rule. Nay, the Solution which is drawn from God's Infinity, and is employ'd as a powerful Motive to captivate the Underſtanding, is not exempt from a new Difficulty; For if that infinite diſtance which raiſes God above all things, ought to perſuade us that He is not ſubject to the Laws of Human Virtues, we cannot be certain that His Juſtice engages Him to puniſh Evil, and we could not confute thoſe who ſhould maintain Him to be the Author of Sin, and yet to puniſh it very juſtly, and in all this to do nothing but what is conſiſtent with the Infinite Perfections of a Supreme Being; becauſe they are not Perfections that are to be adjuſted to our Ideas of Virtue.

'Tis plain then, that the Doctrine of Adam's Sin, with its Dependances, is that, amongſt all the Myſteries unconceivable to Reaſon, and inexplicable by its Maxims, which moſt neceſſarily obliges us to ſubmit to reveal'd Truth, notwithſtanding all the Oppoſitions of Philoſophical Truth.

It were to be wiſh'd that this point had been always remembred; for the unhappy Diſputes about Grace, which have caus'd ſo many Diſorders, were derived from the treating of this Myſtery as a thing reconcilable with our weak Reaſon. The Roman Catholicks here have acted incoherently; they have inſulted Calvin with the utmoſt fury, for literally following St. Paul's Doctrine, whilſt they would explain it in a milder ſenſe, that Human Reaſon might lend an helping hand to it. They had not the ſame conſideration for Reaſon in the Explication of the Paſſages relating to the Trinity and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt. Balzac's ſtrokes againſt his Adverſaries would do well againſt them. " The Miniſters, ſays he, ought to be laugh'd at for Fools, (c) after " the Advances they have made, and the Reſerves they would keep to themſelves. " When they have granted us the more, can they refuſe us the leſs? Having given " us the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, they have reſerv'd themſelves nothing afterwards. By the conceſſion of theſe two great aſtoniſhing Truths, they " have given up the liberty of their Mind; which liberty can't be loſt or preſerved, " but all entire. The ſame Authority which aſſures them of the certainty of the " Apoſtles Creed, aſſures them of the validity of all the other parts of Religion; and " they have no better grounds for conteſting theſe, than that. The Authority being infallible, it is univerſally infallible; it is equally infallible. The Chriſtian being the " Captive of Faith, and not the Judge of Doctrines, ought to obey the Voice that " ſpeaks, without deliberating about the Words, becauſe the Words would not perſuade, if the Voice had not already done it. A Man has no longer a Right to his " firſt Freedom, after he has taken upon him the Yoke of the commanding and victorious God. 'Tis not a proper time for the uſe of Reaſon, after we have ſubmitted to the " Obedience of Faith. How ridiculous, I pray, would it be, one while to quit Reaſon, " and another to reſume it; to make choice of ſome inviting parts of Chriſtianity, and " to reject the diſcouraging ones; to be half Infidel, and half Believer! This would " be capitulating with Jeſus Chriſt, and entring upon Articles with the Church. It " would

(a) I don't underſtand this; and it ſeems the Author ſhould rather have ſaid credibilia than incredibilia, or inſtead of minus have put magis.

(b) See the Note G of the Article Arminius.

(c) Balzac's S crate Chréti Diſcour 12. pag. 320. & ſeq.

" would be doing ſomething worſe, paſſing from Complaiſance to giving the Lye, " admitting one part of what She propoſes to our belief, and maintaining the reſt to " be falſe". Calvin might thus have defended himſelf againſt thoſe who diſlik'd his Hypotheſis of Predeſtination; he might have told them, You impertinently pretend to be ſqueamiſh, after having digeſted the difficulties of One God in Three Perſons, and of Tranſubſtantiation; you will not hear Philoſophical Arguments hereupon; you talk of nothing but the Omnipotent Power of God; you complain of our denying it, when we diſclaim the preſervation of Accidents without a Subject, and the preſence of a Body in different places: Why then do ye attack the Myſtery of Predeſtination by Human Arguments? Why don't ye believe that the Power of God extends even to the reconciling the liberty of Creatures with the neceſſity of His Decrees, and His Juſtice with the puniſhment of a Sin neceſſarily committed?

Be it how it will, it can't be deny'd that the Introduction of Moral Evil, with the Doctrines annex'd to it, is one of the moſt impenetrable Myſteries of the Goſpel. I'll cite ſome Authors upon it.

I repeat not what may be read in another place of this Work, that a Proteſtant Divine publickly confeſſes that St. Auſtin's and Calvin's Hypotheſis is to him an inſupportable Burden, and that he embraces it only becauſe none of the other Hypotheſes were able to give him ſatisfaction. Calvin's Latin words which I have related deſerve a place here in the French of the Author. " Throughout (a) his Writings he perſeveres to exclaim that where-ever the Queſtion is about Sin, the Name of God ought not to be " engag'd in it, ſince nothing belongs to the Nature of God but perfect Juſtice and " Equity. 'Tis therefore a baſe and horrible Calumny to involve a Man who has ſerv'd " the Church of God ſo well, in this Crime, as if he made God the Author of Sin. " He conſtantly teaches indeed, that nothing is done but by the Will of God; and yet he " maintains, that the wicked actions of Men are ſo directed and govern'd by the ſecret Judgment of God, that he has no communication with their Vices. The Sum " of his Doctrine is, That God directs all things, by wonderful means unknown to us, " to what end He pleaſes, ſo that His Eternal Will is the Firſt Cauſe of all things. " And he confeſſes it to be an incomprehenſible Secret, That God determines what to " us appears unreaſonable; and nevertheleſs he affirms, That we are not to enquire too " curiouſly or audaciouſly into His Conduct, ſince the Judgments of God are a great " Deep, and that 'tis better to adore with all Reverence the Myſteries and Secrets " which exceed our Capacity, than to ſcan them, or intrude too far into them". You ſee how he adviſes not to approach this Abyſs, but with a Spirit of Submiſſion and Reverence for this great and incomprehenſible Myſtery. Mr. Morus being Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity in the ſame City of Geneva where Calvin had been, vehemently declaim'd againſt the Reform'd Divines who diſputed about the Univerſality of Grace. He had an eye to Amyraldus and Spanhemius. He made 'em the ſame Lecture as is us'd to audacious Writers, who have the boldneſs to dive into the moſt hidden Secrecies of the Creator. He puts them in mind of the graveſt Maxims that are imploy'd to recommend the Sacrifice of Reaſon, and the Captivity of the Underſtanding, to the Divine Authority, in relation to the moſt incomprehenſible Myſteries. His words have ſo much Emphaſis, that they can't be tranſlated without loſing a great deal of their force. (b) Quis non videat quæ de Trinitate, quam ſibi ſoli notam vetus ait ſcriptor, deque decretis Dei, quorum non aliter conſtat ratio, quam ſi nemini reddatur, deque aliis ejuſmodi, quæ nec licet ſcire, nec prodeſt, anxie diſputantur, non tuto, ſed fruſtra, diſputari? Nemo cæleſte myſterium diſcutiat ratione terrena, divina verba modu non penſemus humanis, inquit Chryſologus. Credere, quod juſſum eſt, non eſt diſcutere permiſſum, ait Ambroſius. Lauda, venerare, tuum eſt neſcire, quod agitur, inquit Author de vocatione Gentium. Quæ Deus occulta eſſe voluit, non ſunt ſcrutanda; quæ manifeſta fecit, non ſunt negligenda, ne & in illis illicite curioſi, & in his damnabiliter inveniamur ingrati. Nos autem faſtidimus aperta in ſcripturis, clauſa, & obſignata, in cælis quærimus, nunquam viſa perambulare, oculis quoque ſubducta calcare pedibus, ἐμβατεύων, Pauli vox agnoſcitor, ſatagimus ardeliones. Quare hi ſic, illi aliter, abſit ut dicamus judicium eſſe luti, non figuli, quæ ſunt Auguſtini verba, compeſcat ſe humana temeritas, & quod non eſt, non quærat, ne id, quod eſt, non inveniat: Ὅτι ἀκατάληπτον τὸ Θεῖον Damaſcenus aliique præſcribunt. Quid æternus minorem conſiliis animum fatigas? Audi Tertullianum: Præſtat, inquit, per Deum neſcire, quia ipſe non revelaverit, quam per hominem ſcire, quia ipſe præſumſerit; cedat curioſitas fidei, cedat gloria ſaluti. Audi Scripturam: ARCANA DEO, revelata nobis, & filiis noſtris. Moſes Dei Vocem audivit; faciem non vidit; quia fide, non viſu, ambulamus, & cujus ferre Majeſtatem non poſſumus, à poſteriori, ut loquuntur, opera cum Moſe luſtramus. Deus abſconditus habitat in caligine, inquit Rex Pacificus; in luce, ſed inacceſſa, inquit cæleſtis Apoſtolus. Hic ſubvectus in tertium cælum quæ viſere potuit, non potuit enarrare: nos humi ſerpentes adhuc enarramus velut conſcii, quæ nunquam, ne per nebulam quidem, vidimus. Non conſtat ſine arcano Majeſtas, nubes Dei gloriam obumbrat, Arca oppanſo velo tegitur: nos in horribile Dei Sacrarium miſſitios oculos evibramus, & nondum bene initiati Epoptas agimus. Ut ad ignem, Solemque, ſic ad Deum accedamus, hactenus ut calore foveamur, non voraci flamma, non radiis æſtuantibus hauriamur. Very lately one of Calvin's Succeſſors to his Chair has in a moſt preciſe manner acknowledg'd the incomprehenſibility of Predeſtination. I have not as yet had the happineſs to ſee his new Syſtem of Divinity; but this we find in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres: (c) " He begins with a Queſtion extremely difficult, " and which is a Rock of Offence to the prophane and weak; namely, Why God has " permitted Sin, which is the cauſe of ſuch a number of Evils, and which he might

" eaſily

(a) Calvin's brief Anſwer to the Calumnies of a certain Pragmatick, attempting to defame the Doctrin of God's Eternal Predeſtination, pag. 2037. of his Tracts, Geneva 1611.

(b) Alexander Morus Oratione de pace, pag. 53. & ſeq. Edit. Amſterd. 1648. in 12.

(c) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Novemb. 1701. pag. 493, 494. in the Extract of M. Pictet's Chriſtian Theology, Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity at Geneva.

“ eaſily prevent? Mr. Pictet does not diſſemble the greatneſs of the difficulty, but places it in its whole light. Thoſe who venture to affirm that God knows not futurity, “ when it depends on the liberty of intelligent Creatures, eaſily diſengage themſelves “ from this difficulty, by ſaying God has not prevented what he has not foreſeen; “ But this is leaping into an Abyſs to avoid a Precipice; and 'tis ſtill more difficult to “ conceive that God ſhould not know futurity, than 'tis to conceive He has not hindred Sin, tho' he foreſaw it. The thought of thoſe who ſay God has permitted it to “ manifeſt his Wiſdom, or to exerciſe his Juſtice and Mercy, ſeems more reaſonable. “ And yet all this is not ſatisfactory; for, beſides that it was not perhaps impoſſible for “ God to manifeſt his Attributes otherwiſe, is it, for inſtance, a great Sign of Mercy, “ to permit a great Evil that might be prevented, in order to have an occaſion of remedying it? Mr. Pictet ſincerely confeſſes, that as the Scripture gives us no reaſon “ of God's Conduct on this occaſion, and ſufficiently intimates that there are Depths “ impoſſible for us to ſound, we ought not to attempt it.

Whoever can be reaſonably ſcandaliz'd with my Articles about Manicheiſm, may be ſo with this Profeſſor of Geneva's Doctrine, as Orthodox as it is.

Let us add alſo the Teſtimony of a Roman Catholick, that the meaſure may be full. “ There are (a) ſhallow Minds, who had rather condemn boldly what they don't underſtand in the holy Fathers of the Church, than humble themſelves, as They “ did, under the weight of the Difficulties that are found in the Explication of the “ Myſteries of our Faith: For the Juſtification of a Sinner, and the Sanctification of a “ Chriſtian, is a Myſtery, and a great One. And 'tis from looking upon it as no “ Myſtery, that men boldly attempt to level all its Difficulties; that they form Syſtems “ that bring every thing to Evidence and Demonſtration, if we believe the Authors; “ and that they imagin a Scientia media in God, invented at firſt by the Semi-Pelagians, “ and whereof Pope Clement VIII. excellently skill'd in this Subject, was wont to ſay, as “ (1) Lemos relates it, that it was an human invention to accomodate all things in appearance. “ Away with thoſe human inventions, which explain not the Myſteries but by deſtroying them, and give not the Mind ſatisfaction but by ſeducing it with the fallacious “ appearances of Light and Evidence. Let us receive with humility what the Scripture “ and Tradition diſcover of them. Let us willingly be ignorant of what God will conceal from us. Let us ſtop where the Apoſtles and Doctors of the Church have ſtopt; “ and in reading St. Auſtin, ſo far from inſulting him as an erroneous Writer, who “ leads his Followers to a Precipice of Error, let us acknowledge it is not from his “ Expreſſions the Difficulties proceed, but from the Subject itſelf, as he anſwers “ Julian.

THE FOURTH Objection is, That we ought not to acknowlege diſadvantageous Truths.

If there be any that are offended at my departing from the Maxim, That we ought never to own to our Adverſaries that we cannot anſwer their Objections; I ſhall need but a ſhort Apology, having but this little Queſtion to ask them: Is not acting ſincerely a commendable thing? Is it not a matter of obligation, at leaſt of permiſſion? It can't be deny'd. I may then make uſe of this laudable Liberty, eſpecially when there is no Decree of a Synod or Conſiſtory to tye a man's hands in that reſpect. If any one can produce a Doctrinal Determination ſign'd by four Profeſſors of Divinity, and ſeal'd with the Seal of ſome Univerſity, which is no great demand; if any one, I ſay, can ſhew me ſuch an Act, importing that no Orthodox Man ought to own, not even when 'tis moſt true, that certain Objections of the Heterodox are unanſwerable otherwiſe than by Scripture, I will engage to do every thing they'll have me; for I am certain I ſhall never ſee ſuch a Subſcription.

But for a more ample ſatisfaction of the moſt ſcrupulous Readers, I make a Declaration here, That where-ever it is ſaid in my Dictionary that ſuch and ſuch Arguments are unanſwerable, I deſire not to perſuade others that they are abſolutely ſo; I mean no more than that they ſeem to me unanſwerable. This has no ill Conſequence; every one may imagine, if he pleaſes, that I am of this opinion for want of due penetration; I wiſh they wou'd add, that in conforming my ſelf to the Rules of Sincerity rather than to the Politick Maxims of the Spirit of a Party, I conſider that neither Hereſie nor Heatheniſm can draw any Advantage (b) from the unanſwerableneſs of their Objections againſt Myſteries.

THE FIFTH Objection is, That I have not confuted the Manichees.

The remaining Difficulty will require a little longer Examination. It is founded upon my relating at large the Objections of the Manichees, and not troubling my ſelf to produce the Arguments that confute 'em. What follows will give ſatisfaction to all reaſonable Readers. Four Reaſons hinder'd me from inſiſting on the Confutation of Manicheiſm.

The firſt is, That conſidering the preſent diſpoſition of men, there is no Hereſie leſs to be fear'd than this. The People can't but abhor an Hypotheſis which admits an eternal and increated Nature diſtinct from God, an Enemy to God, and eſſentially Wicked: And as for the bold Wits, or in general all thoſe who have cultivated the Study of Metaphyſicks, and have any Inclination to abuſe it, they diſlike nothing more than a multiplicity of Principles: the depravity of their Taſte inclines them rather to be perfect (c) Unitarians, than to declare for the Dualiſts (d).

In the ſecond place, all Chriſtians, however ignorant they be, ſo clearly include Omnipotence and Infinity in the Idea of the Divine Nature, that they have no need of borrow'd Arms to fight the Manichees. This Idea alone renders them ſecure in an offenſive War; it affords them a ſolid Confutation of that Heretical Hypotheſis: I therefore did not think it neceſſary to ſhew any of my Readers how it was to be attack'd.

Thirdly,

(a) St. Auguſtin juſtifie de Calviniſme, p. 179, 180. 'Tis a piece printed in 1689 with the Letters of the Prince of Conti to Father de Champs.

(1) Inventum humanum ad accommodandum in apparentia omnia. Lemos 1 tom. p. 2. Tract. 5. c. 35. pag. 289.

(b) See what I a ſwer to t firſt Obj ction.

(c) Thos ſhort we may cal thoſe w with th Spinozi acknowl but one Subſtanc in the U verſe: I note, th below I give th Name t thoſe w acknowl but one firſt Ca of all things.

(d) Th the P ans*ca Follow of two Princi*

Thirdly, The Obſervation I made, and ſufficiently enlarged upon in the Remark D of the Article Manichees, contains all that is neceſſary to bring all Men of Judgment out of Conceit with the Doctrine of two Principles. I ſaid the Goodneſs of a Syſtem conſiſts in including nothing repugnant to evident Idea's, and giving the Reaſon of Phænomena. I added, that the Syſtem of the Manichees has at beſt but the Advantage of explaining many Phænomena, which ſtrangely perplex the Followers of the Principle of Unity, but otherwiſe it ſtands on a Suppoſition repugnant to our cleareſt Idea's; whereas the other Syſtem is built upon thoſe Notions. By this Reflection I give the Superiority to the Unitarians, and I take it from the Dualiſts. For all Men of reaſoning grant that a Syſtem is much more imperfect, when it wants the firſt of the Qualities I have mention'd, than when it wants the ſecond. If it be built upon an abſurd, confuſed, improbable Suppoſition, this Imperfection is not made up by a happy Explication of the Phænomena; but if it does not explain them all ſucceſsfully, this is made up by the Clearneſs, Probability, and Conformity that is found in it with the Laws and Idea's of Order; and thoſe who have embrac'd it for this Perfection, don't uſe to be diſcourag'd under Pretence that they can't give an Account of all Matters of Experience. They impute this Fault to the Narrowneſs of their Minds, and imagine that in Time, they ſhall be able to diſcover the true Means of reſolving the Difficulties. A Carteſian Philoſopher finding himſelf preſs'd with an Objection concerning the Principle given by Deſcartes of the Flux and Reflux of the Sea, anſwer'd among other things, (a) That an Opinion ought not to be lightly quitted, eſpecially when it is well grounded in other reſpects. It was objected to Copernicus, when he propoſed his Syſtem, that Mars and Venus ſhould appear much greater at a certain time, becauſe they came nearer the Earth by many Diameters. The Conſequence was neceſſary; and yet nothing of this appear'd. Tho' he knew not what to anſwer, he did not think himſelf oblig'd to forſake it, but only ſaid that Time wou'd diſcover it, and that perhaps it was by reaſon of the great Diſtance. This Anſwer was taken for an Evaſion, and there ſeem'd to be ſome Reaſon for it: But the Teleſcopes having been ſince invented, it appeared that what was oppos'd to him as a great Objection, is the Confirmation of his Syſtem, and the Overthrow of Ptolomy's.

Obſerve here by the By, a fine Example of what I have ſaid concerning the Perfection of a Syſtem: That of Copernicus is ſo diſentangl'd, ſo ſimple, and ſo mechanical, that it ſhou'd be prefer'd before Ptolomy's, tho' it cou'd not ſo well reſolve ſome Phænomena.

Laſtly, My fourth Reaſon is, That I pointed out ſo good and ſo certain a Remedy, that it would have been needleſs to uſe any other Expedient to compenſate the Diſadvantage. The Syſtem of the Dualiſts gives a better Account of many Experiences than that of the Unitarians; but on the other hand, it contains monſtrous Abſurdities directly repugnant to the Idea's of Order. The Unitarian Syſtem enjoys the Perfection oppoſite to this Defect, and therefore, all things duly conſider'd, is preferable to the other. This might have been ſufficient, but I further obſerv'd that the Unitarian Syſtem was conſonant to Scripture, and that of the Dualiſts irrefragably refuted by the Word of God. Can any one deſire a ſtronger and more demonſtrative Proof, to be ſure that the former Syſtem is true, and the latter falſe? Muſt I after this, to remove all Scruples, philoſophically refute Manicheiſm! Would not he have little Faith, who ſhould have Occaſion for ſuch a Diſpute? God ſpeaks, and does not this fully convince you? Would you have other Securities? Would you have his Teſtimony ratify'd by human Reaſon? Is not this unworthy of a Man of common Senſe? Do you fear the Objections of the Manichees, when you have the Authority of Revelation againſt 'em?

But now out of regard to the Men of little Faith, I'll propoſe ſome Arguments againſt Manicheiſm.

SOME Arguments againſt Manicheiſm.

I will not attack it in its weak Part; that is, I will not take Advantage of the palpable Abſurdities the Manichees ran into when they came to particular Explications of their Doctrine. They are ſo wretched, that it would be a ſufficient Confutation of 'em, barely to relate them. We have ſeen a Specimen of it above (b). Laying aſide the ridiculous Part of that Hypotheſis, I ſhall only conſider their Syſtem in the greateſt Simplicity it can be reduc'd to.

I will not make uſe of this Objection of Simplicius (c): The Principle of Good and the Principle of Evil would be contrary; but they could not be contrary without being under the ſame Genus; and therefore there would be ſomething above them, which thing would be but one, and have all the Eſſence of a Principle: that thing would be properly a Principle, and conſequently there would not be two firſt Principles; and thus the Suppoſition of two contrary Principles implies a Contradiction. This is more ſubtil than ſolid; for Genus's and Species exiſt only in our Underſtanding; and therefore the Genus including the two contrary Principles, would be at moſt but an Idea of our Mind, as the general Idea of Being, which, according to ſome Chriſtian Philoſophers, is univocal to God and the Creatures.

Simplicius's other Arguments are much more ſolid (d). He ſhews the Patrons of two Principles, one of Good, and the other of Evil, that their Opinion is wholly injurious to the God whom they call good; that it takes from him at leaſt half his Power, and makes him timorous, unjuſt, imprudent, and ignorant. The Fear, ſaid they, he was under of an Irruption from his Enemy, obliged him to forſake Part of the Souls, in order to ſave the reſt. Theſe Souls were Portions and Members of his Subſtance, and had committed no Sin. Simplicius concludes from hence, that ſuch a

---

(a) Gadroys, Lettre à Mr. de la Grange Trianon pour ſervir de reſponſe à celle que Mr. Caillet a écrite pag. 13. & 14. That Letter was publiſh'd at Paris in 1677.

(b) In the Remark B of the Article Manichees, and in the Remark F of the Article Zoroaſter. See alſo the Remark E of this laſt Article.

(c) Simplic. in Epictet. Enchir. cap. 34 pag. 163. edit. Lugd. Bat. 1640.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 165.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 166,

(b) Note that it appears from this that they acknowledg'd that Evil exceeds God in this World.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 168.

Treatment was unjuſt, eſpecially ſince they were to be tormented, and in caſe they contracted any ſtain, they were to remain eternally in the Power of Evil. So that the good Principle not knowing how to manage his Intereſts, expos'd himſelf to an eternal and irreparable Mutilation. Add to this, that his Fears were ill grounded; for ſince the Dominions of Evil were from all Eternity, and by their own Nature, ſeparate from Dominions of Good, there was no Reaſon to fear that Evil ſhould make an Inroad upon the Territories of its Enemy. Simplicius taxes his Adverſaries with giving leſs Foreſight and Power to the good Principle than to the Evil. The good Principle (a) did not foreſee the Misfortune of the Detachments he expos'd to the Enemy's Aſſaults; but the ill Principle very well knew what Detachments would be made againſt him, and prepar'd the neceſſary Engines to carry them off. The good Principle was ſo ſimple, as rather to ſuffer a Mutilation, than receive the Enemy's Detachments upon his Diſtricts, who by that Means would have loſt Part of his Members. The ill Principle was always (b) ſuperior, loſt nothing, and preſerv'd all his Conqueſts; but the good Principle voluntarily gave up many Things out of Fear, Injuſtice and Imprudence. The Author concludes, that by refuſing to acknowledge God the Author of Evil, they make him bad all manner of Ways. (c) Τὸ δὲ ἀγαθὸν, ὡς ἐκεῖνοί φασιν, ἑκουσίως ἑαυτὸ τῷ κακῷ συμμίξαν, καὶ δειλῶς καὶ ἀδίκως καὶ ἀνοήτως κατ' αὐτὸ μίξαν τὴν διοίκησιν· ὡς φεύγοντες αἴτιον αὐτὸν τῶν κακῶν εἰπεῖν, πάντοθεν ἀπογράφουσι. καὶ κατὰ τὴν παροιμίαν φεύγοντες τὸν καπνὸν, εἰς τὸ πῦρ ἐμπεπτώκασιν. Cum BONUM ultro ſeſe cum MALO commiſcuerit, ſeque & timidè, & injuſtè, & amenter (ſi illis credimus) geſſerit. Itaque dum mali cauſam dicere Deum recuſant, ab omni parte malum deſcribunt: & ut proverbio dicitur, fumum fugientes in ignem inciderunt.

I omit many other Obſervations of Simplicius, againſt the Hypotheſis of two Principles, becauſe they attack thoſe Parts of it, which were weak only through the particular Fault of the arbitrary Explications of thoſe who defended it. There's ſomething of this in his Objections which I have abridg'd; but I'll produce one that ſtrikes home the Doctrine of two Principles, tho' it be conſider'd with the greateſt Simplicity.

(d) Id ib. pag. 169.

(e) Id ib.

He ſays (d), it entirely deſtroys the Liberty of our Souls, and neceſſitates them to ſin, and conſequently implies a Contradiction; for ſince the Principle of Evil is eternal and incorruptible, and ſo potent that God himſelf can't conquer him, it follows that the Soul of Man can't reſiſt the Impulſe with which he moves it to Sin. But if a Man be invincibly driven to it, he commits no Murder or Adultery, &c. by his Fault, but by a ſuperiour external Fault, and in that Caſe he is neither guilty nor puniſhable. Therefore there is no ſuch Thing as Sin, and conſequently this Hypotheſis deſtroys it ſelf, ſince if there be a Principle of Evil, there is no longer any Evil in the World: But if there be no Evil in the World, it is clear there is no Principle of Evil; whence we may infer, that thoſe who ſuppoſe ſuch a Principle, deſtroy by a neceſſary Conſequence both Evil and the Principle of it. (e) Εἰ δὲ τούτων ὡς κακῶν ὄντων τὴν αἰτίαν ζητοῦντες, ἀρχὴν ὑπέθεντο κακοῦ· ἐκείνης δὲ ὑποτεθείσης καὶ βιαζομένης οὐκ ἔστ' οὐδὲν ἔτι κακόν· χαριέντως αὐτοῖς ὁ λόγος ἀντιπεριτρέπεται· συνάγεται γὰρ, ὅτι εἰ ἔστιν ἀρχὴ τοῦ κακοῦ, οὐκ ἔστι κακὸν ὅλως· εἰ δὲ μὴ ἔστι κακὸν, οὐδὲ ἀρχὴ ἄν τις τοῦ κακοῦ, ὥστε εἰ ἔστιν ἀρχὴ τοῦ κακοῦ, ὥς φασιν, οὔτε κακὸν ἔσται, οὔτε ἀρχὴ τοῦ κακοῦ. Quòd ſi talium facinorum ut malorum cauſam inquirentes, MALI principium ſtatuerunt; eoque ſtatuto, & quidem vim inferente, malum nullum relinquitur, feſtivè ſuo ipſi (quod ajunt) gladio jugulantur. Nam inde colligitur: ſi MALI principium ſit, nullum omnino eſſe malum. Si vero malum non eſt, ne principium quidem MALI eſſe. Itaque ſi eſt principium mali, ut ajunt, nec malum erit nec mali principium.

(f) In the Remark G of the Article Paulicians.

This Objection is no leſs ſolid than ſubtil. It may be ſtrengthen'd by that which I have propos'd in another (f) Place, viz. That the Doctrine of the Manichees is deſtructive of all Religions, ſince if they argue conſequentially, they can hope for nothing from their Prayers, nor fear any thing from their Impiety. They muſt be perſwaded, that whatever they do, the good Principle will be always propitious to them, and the evil One always adverſe: One of 'em can do nothing but Good, and the other can do nothing but Evil. They are determin'd to this by their Nature, and they purſue this Bent to the utmoſt Extent of their Power.

The Argument I am going to make, ſeems to me very ſtrong. The beſt Way we can take in philoſophical Diſcuſſions, is to conſult the Idea's of Order. If we conſult them in the preſent Diſpute, we ſhall plainly ſee that Unity, and infinite Power, and Happineſs, belong to the Maker of the World. The Neceſſity of Nature required that there ſhould be Cauſes of all Effects; and therefore a Power ſufficient for the Production of the World did neceſſarily exiſt. Now 'tis much more conſonant to Order, that this Power ſhould be united in one Subject, than divided into two or three, or an hundred thouſand. Let us therefore conclude, that it has not been divided, and that it reſides entire in one ſole Nature, and that therefore there are not two firſt Principles, but one only. There would be as much Reaſon to admit an Infinity of them, as the Atomiſts did, as to admit only two.

If it be contrary to Order, that the Power of Nature ſhould be divided into two Subjects, generally ſpeaking, it wou'd be much more ſtrange, if thoſe two Subjects were Enemies, and diametrically oppoſite: Nothing but all manner of Confuſion could ariſe from it: What one would do, the other would undo; and ſo either nothing would be done, or if any thing was done, it would be an odd Work, and very far from the Juſtneſs of this Univerſe. Thus you ſee Manicheiſm refuted by a very ſtrong Argument. If the Manichees had admitted two Principles acting in concert in all Things, they had been expoſed to leſſer Difficulties.

However ſuch a Syſtem would have been contrary to the Idea of Order, with Reſpect to the Maxim (a), that Beings are not to be multiplied without Neceſſity; for if there are two firſt Principles, they have each all the Power neceſſary to the Production of the Univerſe, or they have it not. If they have, one of them is ſuperfluous: If they have not, that Power was vainly divided, and it had been better in one Subject; it would have been more active, virtus unita fortius agit, ſay they in the peripatetick Schools. Beſides, 'tis not eaſie to conceive how a Cauſe that is Self-exiſting, can have but a Portion of Power. Who could have confined it to certain Degrees? It depends upon nothing, but ſtands upon its own Bottom.

The Rabbin Maimonides ſeems too nice, when he rejects all the five Proofs of the Unity of God, made uſe of by the Philoſophers of the Sect of the Speakers, and when he praiſes one of 'em, who finding himſelf perplex'd by the Weakneſs of thoſe Proofs, ſaid, that the Unity of God was not known or could not be proved, but by Revelation ſupported by Tradition. (b) Hæc argumentorum iſtorum debilitas ſic defatigavit & exercuit nonnullos, ut quidam illorum dixerit, Unitatem Dei haberi ex lege per Cabbalam; ſed à reliquis ludibrio tantùm fuit habitus & non niſi ſannis exceptus. Mihi autem videtur, Virum illum fuiſſe ſani admodùm ingenii ac judicii. Nam cùm nihil ſolidum & demonſtrativum in ipſorum rationibus vidiſſet, in quo animus ipſius acquieſcere potuiſſet, dixit, per Cabbalam ſive Traditionem hoc haberi ex lege. The fourth of thoſe five Arguments was this: Either one God was ſufficient for the Production of the World, or was not. If one ſuffic'd, another God would have been uſeleſs; and if he wanted the Aſſiſtance of another God, each of them wanted the Force that is neceſſary; but ſuch an Imperfection is inconſiſtent with the Deity. Maimonides anſwers, That tho' one God had not been able to frame the Structure of this World, there could be no juſt Reaſon to call him impotent, or inſufficient, ſince he ought not to be call'd ſo who does not that which exceeds his Nature. 'Tis no Impotency in God not to be able to give himſelf a Body, or to make a Square whoſe Side ſhould be equal to its diagonal Line. This hinders not God from being omnipotent; the natural Impoſſibility of ſome Things does no Prejudice to the Omnipotence of God. If therefore it be maintain'd to be naturally impoſſible for one God to create the World, the Neceſſity of two will be no Sign of Imperfection or Defect in either of them. (c) Sicut non eſt attribuenda Deo Impotentia, quia non poteſt ſeipſum corporeum facere, vel alium ſibi ſimilem creare, aut quia nequit creare quadratum, cujus latus æquale ſit diametro: ſic illi, qui duos Deos ſtatuunt, poſſunt dicere, non eſſe illis Omnipotentiam derogandam ideò, quia nullus illorum ſolus creat; eò quòd neceſſitas exiſtentiæ ipſorum requirat, ut ſint duo. Hoc verò non eſſe ex indigentia, quaſi unus alterius ope indigeret, ſed ex neceſſitate, contrariumque eſſe impoſſibile. Et ſicut non ideò dici poteſt, Deum non eſſe omnipotentem, nulloque modo Indigentiæ, Impotentiæ vel Inſufficientiæ titulo appellandum, quòd non poſſit exiſtere facere corpus aliquod, niſi creet Subſtantias individuas, illaſque per Accidentia, quæ itidem creat, conjungat, ut illi Loquentes aſſerunt; quia ſcilicet, ut aliter fiat, eſt impoſſibile. Sic, qui duos Deos ſtatuit, dicere poteſt, impoſſibile eſſe, ut unus ſolus faciat omnia, nec tamen Imperfectioni ipſius hoc adſcribendum eſſe, quia illa talis ſit, ut duo ſimul & unà ſint & operentur.

It might be ſhewn that theſe are meer Cavils; but to avoid too long Diſcuſſions, I am contented to ſay that the Manichees can't uſe this Subterfuge; for if any Power ought to be eſſentially contain'd in the Nature of God, 'tis that of doing what he moſt earneſtly deſires. The Idea of God includes no Attribute with more Clearneſs and Evidence than Beatitude. If therefore any Want of Power is capable of making God unhappy, we muſt ſay that it is eſſential to God to be without this Want; but he muſt neceſſarily be ſubject to it, if the Opinion of the Manichees were true: therefore their Syſtem is utterly falſe.

Such is the Nature, ſay they, of the good Principle, that he can produce nothing but Good, and with his whole Might he oppoſes the Introduction of Evil. He wills then and deſires with the utmoſt Ardour, that there ſhould be no Evil: 'Tis therefore againſt his Will that there is Evil in the Univerſe. He has done all that he could to prevent this Diſorder; if therefore he has wanted a neceſſary Power to prevent it, his moſt earneſt Deſires have been fruſtrated, and conſequently he has wanted the Power moſt neceſſary to his Happineſs; therefore he has not the Power which he ought moſt neceſſarily to have, according to the Conſtitution of his Being. But can any Thing be more abſurd than this? Is not this a Doctrine that implies a Contradiction?

The two Principles of the Manichees would be the moſt miſerable of all Beings; for the good Principle could not caſt his Eyes upon the World, but he would ſee a dreadful Multitude of all kinds of Evils: Nor could the evil Principle peep abroad without ſeeing a great deal of Good. The Sight of Evil would afflict the one, and the Sight of Good the other. This would not be a Sight ſometimes interrupted, but continual, and without the leaſt Abatement. The moſt miſerable Men are not under ſo ſevere a Fate; they ſucceſſively paſs from Sorrow to Joy, and at laſt Death ſecures them from the Miſeries of this Life. But the two Principles of the Manichees are immortal, they can ſee no End or Interruption of thoſe unpleaſant Objects, which diſturb them to the higheſt Degree.

All that the Manichees could ſuppoſe, concerning the firſt Introduction of Evil, and its firſt Combination with Good in the Heart of Man, was ſubject to a thouſand Difficulties. Their own Weapons flew in their Faces: They could not bear the Hypotheſis which teaches that Evil proceeded from the ill Uſe of Free-will. God, ſaid

(I 2) they,

(a) Non ſunt multiplicanda entia ſine neceſſitate.

(b) Maimonides in More Nevochim parte 1. cap. 75. p. m. 175.

(c) Id. ib.

they, infinitely Good, would not have ſuffer'd his Creatures to degenerate from their original Goodneſs; and yet they did not own them to be incorruptible in a moral Senſe. We have ſeen that Simplicius objected to them, that the Souls the ill Principle had ſeiz'd on, and which were Portions of the good One, became evil, and liv'd eternally in Corruption and Miſery, under the Empire of the Conqueror. But here follows ſomething worſe. We know by Experience, that the ſame numerical Soul ſins and does good Actions. When a Man repents and implores the Mercy of God, and makes Amends for his ill Life by Alms-Deeds, &c. this is not done by two Subſtances, but by one and the ſame Subject; we know it by our inward Conſciouſneſs, and Reaſon will have it ſo: For why ſhould a Man afflict himſelf for, and repent of a Fault which he has not committed? I ask the Manichees, Whether the Soul which does a good Action, was created by the good Principle or by the Evil? If it was created by the evil One, it follows that Good may ariſe from the Fountain of all Evil: If it was created by the good Principle, it follows that Evil may ariſe (a) from the Fountain of all Good, becauſe the ſame Soul, on other Occaſions, is guilty of Crimes. Thus you ſee yourſelves reduc'd to overthrow your own Reaſonings, or to maintain againſt the internal and evident Senſe of every Man, that the Soul which does a good Action, is not the ſame that does a bad one.

(a) That is, by the ill Uſe of Free-Will beſtowed upon Men by the good Principle.

To extricate themſelves from this Difficulty, they had need to ſuppoſe three firſt Principles; one eſſentially good, and the Cauſe of all Good; another eſſentially evil, and the Cauſe of all Evil; and a third eſſentially ſuſceptible of Good and Evil, and meerly paſſive. After which they ſhould ſay, that the human Soul is form'd of this third Principle, and does ſometimes a good Action and ſometimes a bad one, according to the Influence it receives from the good and ill Principle.

THE Concluſion of this Explanation.

Thoſe who ſhall attentively conſider what I have ſet forth in this Explanation, will doubtleſs ceaſe to be offended with what I have ſaid concerning the Manichees; they will ſee that it may be read without Scandal, and with Edification, provided they well remember,

I. That it is the Property of Goſpel-Myſteries, to be liable to Objections which cannot be fully clear'd by natural Reaſon.

II. That the Unbelievers can juſtly draw no Advantage from this, viz. That the Maxims of Philoſophy don't afford a full Solution of the Difficulties they propoſe againſt the Myſteries of the Goſpel.

III. That the Objections of the Manichees, about the Origin of Evil and Predeſtination, ought not to be conſider'd in general as impugning Predeſtination, but with this particular Reſpect, That the Origin of Evil, the Decrees of God upon it, and the reſt, are one of the moſt inconceivable Myſteries of Chriſtianity.

IV. That it ought to ſuffice every good Chriſtian, that his Faith is built upon the Teſtimony of the Word of God.

V. That the Manichean Syſtem conſider'd in it ſelf is abſurd and unwarrantable, and contrary to the Ideas of Order; that it is liable to Retortions, and can't remove Difficulties.

VI. That my Conceſſions can't give Scandal, but at the ſame time the Doctrine of the moſt orthodox Divines muſt be concluded ſcandalous, ſince all that I have ſaid is a natural and unavoidable Conſequence of their Doctrine; and I have only related more at large what they more ſummarily teach.

Some perhaps will think my Confutation of Manicheiſm imperfect, becauſe I anſwer not the Objections I have drawn out, as coming from the Manichees. I deſire 'em to remember, that as for evident Anſwers drawn from natural Reaſon, I know none; and as for Anſwers which the Scripture affords, they are to be found in abundance of controverſial Books.

They who ſhall ask of what Uſe are the Diſcuſſions that have offended them, will ſee my Anſwer in the Third Explanation.

EXPLANATION. III.

That what has been ſaid of Scepticiſm in this Dictionary, can't prejudice Religion.

FIRST I lay down, as the Baſis of this third Explanation, this certain and undoubted Maxim: That Chriſtianity is of a ſupernatural Order, and reſolved into the ſupreme Authority of God propoſing to us Myſteries, not for us to comprehend, but to believe with all the Humility that is due to an infinite Being, who can neither deceive nor be deceiv'd. This is the Pole-Star of all the Diſcuſſions and Diſputes about the Articles of the Religion, which God has reveal'd by JESUS CHRIST.

Hence neceſſarily reſults the Incompetence of the Philoſophical Tribunal, to judge of Chriſtian Controverſies, ſince they ought to be ſubmitted only to the Bar of Revelation.

Any Diſpute about this ought to be rejected without more ado. No Man ought to be admitted to examine, whether we ought to believe what God commands to believe. It ought to be reckon'd a firſt Principle in Point of Religion. 'Tis for the Metaphyſicians to examine, Whether there be a God, and whether he be infallible; but Chriſtians, as Chriſtians, ought to ſuppoſe it as a Thing already determin'd.

The Queſtion then is only about a Fact; Whether God requires our Belief of certain Things? Two ſorts of People may doubt of it; thoſe who don't believe the Scripture to be divine, and thoſe who don't think the Senſe of the Revelation to be ſo or ſo.

All the Diſpute then that Chriſtians can admit with the Philoſophers, is upon this Queſtion; Whether the Scripture was written by inſpir'd Authors? If the Arguments the Chriſtians alledge upon this Subject, don't convince the Philoſophers, the Diſpute ought to ceaſe; for it would be to no purpoſe to deſcend to the particular Diſcuſſion of the Trinity, &c. with People who diſown the Authority of the Scripture, the ſole and only Judge of Right and Wrong in ſuch ſort of Controverſies. Reveal'd Authority ought to be the common Principle of Diſputants hereupon, and therefore there's no diſputing when one denies this Principle, and the other admits of it. Adverſus negantem principia non eſt diſputandum.

If thoſe who deny it, perſiſt to Clamour and Diſpute, they ought to be coldly anſwer'd, you depart from the Queſtion, Non feritis theſim, non probatis negatum; and if they laugh at this Anſwer, their Laughing ought to be deſpis'd.

THE Character of the Scepticks.

But of all the Philoſophers, who ought not to be admitted to diſpute upon the Myſteries of Chriſtianity, before having admitted Revelation for their Rule, there are none ſo unworthy to be heard as the Sect of the Scepticks; for they are a ſort of People that make Profeſſion of admitting no certain Sign of Diſtinction between Truth and Falſhood; ſo that if Truth, by chance, appear'd to them, they could never be ſure that it was Truth. They are not ſatisfied with oppoſing the Teſtimony of the Senſes, the Maxims of Morality, the Rules of Logick, the Axioms of Metaphyſicks, but endeavour to overthrow the Demonſtrations of Geometry, and all the Certainty of Mathematicians. If they went no farther than the ten Ways of Suſpenſion, and confin'd themſelves to uſe them againſt natural Philoſophy, we might ſtill treat with them; but they will go much farther: They have a ſort of Arms they call (a) the Diallel, which they handle on the firſt Occaſion; after which there's no withſtanding them on any Account whatever: 'Tis a Labyrinth, from which no Clue of Ariadne can wind one out; they loſe themſelves in their own Subtilties, and are wonderfully pleas'd with it, ſince this ſerves to ſhew more clearly the Univerſality of their Hypotheſis, that every Thing is uncertain, from which they except not even the Arguments againſt Uncertainty. They proceed ſo far in their Method, that thoſe who have well conſider'd the Conſequences of it, are forced to ſay, That they (b) know not whether any Thing exiſts.

Divines ought not to be aſham'd to confeſs, That they can't enter the Liſts with ſuch Diſputants, and that they will not expoſe the Goſpel-Truths to ſuch an Encounter. The Veſſel of JESUS CHRIST is not made to float upon that tempeſtuous Sea, but to ride ſecure from this Tempeſt in the Haven of Faith. It has pleas'd the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould Chriſtians ſay, to lead us by the Way of Faith, and not of Science, or Diſputation. They are our Inſtructors and Directors, we cannot err having ſuch Guides, and Reaſon itſelf commands us to prefer them before its Direction.

But is it not a ſcandalous thing, will ſome ſay, that I have related the Converſation of an Abbot, who ſays that Scepticiſm finds many Arguments in the Doctrines of Chriſtianity, that render it more formidable than it was? I anſwer, that this can offend none but ſuch as have not examin'd the Character of Chriſtianity. 'Twould be a falſe Notion to imagin, that JESUS CHRIST had any Deſign to countenance, either directly or indirectly, Part of the Sects of Philoſophers in their Diſputes againſt the reſt. His Deſign was rather to put all Philoſophy to Confuſion, and to ſhew the Vanity of it. He was willing that his Goſpel ſhould claſh not only with the Religion of the Heathens, but with the Aphoriſms of their Wiſdom; and that notwithſtanding this Oppoſition betwixt his Principles and thoſe of the World, his Doctrine ſhould triumph over the Gentiles, by the Miniſtry of a few illiterate Men, who had neither Eloquence nor Logick, nor any of the Inſtruments ſo neceſſary to all other Reſolutions. He would have his Diſciples, and the wiſe Men of this World, to be ſo diametrically oppoſite, that they ſhould mutually call one another Fools: He deſign'd that as his Goſpel appear'd Folly to the Philoſophers, their Science ſhou'd appear Folly to the Chriſtians in its Turn. Conſider well theſe Words of St. Paul: “(c) For Chriſt “ ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel: Not with Wiſdom of Words, “ leſt the Croſs of Chriſt ſhould be made of none effect. For the Preaching of “ the Croſs is to them that periſh, Fooliſhneſs: But unto us which are ſaved, it is the “ Power of God. For it is written, I will deſtroy the Wiſdom of the wiſe, and “ will bring to nothing the Underſtanding of the Prudent. Where is the Wiſe?
“ Where is the Scribe? Where is the Diſputer of this World? Hath not God made “ fooliſh the Wiſdom of this World? For after that, in the Wiſdom of God,
“ the World by Wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the Fooliſhneſs of Preach“ ing to ſave them that believe. For the Jews require a Sign, and the Greeks “ ſeek after Wiſdom: But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtum-“ bing-block, and unto the Greeks, Fooliſhneſs; But unto them which are call“ ed, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God.
“ Becauſe the Fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than Men; and the Weakneſs of God “ ſtronger than Men. For ye ſee your Calling, Brethren, how that not many “ wiſe Men after the Fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. But “ God

(a) See Sextus Empiricus Pyrrhon. hypotyp. lib. 1. cap. 15. & lib. 2. cap. 4.

(b) See what Sextus Empricus ad v. Math. lib. 7. relates of Georgias Leontinus,

(c) 1 Cor. 1. 17. & ſeq.

“ God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the World, to confound the wiſe; and God “ hath choſen the weak things of the World, to confound the Things which are “ mighty; And baſe things of the World, and things which are deſpiſed, hath “ God choſen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:
“ That no Fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence. But of him are ye in Chriſt “ Jeſus, who of God is made unto us Wiſdom, and Righteouſneſs, and Sanctification,
“ and Redemption: That according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him “ glory in the Lord. (a) And I Brethren, when I came to you, came not with “ Excellency of Speech, or of Wiſdom, declaring unto you the Teſtimony of God.
“ For I determined not to know any thing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and “ him crucified. And I was with you in Weakneſs, and in Fear, and in much “ Trembling. And my Speech, and my Preaching was not with enticing Words “ of Man's Wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power: That “ your Faith ſhould not ſtand in the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God.
“ Howbeit we ſpeak Wiſdom among them that are perfect: yet not the Wiſdom
“ of this World, nor of the Princes of this World, that come to nought. But we “ ſpeak the Wiſdom of God in a Myſtery, even the hidden Wiſdom, which God or“ dained before the World unto our Glory. Which none of the Princes of this “ World knew: For had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of “ Glory. But as it is written, Eye hath not ſeen, nor Ear heard, neither have “ entred into the Heart of Man, the things which God hath prepared for them that “ love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: For the Spirit “ ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what Man knoweth
“ the things of Man, ſave the Spirit of Man which is in him? Even ſo the things
“ of God knoweth no Man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received,
“ not the Spirit of the World, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know
“ the things that are are freely given to us of God. Which things alſo we “ ſpeak, not in the Words which Man's Wiſdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoſt “ teacheth; comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual. But the natural Man re“ ceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: For they are Fooliſhneſs unto him;
“ neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.”

(a) 1 Cor. 2. 1. & ſeq.

Do you think, that if the Apoſtles had been told that their Doctrine expoſed the dogmatizing Philoſophers to new attacks from the Scepticks, they would have been concern'd at it? They would have ſaid, Let us not trouble our ſelves with their Diſputes; Let the Dead bury the Dead; the more they ſhall fight and diſable one another, the more they will diſcover the Vanity of their pretended Science. Neither the Dogmatiſts nor the Scepticks will ever be able to enter into the Kingdom of God, unleſs they become little Children, unleſs they change their Maxims, renounce their Wiſdom, and make a Burnt-Offering of their Syſtems at the Foot of the Croſs to the pretended Folly of our Preaching: This is the old Man they muſt eſpecially put off, before they can be qualified to receive the heavenly Gift and to enter into the Way of Faith and eternal Salvation. But if the Scepticks make an ill Uſe of our Myſteries to root themſelves deeper in Uncertainty, and if they object againſt us ſome Arguments ad hominem, ſo much the worſe for them, except God make uſe of their Errors to make 'em ſee the Neceſſity of ſubmitting to his Word. This is what St. Paul and his Fellow-Apoſtles would have anſwer'd to ſuch Objections. We ought to be fully perſwaded, that if there had been Occaſion to give their Deciſion upon the Nature of the heathen Philoſophy with reſpect to the Difficulty or Eaſineſs of embracing the Goſpel; they would have poſitively determin'd, that the Method, Principles, Practices, and Diſputes of the Peripateticks, Academicks, &c. were ſo great an Obſtacle to Faith, that the moſt neceſſary Preliminaries to enter into the Kingdom of God, were to forget or lay aſide all thoſe Inſtruments of a wrong Science. I believe they would have made ſuch a Determination both for the preſent and the Time to come.

I have cited a Man, who ſeems to believe that the Subtilties of the Schools of Philoſophy, may upon favourable Occaſions be inſtrumental in the Propagation of the true Faith. It may be, ſays he (b), that theſe ſubtil Doctors were neceſſary to the World; I mean the curious, diſputing, and contradicting World. Perhaps they entred into the Deſign of the Providence of God, for the Accompliſhment of his Son's Kingdom, for the laſt Perfection of the Oeconomy of his Church. You know that the Son of God ſent ſeveral Apoſtles to ſeveral Nations; you know that all the Miſſions he ordained, were not made at the ſame time, and by the twelve firſt Envoys. He never wanted, and will never want the like Ambaſſadors. There are always Meſſengers ready to receive his Orders, to execute his Commands, to ſet out for his Service. We ought not to doubt that he has more than one St. Peter and St. Paul. He has alſo more than one St. Thomas. How do we know but that he has ſent the modern St. Thomas to the Succeſſors of Ariſtotle, to treat them according to their own Humour, and to convert them in their Way, in order to gain them by their Syllogiſms and Logick? How do we know but St. Thomas of the Schools has been choſen to be the Apoſtle of the Peripatetick Nation, that was not well conquer'd and ſubdued? a preſumptuous and mutinous Nation, which has ſo little regard to Authority, which pretends to go always upon Reaſon, which continually demands why Things are ſo and ſo, which is ſo reſtleſs, ſuch an Enemy to Peace, and ſo diſpos'd to Innovations? Methinks this laſt Miſſion has not been uſeleſs, and there is ſome Probability in what I ſay. If there is no Irony in this Diſcourſe; if it be all in a ſerious Strain, 'tis an empty thing dreſs'd in lofty Words. All Men in all Ages have required and will require, that the Knowledge of reveal'd Truths ſhould be enquired enquired after by other Methods than thoſe of Philoſophy. Philoſophy does not cure a floating Mind, which muſt be cur'd, if we deſire to get true Wiſdom by our Prayers. (a) If any of you lack Wiſdom, let him ask of God that gives to all Men liberally and upbraideth not, and it ſhall be given him. But let him ask in Faith nothing wavering, for he that wavereth, is a Wave of the Sea driven with the Wind and toſs'd; for let not that Man think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord. Judge whether the Scepticks, who are always ſo much the more in their Element, as the Efforts they make to invent Reaſons for doubting of every thing, ſucceed to the finding out ſpecious Objections againſt Certainty, are capable of Grace by the Way of Diſputation. The modern Miſſionaries of the Goſpel, ought to treat them as the firſt would have done; they ought to caution them to part with their Spirit of Contradiction, and to believe God upon his Word; and if they prove untractable, they ought particularly to remember this Precept of St. Paul, and apply it to thoſe Men, (b) Avoid fooliſh Queſtions and Genealogies, and Contentions, and Strivings about the Law, for they are unprofitable and vain. A Man that is an Heretick after the firſt and ſecond Admonition, reject. It would be fine Work to ſee our Thomiſts and Scotiſts undertake the Converſion of the new World by publick Diſputations as in Europe: They would be ſorry Converters at that rate. Balzac did not conſider it, or elſe gravely ridiculed the Schoolmen; their publick Diſputes convert no Body; every Body goes away with the ſame Opinions they brought with them.

(b) Balzac, Socrate Chretien, diſcours 5. pag. m. 71. & ſeq.

We may affirmat this Day, juſt as in Lactantius's Time, that true Religion ought to be enquir'd after (c) by addreſſing to the pretended and ſeeming Fooliſhneſs under which God has been pleas'd to hide the Treaſures of his Wiſdom. (d) Quid putemus fuiſſe cauſæ, cur tot ingeniis, totque temporibus ſummo ſtudio, & labore quæſita (ſapientia) non repeiretur; niſi quod eam philoſophi extra fines ſuos quæſierunt? Qui quoniam peragratis, & exploratis omnibus, nuſquam nullam ſapientiam comprehenderunt; & alicubi eſſe illam neceſſe eſt: apparet, illic potiſſimum eſſe quærendam, ubi STULTITIÆ titulus apparet; cujus velamento Deus, ne arcanum ſummi ſui divini operis in propatulo eſſet, theſaurum ſapientiæ, ac veritatis abſcondit. The ſame Lactantius has judiciouſly obſerved in another Place, that it becomes the ſupreme Majeſty of God to ſpeak magiſterially, and to ſay in a few Words, this is true, and not to argue and add any Proofs to his Deciſions. (e) Quæ (divina) quidem tradita ſunt breviter, ac nude; nec enim decebat aliter: ut cum Deus ad hominem loqueretur, argumentis aſſereret ſuas voces, tanquam fides ei non haberetur: ſed, ut oportuit, eſt locutus, quaſi rerum omnium maximus judex; cujus eſt non argumentari, ſed pronuntiare verum. If Seneca ſays that there is nothing more inſipid than a Law with a Preface, and that a Law ſhould not diſpute, but command; if he ſays this of human Laws, much more ought it to be ſaid of the Law of God? (f) Non probo, quod Platonis legibus adjecta principia ſunt. Legem enim brevem eſſe oportet, qu facilius ab imperitis teneatur, velut emiſſa divinitus vox ſit. Jubeat, non diſputet. Nihil videtur mihi frigidius, nihil ineptius, quàm lex cum prologo. Mone, dic quid me velis feciſſe: non diſco, ſed pareo.

From all that has been ſaid, it is eaſie to conclude, that we can't be allarm'd with the Objections of the Scepticks, without diſcovering the Weakneſs of our Faith, and taking Things in a wrong Senſe, which ought to be taken in a right one.

A true Believer, a Chriſtian who well underſtands the Genius of his Religion, does not expect to ſee it agree with the Aphoriſms of the Lyceum, nor to find it able by the meer Strength of Reaſon, to confute the Difficulties of Reaſon. He well knows that natural Things have no Proportion with the ſupernatural; and that if a Philoſopher was deſired to level and adjuſt the Myſteries of the Goſpel with the Ariſtotelian Axioms, it would be requiring of him what is inconſiſtent with the Nature of Things. You muſt neceſſarily make an Option betwixt Philoſophy and the Goſpel: If you will believe nothing but what is evident and agreeable to common Notions, chooſe Philoſophy: If you'll believe the incomprehenſible Myſteries of Religion, take Chriſtianity and leave Philoſophy; for to poſſeſs Evidence and Incomprehenſibility together is a thing impoſſible. Once more, a true Chriſtian well inſtructed in the Character of ſupernatural Truths, and well grounded in the Principles peculiar to the Goſpel, will laugh at the Subtilties of Philoſophers, and eſpecially of the Scepticks. Faith will place him above the Regions, wherein the Tempeſts of Diſpute reign. He'll find himſelf ſeated where he can hear the Thunder of Arguments and Diſtinctions roar below him, without any Diſturbance: A Poſt, that will prove an (g) Olympus, and the true Temple of wiſe Men (h), from whence he will ſee in a perfect Tranquillity the Weakneſſes of Reaſon, and the Wandrings of mortal Men under the Conduct of ſuch a Guide. Every Chriſtian who ſuffers himſelf to be ſtartled with the Objections of Unbelievers, has one Foot in the ſame Ditch with them.

What I am going to ſay, may acquaint us how important it is to know the true Uſe of Things: Many People have ask'd, To what purpoſe I have ſet forth ſome Sceptical and Manichean Objections? They might have found the Anſwer to this Queſtion, if they had look'd for it in my Dictionary, where it is to be ſeen in an hundred Places, and particularly in the Remark C of the Article Pyrrho (i). But ſince they would not, or did not mind it, let us here examine their Difficulty more at large. I think they could not much complain, if I ſhould only ask them, To what purpoſe are all the Particularities we find in Hiſtories? Is it not certain that there are many Particulars mention'd by Hiſtorians, whoſe only Uſe conſiſts in pleaſing the ) Jam. . 5. & 6.

---

) Tit. 3. & 10.

) This ght to under- nd with ſpect to e Infi- le.

(d) Lactant lib. 4. cap. 2. pag. m. 226.

(e) Id. lib. 3. cap. 1. pag. 149.

(f) Seneca epiſt. 94. pag. m. 388.

(g) Ut altus Olympi Vertex, qui ſpatio ventos hiemeſque relinquit, Perpetuum nulla temeratus nube ſerenum, Celſior exſurgit pluviis auditque ruentes ſub pedibus nimbos, & raucum tonitrum calcat. Claudian de Mall. Theod. Conſul. v. 206. pag. m. 6.

(h) Nil dulcius eſt, benè quàm munita tenere Edita doctrina Sapientum templa ſerena; Deſpicere unde queas alios, paſſimque videre Errare, atque viam palanteis quærere vitæ, Lucret. lib. 2. v. 7.

(i) See alſo the Remark F in the Article of Zeno Eleaſtes at the End.

the Readers, and which may be hurtful in the Hands of thoſe who abuſe the beſt things? Does this diſpenſe an Hiſtorian from relating the Truth with all poſſible Exactneſs? Muſt not therefore an Hiſtorian of Opinions exactly and amply ſhew the ſtrong and weak Sides of them, tho' it ſhould accidently occaſion ſome Diſorder, and tho' no other Good ſhould proceed from it, but the Amuſement of the Reader, and an example of the regard that is due to the Laws of Hiſtory? But this is neither the ſole not the principal anſwer I am to give.

Nothing is more neceſſary than Faith, and nothing more Important than to underſtand well the worth of this Theological Virtue. But what's more proper to acquaint us with it, than meditating on the Attribute which diſtinguiſhes it from the other Acts of the Underſtanding? Its Eſſence conſiſts in imprinting in us a ſtrong perſwaſion of reveal'd Truths, by the motive of God's Authority. Thoſe who by Philoſophical Reaſons believe the Immortality of the Soul, are Orthodox, but ſo far they don't partake of the Faith we ſpeak of. They partake of it only as they believe this Doctrine, becauſe God has reveal'd it, and humbly ſubmit to the voice of God the moſt plauſible Arguments Philoſophy offers to perſwade them of the Soul's Mortality. Thus the merit of Faith is enlarg'd, in proportion, as reveal'd Truth, which is its Object, exceeds all the Powers of our Underſtanding; for the more the incomprehenſibility of this Object increaſes by the numerous Maxims of Natural Light which oppoſe it, we muſt needs Sacrifice to God's Authority a ſtronger repugnance of Reaſon, and conſequently we ſhew our ſelves more obedient to God, and give him a greater Teſtimony of our Reſpect, than if the thing was moderately difficult to believe. Whence was it that the Faith of the Patriarch of the Faithful was ſo Eminent and Illuſtrious? was it not becauſe (a) he believed in hope againſt hope? There had been no great Merit in hoping for a thing, naturally very probable, upon the Promiſe of God; the Merit therefore conſiſted in this, that the dependance upon this Promiſe ſeem'd contrary to all Appearances. Let us ſay alſo, that the moſt valuable Faith is that which upon the Divine Teſtimony embraces Truths moſt repugnant to Reaſon.

(a) Rom. 4. 18.

(b) Converſation of Marechal d'Hoquincourt with Father Canaye among the Miſcellaneous Works of Mr. de S. Evremont, tom 4. pag. 209. Dutch Edit. 1693.

This Thought has been expreſs'd in a bantering way by a maſterly Hand. (b) The D . . . . take me if I believ'd any thing, ſaid the Mareſchal de Hocquincourt; but from that time I could indure the greateſt Torments for Religion: Not that I ſee more Reaſon in it; on the contrary, leſs than ever: Nevertheleſs, I could indure the greateſt Torments without knowing why. So much the better, my Lord, reply'd the Father with a devout twang, ſo much the better; theſe are not Humane Motions; this proceeds from God. No Reaſon. That's true Religion: No Reaſon. What a Grace, my Lord, has God given you! Eſtote ſicut infantes, be ye as Children: Children have ſtill their Innocence, and why? Becauſe they have no Reaſon. Beati pauperes ſpiritu, Bleſſed are the poor in Spirit: They don't Sin; the Reaſon of it is, that they have no Reaſon. No Reaſon: I know not why: What fine Sayings? They ought to be written in golden Letters. Not that I ſee more Reaſon in it; on the contrary, leſs than ever. Truly this is Divine to thoſe who have a taſte of Heavenly Things. No Reaſon. What a Grace, my Lord, has God given you. Give this Thought a ſerious and modeſt turn, and it will become reaſonable. Here's the Proof of it. I take it from a Book wherein ſome Thoughts of Mr. de Saint Evremont are examin'd; and this amongſt others, that our underſtanding is not ſufficiently convinc'd of the truth of Religion.

(c) Diſſertation ſur les oeuvres de Mr. de S. Evremont, pag. 249. & ſeq. Paris 1698.

(1) I. Part. qu. 1. a. 8. ad. 2.

(c) "To anſwer clearly to this, we muſt obſerve a common Principle of Divines. The Mind is induc'd to believe Myſteries in a quite different way from that which gives it an evident Knowledge of Natural Things. It knows the latter by demonſtration, and it believes Myſteries upon motives of Credibility, ſuch as are the Miracles wrought by JESUS CHRIST, and his Apoſtles, the unanimous Belief of all the Faithful for ſeventeen Centuries, &c. All which Motives ought to induce us to believe prudently the Faith which the Church propoſes to us: And this well explains theſe words of St. Paul, That in this preſent Life we ſee the Myſteries as Riddles, waiting to ſee them evidently in Heaven. But Mr. de St. Evremont requires demonſtrations; and therefore will have no Faith. St. Thomas (1) ſays expreſly in ſome Places of his Summa, That no Body ought to go about to demonſtrate the Myſteries of Religion; and he adds in other Chapters, That when the Fathers proved the Faith, they did not pretend that their Arguments were demonſtrative, but only ſolid Motives to induce us to believe the Arguments propounded to us. Why, ſays Mr. de St. Evremont, is not our Reaſon enlightned; becauſe, as St. Thomas ſays, Reaſon muſt ſubmit to Faith. Upon which I call to mind ſome Words of Petrus Bleſenſis in his 140th Epiſtle written to Petrus Diaconus, who was with the King of England. After he had ſpoke of the Myſtery of Tranſubſtantiation, Reaſon, adds he, does not go ſo far, but we are carried thither by Faith; a Faith that is ſo much the ſtronger as it is not ſupported by Natural Reaſon. Reaſon grows weak where Faith grows ſtrong: Reaſon is overcome that Faith may be more Meritorious: However, don't think, adds this Father, that Reaſon envies the ſuperiority of Faith; on the contrary, it voluntarily and humbly ſubmits to it. It will reſume its Light in Heaven, where Faith will not be, and then Reaſon will reap what Faith ſows in the preſent Life; and 'tis juſt it ſhould reap the fruits of Faith, ſince at preſent it depreſſes it ſelf, that Faith may reign with a full Power."

This is the Doctrine of the Roman Catholicks: Take from it Tranſubſtantiation, and put the Trinity, for Inſtance, in its room, and the moſt Orthodox Proteſtant Divinity will ſubſcribe to it. I ſhall quote two Proteſtants, whoſe Teſtimony will have the more Weight, becauſe they are of ſuch Profeſſions, as are not thought to be

Schools which beſt teach the humbling of Reaſon, and the exaltation of Faith: One is a Phyſician, the other a Mathematician; the former declares (a), that when he meditates on Myſteries, he always ſtops when Reaſon is arrived to this Point, O the depth! He proteſts, that if rebellious Reaſon, or the Devil, endeavour to perplex him, he diſengages himſelf from all their Snares, by this one Paradox of Tertullian, This is certain, becauſe 'tis impoſſible. (b) Nodos illos de Trinitate, Incarnatione & Reſurrectione, animi relaxandi gratia mecum interdum ſolitarius meditor, mentemque in his comprehendendis exercere ſoleo. Quæcumque mihi, aut Satanas, aut ratio rebellis objiciat, ea omnia uno illo paradoxo Tertulliani concilio expedio; Certum eſt, quia impoſſibile eſt. There are ſome, continues he, who believe more eaſily becauſe they have ſeen the Sepulchre of JESUS CHRIST, and the Red Sea; but, for my part, I congratulate my ſelf for not having ſeen JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles, nor living in the Age of Miracles; my Faith would then have been involuntary, and I ſhould have no ſhare in this Bleſſing, Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen and yet have believed. He has a great Notion of the Faith of thoſe that lived before JESUS CHRIST; for tho' they had nothing but Shadows and Types, and ſome obſcure Oracles, they waited for things that ſeem'd impoſſible. (c) Sunt qui promptius credunt, quod Chriſti ſepulchrum ſpectaverint, marique rubro viſo de miraculo nihil dubitant. Ego vero mihi gratulor, quod in miraculorum tempore non vixerim, quod nunquam aut Chriſtum, aut Diſcipulos viderim, quod nec cum Iſraelitis mare rubrum tranſierim, nec in eorum numero fuerim quos Chriſtus per miracula ſanavit: hic enim mihi nolenti volenti credendum fuiſſet, nec ad me pertinuiſſet benedictio de omnibus illis pronunciata, qui non videntes crediderint. Facilis eſt eorum, & neceſſaria credulitas, quia ea credunt, quæ oculi & ſenſus exploraverint. Eum mortuum & ſepultum reſurrexiſſe credo, inque gloria ejus potius quam in cenotaphio & ſepulchro contemplari cupio. Hæc autem credere minimum eſt; hanc fidem, ut æquum eſt, hiſtoriæ debemus. Illis erat præ cæteris nobilis & animoſa fides, qui ante adventum ejus vixerant: ex obſcuris enim vaticiniis, myſticiſque typis credenda expiſcati, expectarunt ea, quæ impoſſibilitatem quandam præ ſe ferebant. He ſays, that Faith may not improperly be call'd a Sword (d) which cuts all the Knots we meet with in the Myſteries of Religion; but however, he uſes it rather as a Shield, finding that a Man becomes invulnerable in theſe ſorts of Combats, who arms himſelf with it. Upon ſome Heads he mentions the Objections that Reaſon and Experience ſuggeſted to him, and adds, that notwithſtanding this his Faith is very ſteady, and that Faith, in order to be perfect, will believe things not only above Reaſon, but that ſeem repugnant to Reaſon, and to the Teſtimony of the Senſes. (e) Veriſſima tamen eſſe hæc omnia credo, quæ tamen falſa eſſe mihi ratio perſuadere parat. Nec fidei eſſe vulgaris arbitror res hujuſmodi credere, quæ non rationem tantum ſuperare, ſed & ipſi, & ſenſuum teſtimoniis repugnare videntur.

Note, That this Writer ſpeaks thus in a Book, Entituled, Religio medici, the Religion of the Phyſician, and which, as ſome ſay, might be call'd, The Phyſician of Religion; a Book in one word that made ſome People believe that the Author (f) was ſomewhat remote from the Kingdom of Heaven. Therefore theſe words of the Goſpel might be applied to him, I have not found ſo great Faith, no not in Iſrael. (g)

The Mathematician I am to quote, publiſh'd a Piece at London of 36 Pages in 4*to.* in 1699. Entituled, Theologiæ Chriſtianæ principia Mathematica. He pretends, that the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion are only probable, and reduces the degrees of their probability, and of the decreaſe of it, to Geometrical Calculations. He finds that it may ſtill laſt 1454 Years, from whence he concludes, that JESUS CHRIST will return before that time. He dedicates this Book to the Biſhop of Salisbury, and ſhews in his Epiſtle dedicatory, that thoſe who ſhall blame him for calling the Principles of Chriſtianity only probable, are ſuch as have not well examined the Foundations of their Religion, and do not well underſtand the nature of Faith. Whence, ſays he, has this Virtue ſo many Encomiums given it in the Scripture, and ſo many Recompences promiſed it? Is it not becauſe it makes Men walk in the right Way, notwithſtanding all the Stumbling-blocks and the Fetters they meet with? I ſhall ſet down his Words: (h) Quoſdam fore non dubito, majori ductos zelo quam judicio qui meos prorſus condemnabunt labores, meque Religionem potius evertere quam aſtruere temere nimis concludent. Illi utique omnia Religionis dogmata tanquam certiſſima amplectentes rem Chriſtianiſmo indignam me præſtitiſſe putabunt, qui ejus probabilitatem tantum evincere conatus fuerim. Illis vero ego nihil jam habeo quod dicam, niſi quod præjudiciis ſuis præoccupati, Religionis quam profitentur, fundamenta non accuratè ſatis hactenus examinaverint, nec fidei, quæ tantopere in ſacris literis laudatur, naturam ritè intellexerint. Quid enim eſt fides? niſi illa mentis perſuaſio qua propter media ex probabilitate deducta, quaſdam propoſitiones veras eſſe credimus. Si perſuaſio ex certitudine oriatur, tum non fides ſed ſcientia in mente producitur. Sicut enim probabilitas fidem generat, ita etiam ſcientiam evertit & e contra: Certitudo ſcientiam ſimul generat & fidem deſtruit. Unde ſcientia omnem dubitandi anſam aufert, dum fides aliquam ſemper hæſitationem in mente relinquit: & propterea fides tantis inſignitur laudibus, tantaque ſibi annexa præmia habet, quod homines non obſtantibus omnibus illis quibus premuntur ſcrupulis in recto virtutis & pietatis tramite progrediantur, quæque Creatori ſuo omnipotenti grata futura credunt ſumma ope præſtare conentur: Se tam paratos eſſe juſſis quibuſcunque divinis obſequi oſtendunt, ut ne ea quidem quæ probabiliter tantum ab ipſo proveniant, rejicere velint.

There are ſo many who ſo little examine the nature of Divine Faith, and reflect ſo ſeldom upon this Act of their Mind, that they want to be rouſed from their incogitancy, by a long enumeration of Difficulties that encompaſs the Doctrines of the

(a) Obſcuris aliquando deviiſque veſtigiis myſteriorum aliquod libens ſequor, donec ad O Altitudo ratio perveniat. Thomas Browne religio medici parte 1. ſect. 8. pag. m. 46.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Nec durior erit metaphora, ſi quis dicat: Gladius fidei. Eadem tamen in hujuſmodi nodis pro clypeo potius utor, quo titulo ab Apoſtolo inſignitur: cumque invulnerabilem fore comperi, qui hoc munitus in certamen deſcenderit. Id. ib. ſect. 9 pag. 48.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 49.

(f) See Patin's 3 Letter, pag. 13. of the 1*ſt. Volume.*

(g) Matt. viii. 10.

(h) Johannes Craig, epiſt. dedicat.

Chriſtian Religion. 'Tis by a lively ſenſe of thoſe Difficulties we learn the excellency of Faith, and of this gift of God. Hereby we learn alſo to miſtruſt Reaſon, and have recourſe to Grace. Thoſe who know nothing of the great Conteſt betwixt Reaſon and Faith, and are ignorant of the force of Philoſophical Objections, are not fully ſenſible of God's Goodneſs to them, and of the Method of triumphing over all the Temptations of preſumptuous Reaſon.

The true way of humbling it is, to know that if it be capable of inventing Objections, it is incapable of reſolving them, and in a word, that it is not by Reaſon that the Goſpel was eſtabliſh'd. (a) "'Tis only Faith that can teach that Divine Philoſophy, which none of (1) the Princes of this World had known. Whoever opens his Eyes to ſo pure a Light is truly enlighten'd. 'Twas not by ſtrength of Syllogiſms and Arguments that this Philoſophy recommended it ſelf to Men; but by its ſimplicity and the ignorance of thoſe that preach'd it to the World .... Faith having diſcover'd to Man the falſe glimpſes that ſhone in the Heathen Philoſophy, taught him not to reaſon upon things which God will not have ſubmitted to reaſoning, and let him know, that 'tis better to be ignorant of what God is pleaſed to conceal, and reſpectfully to adore the Secrets he has not revealed, than to attempt to fathom this Abyſs of Light, by the raſhneſs of our Conjectures, and the weak views of our Reaſon. 'Twas by this Divine Ray of Faith, that the Believer took pleaſure in ſacrificing that inſolent Curioſity, which made him too raſhly examine the Works of God, and ſtifling all the views of that proud Reaſon, which fixes him to the Creatures to make him a Rebel againſt the Creator. 'Twas by the Rays of this Celeſtial Light, that the Chriſtian perceived it was better to yield than to argue in Point of Religion; that narrowneſs of Wit is more advantageous to be a Believer, than all the force and penetration of the Mind, and that the ſimplicity of Faith is preferable to all the pomp of Science. Since the Works of God which have moſt the impreſs of his Omnipotence, and his Character, are thoſe we the leaſt comprehend; and therefore nothing is more juſt than to humble our Reaſon, and ſubmit it to the Light of Eternal Reaſon, which is the Rule of all Reaſons: and indeed there is no Science but requires ſubmiſſion for the eſtabliſhment of its Principles." I conclude with two very fine Thoughts of Mr. de St. Evremont. "(b) As to things purely Natural, 'tis for the Mind to conceive them, and its Knowledge proceeds from its application to the Objects. As to Supernatural Things, the Soul takes hold of them, loves them, faſtens and unites it ſelf to them, without being able to comprehend them. God has better prepar'd our Hearts for the impreſſion of Grace, than our Underſtandings for that of Knowledge. His Immenſity confounds our narrow Underſtanding. His Goodneſs is more adapted to our Love. There is ſomething unaccountable at the bottom of our Souls, which is ſecretly moved by a God, we cannot know ..... Who well conſiders the Chriſtian Religion, would think that God means to keep it in the dark from our Underſtanding, and make it turn upon the Motions of our Heart ...... (c) Provided a Man has reduc'd his Reaſon, ſo far as not to argue upon things which God would not have ſubjected to reaſoning, 'tis all he can deſire. I not only believe with Solomon, that a wiſe Man's ſilence is better in this Caſe than the diſcourſe of a Philoſopher, but I have a greater Eſteem for the Faith of the moſt ſtupid Peaſant, than for all the Leſſons of Socrates.

(a) Rapin, Reflexions ſur la philoſophie pag. m. 477.

(1) Veritas per Chriſtum: Joann. cap. 1. loquimur ſapientiam quam nemo principum hujus ſeculi novit Paul. 1. Cor. c. 6.

(b) Saint Evremont, œuvres mêlées tom. 3. pag. m. 51.

(c) Id. ib. tom. 2. pag. 24.

This, I think, is more than ſufficient to remove the Scruples which the pretended Triumph of the Scepticks had raiſed in the Minds of ſome of my Readers.

EXPLANATION. IV. Concerning Obſcenities.

That if there are ſome Obſcenities in this Book, they are ſuch as can't be juſtly cenſured.

BY ſaying there are Obſcenities in any Book, may be underſtood,

I. Either that the Author gives the Deſcription of his Debaucheries in lewd Terms, Applauds and Congratulates himſelf for them, exhorts his Readers to a laſcivious Life, recommends it to them as the moſt effectual Means of enjoying ones ſelf, and pretends that the Diſcourſes of People are to be laugh'd at, and that the Maxims of the Vertuous ought to be ſlighted as Old Womens Tales.

II. Or, that the Author relates in a free and jovial Stile, ſome Love Adventures, feign'd as to the Subſtance or at leaſt as to their Circumſtances, and Flouriſhes; and introduces into his Narrative many wanton Incidents, which he dreſſes in all the Charms imaginable, in order to make 'em diverting, and fitter to raiſe the deſire of Love Intrigues, than for any thing elſe.

III. Or, that the Author meditating Revenge upon an unfaithful Miſtreſs, or excuſing the Tranſports of his Paſſion, or making Invectives againſt an old Curtezan, or Celebrating his Friend's Marriage, or diverting himſelf with merry Thoughts, gives a free ſcope to his Muſe, and writes Epigrams, Epithalmium's, &c. whoſe Expreſſions are very obſcene.

IV.

IV. Or, that the Author inveighing againſt Lewdneſs, deſcribes it in too lively, naked and groſs Colours.

V. Or, that the Author in a Tract of Phyſick, Natural Philoſophy, or Civil Law, expreſſes himſelf filthily upon the Subject of Generation, or, the Cauſes and Remedies of Barrenneſs, or the Motives of Divorce, &c.

VI. Or, that the Author commenting upon Catullus, Petronius, or Martial, has fill'd his Commentary with ſmutty Diſcourſes.

VII. Or, that the Author giving the Hiſtory of a Sect, or Perſon, whoſe Actions were Infamous, has nakedly related a great many things offenſive to chaſte Ears.

VIII. Or, that the Author treating of Caſes of Conſcience, and particularly of the different Species of Carnal Sins, has ſaid many things that Modeſty can't eaſily digeſt.

IX. Or, laſtly, that the Author relating Hiſtorical Facts carefully cited from other Authors, which are obſcene and immodeſt, and making a Comment on his Narrative to illuſtrate it with Teſtimonies, Reflections, and Proofs, &c. ſometimes produces the Words of free Writers, ſuch as Phyſicians, Lawyers, or Poets; but ſays nothing that explicity or implicity contains the Approbation of Impurity; on the contrary, undertakes on many Occaſions, to create an Abhorrence for it, and to confute looſe Morals.

Theſe, I think, are the chief Caſes wherein a Writer can be accus'd of venting Obſcenities.

In the firſt Caſe, he deſerves not only all the ſevereſt Puniſhments of the Canon Law, but ought alſo to be proſecuted by the Magiſtrate as a diſturber of the publick Modeſty, and a profeſs'd Enemy to Vertue.

As to thoſe of the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th Claſs, let every one judge of 'em as he pleaſes: I am not concern'd in them, mine being only the ninth Caſe; and 'tis ſufficient for me to examine what concerns that ninth kind of Obſcenity. However, I will make two or three general Reflexions upon the reſt.

THREE general Obſervations upon ſome ſorts of Obſcenities that are to be found in ſeveral Authors.

I ſay, in the firſt place, that there are ſeveral degrees in the ſeven Claſſes of Writers, whom I leave to the Reader's Judgment. A Man may keep himſelf within bounds, or may exceed them: This prodigiouſly varies the Differences and Proportions; and it would be very unjuſt to pronounce the ſame Sentence againſt all the Writers of the ſecond Claſs. The (a) hundred Nouvelles nouvelles, thoſe of the Queen of Navarre, Boccacio's Decameron, la Fontaine's Tales don't deſerve the ſame rigour as Aretin's Raggionamenti, and the Aloiſia Sigæa Toletana. The Authors of theſe two laſt Works deſerve, as well as Ovid, to be placed in the firſt Claſs of obſcene Authors.

I obſerve ſecondly, that in all Times abundance of Men have agreed in condemning Obſcenities; and yet this never ſeem'd to be a deciſion of equal force with the Decrees, to which Poets, Commentators, &c. are obliged to conform on the penalty of being excluded the Rank of Honeſt Men. The Cenſurers of Obſcenities ſeem the more capable of terminating the Queſtion by a deciſive and executive Sentence, in the whole Commonwealth of Learning, becauſe they might make up a Senate out of all ſorts of Men. There would be in it not only Perſons venerable for the Auſterity of their Lives, and Sacred Character, but alſo Sword Men and profeſs'd Gallants, and, in a word, many who give Scandal by their voluptuous Life. This is a Prejudice of great weight; for the liberty of wanton Verſes muſt needs be an ill thing, 'tis diſclaim'd by thoſe very Perſons who live in Debauchery. But in vain have obſcene Writings been exclaim'd againſt, it has had no effect to diſtinguiſh between Honeſt and Diſhoneſt Men. There has been all along in the Republick of Learning, a right or liberty of publiſhing Writings of this Nature. This Right has never been liable to Preſcription, which has been prevented by many Men of Merit, by reaſon of the freedom they have given themſelves in ſuch ſort of Works; and this has brought no (b) Infamy upon them, nor any ways Incapacitated them for the Enjoyment of all the Honours and Privileges belonging to their State, nor prevented the Preferments they might hope for from their Fortune.

A Man would be hiſſed that ſhould go to prove Boccacio to have been a baſe Man, becauſe he writ the Decameron; or conclude, that the Queen of Navarre, Siſter to Francis I. was not a Princeſs of admirable Virtue, whoſe Praiſes reſounded every where, becauſe ſhe writ ſome Novels of Gallantry. Antonius Panormita loſt nothing, either of his Fortune or Fame, by his ſalacious Poem of the Hermaphrodite. The ſame may be ſaid of Benedict le Court, and the famous Tiraquellus: The former writing a Comment on Martial d'Auvergne's Decrees of Love, gave himſelf great liberty: Nonnunquam, etiam ſays he in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to a Counſellor of the Parliament of Paris, quod in amore jocatus ſim laſciviente calamo: and every Body knows how many obſcene Collections Tiraquellus incerted in his Commentaries upon Matrimonial Laws. Did Scipio du Pleix uſe any Periphraſes or Reſerves in his Book call'd, La curioſité naturelle redigée en queſtions ſelon l'ordre alphabetique? Did he not explain things in the moſt natural terms imaginable? What did he loſe by that Book? Nothing at all. I ſhould never end, ſhould I undertake to give a Liſt of all the Civilians, who in Trials of Adultery or Impotency have alledged many Obſcenities, without any prejudice to their Reputation. I have named (c) three or four, Antony Hotman, Sebaſtian Roulliard, Vincent Tagereau, and Annæus Robert; this is enough: Let us name ſome Perſons of another Order.

(a) They have been reprinted at Amſterdam in 1701. in 2. volumes in 12.

(b) I don't pretend to extend this to particular Caſes not confin'd within certain Bounds, nor to Perſons who are otherwiſe infamous for their Actions.

(c) See the Articles Quellenec & Robert.

The Dutch could not endure that any Body should defame Secundus as an ill Man and a Rascal, or so much as deny that he was an honest Man, under pretence that he writ very lascivious Verses. Ramirez de Prado, who writ Notes upon Martial, printed at Paris with the King's License 1607, and full of lewd Explications, lost nothing by this of his Reputation or Fortune, no more than Gonzales de Salas for his Commentary of the same kind upon (a) an obscene Author. Joubert Chancellor of the University of Montpellier, and Physician to the King of France, and to the King of Navarre, lost neither his Honours nor his Pensions, nor his Preferments, for inserting several Obscenities in his Book of vulgar Errors. Nor is he on that Account esteem'd a less illustrious and honest Man. Did Quillet's Callipædia hinder him from being recompenc'd with an Abbey by Cardinal Mazarin? Feramus, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, did not find that his Merit was less extoll'd, or acknowledg'd after he had writ Verses against Montmaur, wherein he sported with very obscene Fictions. And to come nearer our own Time, Was Mr. de la Fontaine, who publish'd so many lewd Stories less caress'd by every Body at Court and City? Great Lords and Princes, the Ladies of the highest Rank, the most illustrious Persons of the long Robe, have all courted and admired him. Was he not admitted into the French Academy? And is not that Honour for a Man of his Character, equivalent to a Mareschal's Staff for a Sword-Man? I doubt not but Mr. de la Reinie would have gladly entertain'd him at his Table (b) the very Day that he condemn'd his new Tales; in that kind of Books wise Men know how to distinguish between the Person of the Author, and his Writings.

Let us see whether the Protestants have been more rigid. I don't think that the Consistories ever thought of censuring Ambrose Paré, whose anatomical Books written in the vulgar Tongue, were very full of filthy Things. There are many Obscenities in Joseph Scaliger's Commentaries upon the Priapeia and Catullus. There are more still in Janus Douza's Commentary upon Petronius. One of those two Writers was Professor at Leyden, and the other was one of the Curators of that University. They did not lose in the least upon that Account their Authority, and the great Esteem they were in; and tho' Beza mightily exclaim'd against 'em in an Epistle (c) dedicatory to the States General, his Out-crys were not minded. Daniel Heinsius, Professor in the same University, enjoyed all the Honours he could pretend to. He was one of the Secretaries of the Synod of Dort, and receiv'd, on a thousand Occasions, many Testimonies of Esteem; and yet he publish'd some Poems that are far from being modest. What he and Scriverius call'd Baudii amores, is a very wanton Collection; and 'tis to be observ'd, that Scriverius was a Man of Merit, and of great Note among the Learned in Holland. Notwithstanding Beza's Exhortation, Theodorus (d) de Juges put out an Edition of Petronius with his Prolegomena, wherein he endeavoured to justifie those who explain the Obscenities of that Roman Author. It does not appear that Theodorus de Juges did suffer in his Reputation or Fortune upon that Account. He was a Protestant, and some Persons of his Family were Counsellors in the Court of Castres, whose Members were one half Protestants and the other Roman Catholicks; and he spent a considerable Part of his Life at Geneva. Goldastus enjoyed the same Impunity after his Edition of Petronius, which he publish'd with his Prolegomena, wherein he undertook to justify the Reading of such an Author, and made a particular Answer to Beza's Reflections. Shall I say that the famous D'Aubigne was very much respected at Geneva, tho' the cynical Liberty of his Pen was a notorious Thing? Shall I observe that the Consistory of Charenton never had any Thoughts of complaining of Mr. Menjot, tho' his Writings about Physick are intermixed with many obscene Things? Shall I add that Isaac Vossius being a Canon of Windsor, when he publish'd a Book full of filthy Things, the Dean and the Chapter did not meet to inflict upon him at least the slightest Punishment, viz. that of being censured for it?

'Tis therefore no wonder if the Faction contrary to those, who condemn Obscenities, did always maintain it self in the Common-wealth of Learning; for besides their alledging many Reasons for their Opinion, they shelter themselves under the Authority of many Examples. You may see those Reasons and those Examples in the Prolegomena of Goldastus upon Petronius. All those who have apologized for the Philosophers or Casuists, who advance obscene Things, alledge Reasons against Reasons, and Authorities against Authorities. They want neither great Names nor grave Testimonies, (e) magno se judice quisque tuetur. But don't think that I suppose that their Reasons and those of their Adversaries, to have the same Force. I have declar'd in several Places, that I absolutely condemn Catullus's Obscenity, and those of his Imitators, and the great Freedom of the Casuists; and I add now, that the Arguments alledged by those who plead for the Liberty of inserting obscene Things in an Epigram, seem very weak, if compared (f) with the contrary Arguments. I further say, that an Obscenity not so gross as others, and only design'd for a Jest, seems to me to be more blameable than a very obscene Invective design'd to create an Abhorrence for Impurity. And as for the Obscenities of the Stage, I am of Opinion, that they ought to be severely punish'd by the Magistrate. They are only a School of Debauchery, and belong rather to the first Class than to the seven Classes that follow it, and which make the Subject of my preliminary Remarks. I have still one more to offer.

For I say in the third Place, That if any one shou'd alledge that it were better for the Writers of these seven Classes, to apply themselves only to serious Matters, and to treat them with all the Modesty required by the Gospel, he would depart from the State of the Question. This Advice, tho' very good in it self, is not pertinent

(a) Petronius.

(b) It was The 5th of April 1675. the Sentence may be seen at the End of the 3d Case of Furetiere, whereby the Sale of the Book is prohibited, and 'tis order'd that an Information shall be made about the Impression and Sale of it.

(c) That of his Sermon upon CHRIST's Resurrection.

(d) Mr. Mentel upon the Word Joannes Caius Tilebomenus calls him Thomas de Judicibus in the Preface to the Judicium de Fragmento Traguriensi Petronii. His Mistake about the Christian Name is more excusable than that of M. de Clavigny de Sainte Honorine, who, page 25. of his Tract concerning suspicious Books, pretends that Theodorus de Juges was called Goldstadius. He meant that Goldastus and Theodorus de Juges were the same Author.

nent on this Occaſion, ſince they might anſwer, that the Queſtion is not, Whether they have choſen the good Part, and whether they have pitch'd upon the beſt Uſe they cou'd make of their Leiſure and Pen, but only whether they have taken a Liberty condemn'd, upon Pain of Ignominy, by the Statutes of the Common-wealth of Learning, the Regulations of civil Policy, and the Laws of the State? They wou'd readily acknowledge, that they could not avoid being condemn'd, if they were judged by the Laws of the Goſpel; but they wou'd maintain that all Writers are in the ſame Predicament, more or leſs, there being none but who may be told, that he might have pitch'd upon a better Employment: for to give an Inſtance of it, a Divine who has ſpent all his Time in writting Commentaries upon the Scripture, might have made a more pious Uſe of it. Had it not been better for him to divide the Day between mental Prayer and Works of Charity? Why did he not ſpend Part of the Day in mediating upon the Greatneſs of God, and the four laſt Ends? Why did he not ſpend the other in going from one Hoſpital to another to relieve the Poor, and from Houſe to Houſe, to comfort Afflicted Perſons and inſtruct little Children? Seeing therefore no Man can give a good Account of his Time at the Tribunal of the Divine Juſtice, and every Body ſtands in need of Mercy on account of many uſeleſs Things, and for having choſen what was not the moſt neceſſary Part; the Perſons I ſpeak of wou'd appeal to another Juriſdiction, and ask whether they have done any Thing for which in the Judgment of the Publick, and before the Tribunal of the Magiſtrates, they deſerve to loſe the Quality of honeſt Men, and to be deprived of the Rank and Privileges of Men of Honour. We deſire a Thing, wou'd they ſay, which can't be refus'd to many honeſt Women who go to the Play-Houſe and to the Balls, who love Gaming and fine Cloaths, and who are ſo fond of their Beauty, as to mind all the Ornaments that will ſet it off to the beſt Advantage. They are not ſo ignorant as not to know that their Conduct is not agreeable to the Precepts of the Goſpel; but whilſt they do nothing elſe, they may lawfully pretend to the Quality, Rank, and Privileges of Women of Honour. They deſerve to be cenſured by the Preachers and the Chriſtian Moraliſts, I grant it: but till the Publick, or the Magiſtrates have fix'd a Note of Infamy upon ſuch a Courſe of Life, they cannot be call'd diſhoneſt Women; and whoever ſhou'd call 'em ſo, wou'd be oblig'd to make 'em a due Satisfaction. They may alledge the Practice of all Ages, ſince there have been at all times many virtuous Women, who lov'd Gaming, Plays, Balls, and Jewels; and after all, they don't offend againſt the Laws of the State, nor againſt the Rules of humane Honour, and are not guilty of any Irregularity, that is the peculiar Character of gallant Women. The Poets, who make too plain a Deſcription of a Wedding-Night in an Epithalamium, may alledge the ſame Reaſons: they'll own that their Muſe might have pitch'd upon a more laudable Subject, and that the Compoſition of a Chriſtian Sonnet is preferable to that; but this very Compoſition is not the beſt thing they cou'd have done. It had been better for them to ſpend their Time in praying, and ſerving the Poor in Hoſpitals, &c. There is hardly any Employment but what may be blamed for this Reaſon, that a better one might have been pitch'd upon; and of all Profeſſions there is hardly any that is more to blame, if we judge of it by the Rules of Religion, than that which is moſt common; I mean the Profeſſion of thoſe who make it their Buſineſs to get Money either by Trading or other fair Means. Humanly ſpeaking, the moſt lawful Means of growing Rich are contrary, not only to the Spirit of the Goſpel, but alſo to the formal Prohibitions of CHRIST and his Apoſtles. And therefore it highly concerns all Men, that God ſhould be merciful to them for not making the beſt Uſe of their Time. The Poets I ſpeak of, having laid down this Principle, add, that they only tread in the Steps of many Perſons illuſtrious for their Vertue and Wiſdom; that the Liberty they take, always prevail'd among honeſt Men; that if it had been laid aſide for ſome Ages to be the peculiar Character of Debauchery, they could not be excuſed; but that it will appear that they may claim the Right of Poſſeſſion, (a) and that a Thing which has been practis'd by ſo many honeſt Men, cannot be accounted diſhoneſt. This is a Maxim of Pliny about the preſent Queſtion. He was one of the greateſt Wits, and one of the moſt honeſt Men of his Time; he made ſome Verſes (b) that were thought to be ſomewhat impudent, and was blamed for it: He alledged many great Examples in his Vindication, and would not inſtance upon the Emperor Nero, tho', ſaid he, I am not ignorant that Things don't grow worſe, becauſe they are ſometimes practiſed by wicked Men, and that they continue to be honeſt, when they are often practiſed by honeſt Men (c).

Thus much for the Poets. Now I muſt obſerve that the Authors belonging to the other Claſſes abovemention'd, may alledge the ſame Reaſons. Nay, ſome of 'em may ſay ſomething more ſpecious: A natural Philoſopher, for Inſtance, and a Phyſician, may maintain, that their Profeſſion requires they ſhou'd explain what concerns Generation, Barrenneſs, the Green-ſickneſs, a Woman's Delivery, and the Furor uterinus, as well as Fermentation, and what concerns the Spleen, the Gout, &c. A Caſuiſt will ſay, that it's neceſſary Confeſſors and Penitents ſhou'd be informed of the ſeveral Ways of offending againſt Chaſtity, as well as of the ſeveral Frauds that are committed in Purchaſes.

At leaſt we ought to do thoſe Authors this Juſtice, not to judge of their Words by their Writings. No neceſſary Conſequence can be drawn from one of thoſe two Things to the other. Some Poets are chaſte in their Verſes, and in their Lives; ſome are neither chaſte in their Verſes nor in their Lives; ſome are only chaſte in their Verſes

(a) I ſay nothing of the Liberty M. de Voiture takes in his Poems. This is no new thing among Poets: They have long-ago proſtituted the Chaſtity of the Muſes. They alledge their multitude in their Vindication. There is no diſputing to them a Poſſeſſion, which they have preſcribed ſo many Ages ſince by the Conſent of all Nations. Gitac. Reſponſe à la defenſe de Voiture pag. 74.

(b) See the 14*th Letter of the* 4 Book of Pliny and the 3*d of the* 5 Book.

(c) Neronem tranſeo, quamvis ſciam non corrumpi in deterius, quæ aliquando etiam à bonis fiunt. Plin. epiſt. 3. lib. 5. pag. m. 289.

Verſes; and ſome are not chaſte in their Verſes, tho' they are ſo in their Lives. All the wanton Strokes of their Epigrams, are only witty Conceits; their Candida's and their Leſbia's are fictitious Miſtreſſes: The Proteſtants cannot deny it of Beza, ſince he declares (a) that he lived a regular Life when he writ the Poems, intituled, Juvenalia, of which he did ſo much repent.

WHAT Courſe I have taken with reſpect to Obſcenities.

After theſe general Obſervations, I ſhall proceed to the Examination of what concerns this Dictionary; and the firſt Thing I ſhall obſerve upon this Head is, that if thoſe Obſervations are not look'd upon as a ſolid Juſtification, I ſhall never be the worſe for it; but if they are approved, they'll be of great Uſe to me. I am in far better Circumſtances than all (b) the Authors I have mention'd; for tho' Catullus, Lucretius, Juvenal, and Suetonius be never ſo much condemn'd, a Writer, who quotes them, cannot be blamed for it. Thoſe Authors are to be had in all the Bookſellers Shops; the Paſſages quoted out of 'em, cannot be more dangerous than they are in thoſe Authors themſelves; and there is a vaſt Difference between the firſt Authors of an Obſcenity and thoſe, who mention it only as the Proof of a Fact, or of an Argument which the Subject in hand requires from them. Granting that Joubert expreſs'd himſelf too immodeſtly, Does it follow from thence that I cou'd not alledge his Teſtimony, when I was to criticize a very weak Argument alledged againſt thoſe who accuſed the Phyſician Herlicius of Lewdneſs? However it be, if the Excuſes alledged in favour of Suetonius, Joubert, &c. are good and ſolid, all the better for me; if they are not good, it can do me no Prejudice; my Caſe is different from theirs, and much better. What they may ſay in their Vindication, may be alledged by me with greater Reaſon; and what is a weak Argument for them, may be a very ſtrong one for me. You need only compare together the nine Claſſes mention'd by me, and you'll find that the laſt, which belongs to my Work, is leſs liable to a juſt Cenſure.

This will more evidently appear, if I add to what I have ſaid above, concerning the nature of my Cauſe, this Conſideration, viz. That I have avoided three things that might have occaſion'd juſt Complaints.

In the firſt place, whenever I have ſaid any thing of my own, I have avoided all manner of Words and Expreſſions that are contrary to Common Civility and Decency, which is ſufficient in a Work of this Nature, intermix'd with Hiſtorical Narratives, and all ſorts of Diſcuſſions; for whoever ſhould pretend that a Compilation made up of Matters relating to Literature, Phyſicks and Juriſprudence, ought to be written according to the moſt ſtrict Rules of Decency obſerv'd in a Sermon, or in a Pious Book, wou'd confound things, and ſet up a kind of Tyranny over Mens Minds. A Word that ſeems unbecoming in the Mouth of a Preacher, and in a ſmall Romance deſign'd for the reading of the Ladies, will not appear ſo in a Caſe written by a Lawyer, nor in the verbal Proceſs of a Phyſician, nor in a Book of Natural Philoſophy, nor even in a Piece relating to Philology, or in the faithful Tranſlation of a Latin Book, ſuch as the relation of Abelard's Misfortune. 'Tis therefore certain, that there are ſeveral degrees of Decency, with reſpect to the Style: The higheſt degrees belong to ſome Writers, and not to all. If an Ingenious Man was deſired by ſome Ladies to write a Romantick Hiſtory of Jupiter's or Hercules's Adventures, he ſhould never uſe the words, to Geld, to Deflower, to get with Child, to lie with a Nymph, to Raviſh her; he ſhould lay aſide every thing that might excite thoſe Ideas, or keep 'em at a diſtance by general and enigmatical Expreſſions. But if the Writers of an Hiſtorical Dictionary, wherein the Reader expects to find an exact Tranſlation of what is to be found in the ancient Mythology concerning Jupiter's Adventures, uſed long Circuits, and far fetch'd Expreſſions, whereby the fate of ſome Nymphs wou'd hardly be gueſs'd at, they would be accounted over-nice and ridiculous. They don't offend againſt Decency, provided they keep within the bounds of Common Civility, abſtaining from ſuch Words as are uſed by the Mob, and which even a Debauchee carefully avoids in a ſerious Converſation. They may boldly uſe all the Words that are to be found in the Dictionary of the French Academy, and in that of Furetiere, unleſs the Reader be told, that thoſe words are odious and obſcene. This is the firſt thing I have obſerv'd; I keep to the Rules of common Decency, when I ſay ſomething of my own. I proceed to give an account of the courſe I have taken as to Paſſages quoted by me out of other Authors.

I have avoided, in the ſecond place, to expreſs in our Language the Senſe of a Quotation, that contains a very immodeſt thing, being contented to ſet it down in Latin. What I quote out of Brantome and Montagne cannot be offenſive, and I may ſay the ſame of D'Aubigné, and other French Writers ſomewhat too free, whom I have ſometimes quoted.

In the third place, I have avoided mentioning, in any Language whatſoever, ſuch things as are extravagant and enormous; and I have quoted nothing out of certain Books that are little known, and which I had rather leave in darkneſs than inſpire the deſire of buying them, as ſome wou'd do, if they were quoted in this Work. I could name a very Honeſt Man, who never was a Debauchee, who writ from London to one of his Friends, that he expected to find quite another thing in my Dictionary after the Clamours of ſome Men.

After what has been ſaid, it will be no difficult thing to know whether I have been juſtly or wrongly blamed. The whole Matter may be brought to theſe two Heads, 1. Whether I am liable to Cenſure, becauſe I have not wrapp'd up in ambiguous Periphraſes the obſcene Facts that are to be found in Hiſtory. 2. Whether I am to blame, becauſe I have not wholly ſuppreſt thoſe Facts.

(a) See the Article Beza Remark V & X.

(b) That is the eight Claſſes of Authors above mentioned.

HE IRST f the wo Queſtions to hich he preſent Diſpute may e reduced, runs pon Expreſſions. An Anwer to hat Quotion.

The firſt of theſe two Queſtions, properly ſpeaking, belongs only to the Grammarians: Nihil hæc ad edictum prætoris. Morality is not concerned in the Matter; the Moraliſts or the Caſuiſts have nothing to do with it. If an Action was to be brought againſt me, it were only about the Unpoliteneſs of my Style; whereupon I would appeal to the French Academy, as the proper and competent Judges of ſuch Cauſes. I am ſure thoſe Gentlemen would acquit me; otherwiſe they would condemn themſelves, ſince all the Words I make uſe of, are to be found in their Dictionary, without any Note of Diſhonour. When they don't declare that a word is Obſcene, all Writers may uſe it without any ſcruple; I mean ſuch Words as they have defined. But further, I ſhould not be unwilling to be condemn'd by them; for I don't pretend to be a polite Writer. Why ſhould I pretend to it, ſince many great (a) Authors, who lived at Paris, and were Members of the French Academy, did not care for it? Why ſhould a Man conſtain himſelf in a Book deſign'd for Things, and not for Words, and which being made up of all ſorts of Matters, ſome whereof are Serious, and others Comical, neceſſarily requires he ſhould uſe all manner of Expreſſions? The Author of ſuch a Work needs not be ſo cautious as a Preacher; and tho' the latter ought to avoid this Phraſe, Thoſe who get a Maid with Child, ought to Marry her, or give her a Portion, he may uſe it without any undecency in a Book concerning Caſes of Conſcience. So true it is, that an Author may expreſs himſelf differently, according to the Nature of his Books.

But if any thing can excuſe the Writers, who have no regard to a kind of refined Niceneſs that increaſes every Day, 'tis this, that there will be no end of it; for, in order to keep an Uniformity, a vaſt number of Words which the French Tongue cannot be without, muſt be accounted Obſcene; and the Writers who pretend to be ſo nice, may eaſily be convicted of abſurdity. It may be proved to them, that according to their Principles there are no preciſe and over-nice Women, and that thoſe whom we call ſo, are very reaſonable, and argue right. I deſire 'em to tell me, why the verb to geld appears obſcene to them. Is it not becauſe it offers an obſcene object to our Imagination? But for the ſame Reaſon the Word Adultery can't be pronounc'd without a greater Obſcenity. Thus this Word muſt be baniſh'd. There will be a neceſſity to baniſh likewiſe the words Marriage, Wedding-Day, Bride's-Bed, and a vaſt number of ſuch Expreſſions, which excite very obſcene Ideas, and incomparably more offenſive than that, at which the over-nice Lady in one of Moliere's Plays was ſo much offended. (b) For my part, Uncle, ſays ſhe, all that I can ſay is, that Marriage ſeems to me a very offenſive thing. How can a Woman endure the thought of lying by a naked Man? According to the Principles of our Puriſts nothing cou'd be more reaſonable than ſuch a Diſcourſe, and every virtuous Maid ſhould turn out of her Chamber all thoſe who ſhould talk to her of a deſign to Marry her. She might juſtly complain, that they have ſo little regard for her Modeſty, as to offer to her a frightful Obſcenity without ony cover. To aſk a Married Woman, whether ſhe has had any Children, would be a great piece of Uncivility; Politeneſs would require from us, that we ſhould uſe figurative Expreſſions, and imitate, for inſtance, the finical Woman, who ſaid, (c) "That her Companion had fallen into lawful Love (which was Marriage), and that "ſhe knew not how ſhe could reſolve to taſte brutiſh Pleaſures with a Man; "that ſhe had a mind to leave behind her ſome traces of her ſelf, that is, ſome "Children.

According to the Notions of the Puriſts, it would be a very reaſonable thing to exclaim againſt Moliere's School of Women, with all the fury he has ſo handſomely ridiculed, and which is, at the bottom, a downright Extravagance. Every virtuous Perſon ſhould ſay (d) Children that come out thro' the Ear, are a thing of a wretched taſte . . . . . . Can any one that has any virtue, be pleaſed with a Piece that keeps Modeſty in a conſtant Alarm, and continually defiles the Imagination? . . . . . I poſitively affirm, that an honeſt Woman cannot ſee that Play, without being aſhamed, I have diſcovered ſo many Obſcenities in it . . . . . (e) Thoſe Obſcenities appear bare-fac'd and without any cover: The boldeſt Eyes are frighted with their Nakedneſs . . . . . . That paſſage of the Scene, wherein Agnes mentions what was taken from her, is more than ſufficient to prove what I ſay . . . . Fy . . . . . (f) I repeat it again, the Obſcenities of that Piece fly into one's Face . . . . . . Is not Modeſty viſibly offended by what Agnes ſays in the place I ſpeak of? If ſome Urania ventured to anſwer, "(g) Not at all. She ſays nothing but what is very Honeſt; and if you will have it, that ſhe means ſomething elſe, the Obſcenity proceeds from you, and not from her, for ſhe ſpeaks only of a Ribbon that was taken from her:" the following anſwer would be a wiſe one: (h) "Ah! you may talk of a Ribbon as much as you pleaſe; but that the, where ſhe ſtops, was not put there for nothing: It occaſions ſtrange Thoughts; that the is extreamly Scandalous: And all your Eloquence will never juſtify the Inſolence of that Word . . . . . . There is an intolerable (i) Obſcenity in it." That Diſcourſe, tho' never ſo impertinent, would be juſt and honeſt, according to this Principle, All Words that defile the Imagination, that is to ſay, that denote an obſcene Object, ought to be laid aſide. According to this Principle, all thoſe that have ſome Modeſty, would be like the Marchioneſs Araminte, whoſe Character is as follows. (k) "She ſays every where (l) 'tis a horrid Piece, and that ſhe could never endure the Obſcenities it is ſtuffed with . . . . . . She follows the ill Example of thoſe Women, who being in their decline, would ſubſtitute ſomething in the room of what they have "loſt,

---

(a) Mr. le Laboureur (See the Preface to his Additions to Caſtelnau's Memoirs) & Mr. de Mezerai Secretary to the French Academy.

(b) Moliere, Precieuſes ridicules ſcene 4. pag. m. 17.

(c) Sorel de la connoiſſance des bons livres pag. 470. Dutch Edit.

(d) Moliere Critique de l'Eſcole des femmes ſc. 3. pag. m. 13.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 14.

(f) Ibid. pag. 16.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Note, That in this Paſſage of Moliere every body expects to hear Agnes ſay, that ſome body has got her Maidenhead; which excites a very obſcene Idea.

(k) Moliere ibid. ſc. 5. pag. 26.

(l) That is the Play Intituled, The School of Women.

" loſt, and fancy that a ſcrupulous Niceneſs will ſupply their want of Youth " and Beauty. This Woman carries the thing further than others, and is " ſo nicely ſcrupulous, that ſhe finds Obſcenities where no body elſe would " find them. 'Tis ſaid her Scruples are ſuch as will disfigure our Language, and " that there is hardly any Word but what ſhe would curtail, by reaſon of the im" modeſt Syllables ſhe finds in them.

I think I have read ſomewhere, that over-nice Women carried their Scruples ſo far that they would not ſay J'ai mangé des confitures, but des fitures. At this rate, above one half of the Words of the Dictionary of the French Academy ſhould be left out, and then the reſt would be inſignificant, for they would want a Connexion; and thus we ſhould be obliged to explain our ſelves by Signs, which would occaſion more ſcandalous and more dangerous Obſcenities (a) than thoſe that come only into one's Ears. Here follows a Paſſage of the Chevræana, whereby my Aſſertion will be admirably confirmed. (b) " A Lady, who has " a great deal of Wit, but is too finical, told me one day ſhe never uſed any Words " that excite an obſcene Idea, and that ſhe ſaid to thoſe who knew the World, Un " fond d'Artichaut; un fond de Chapeau; une ruë qui n'a point de ſortie, for what we call " un Cul de ſac. I approved of it, and told her I would not fail to do the ſame. How" ever, I added, that on ſome occaſions we were obliged to ſpeak like others. She " very civilly defied me to give her any inſtance of it; and I ask'd her how ſhe call'd " in common Converſation a Piece that is worth ſixty Pence? Sixty Pence, reply'd " ſhe. But, Madam, how d'ye call that Letter of the Alphabet that comes next to " P? She bluſh'd, and at the ſame time reply'd, truly, Sir, I did not think you would " teach me the Croſs-Row." You ſee Mr. Chevreau approves that one ſhould never uſe any Words, that excite an obſcene Idea; and by virtue of that Principle, he is of Opinion, that one ſhould never ſay, un Cul de ſac. He muſt therefore ſtrike out not only above two (c) Pages of Furetiere's Dictionary, corrected by one (d) of the Politeſt Writers of our days, but alſo a vaſt number of Words, whoſe firſt Syllable excites more immodeſt Ideas than the Syllable Cul. He muſt alſo baniſh the Words Adultery, Fornication, Incontinence, and a hundred thouſand more: but as rigid as he is (A) about obſcene Words, he was not willing to grant upon one ſingle point whatever that nice Lady required; and therein he did not ſpeak according to his Principles. I am willing to excuſe him upon that account; for the Conſequences of his Aſſertion are ſo abſurd, and 'tis ſo impoſſible to put 'em in practice, that he is not to blame for not keeping to them. His only fault lies in not perceiving the falſity of a Principle, whereof the moſt neceſſary Conſequences are abſurd, and plainly tend to the deſtruction of the uſe of Speech. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that there are ſome Ladies as virtuous as that nice Woman, who don't ſcruple to ſay, Cul d'Artichaut, and Cul de ſac; as

(a) Segnius irritant animos demiſſa per aurem, Quam quæ ſunt oculis ſubjecta fidelibus, & quæ Ipſe ſibi tradit Spectator. Horat. de arte poet. v. 180.

(b) Chevræana 1. part. pag. 101, 102. Dutch Edit.

(c) At the beginning of the Syllable Cul.

(d) Mr. Baſnage de Bauval.

(A) As rigid as Mr. Chevreau is about obſcene Words .... he did not ſpeak according to his Principles.] Immediately after having ſaid *, as Mareſchal de Baſſompierre did, that all Men carry about 'em the Key of the Treaſure, that is, of the Ladies Virginity; he affirms, that FAIRE DES ENFANS is an obſcene Expreſſion, † and that it ought never to be uſed before Ladies, who have nice Ears. Thoſe two Obſervations were not fit to appear together. Here's another that is a falſity. The Latins (Mr. Chevreau goes on) had the ſame niceneſs as to liberis dare operam; which has been obſerved in the ſixteenth Letter of the ninth Book of Cicero to Papirius Petus, where one may further ſee, why they rather choſe to ſay nobiſcum than cum nobis. Inſtead of the ſixteenth Letter, Mr. Chevreau ſhould have quoted the twenty ſecond; but this would have only prevented the leaſt Fault, for Cicero does not ſay what he aſcribes to him. He ſays nothing of nobiſcum, nor of (‖) cum nobis, and affirms, that liberis dare operam is a modeſt Expreſſion (‡). Mr. Chevreau has found (ε) ſome Obſcenities in Malherbe's Poems, by reaſon of ſome Words that have a double Meaning, but were uſed by Malherbe in an honeſt Senſe. Mr. Menage ſaid upon this, and upon St. Amant's taking this half Verſe of the ſame Poet, qu'on ſurvit à la mort, to be obſcene, (ι) " That a Man muſt have his Imagi" nation ſtrangely corrupted, to find ſuch Or" dures in Authors. Quod ſi recipias, nihil loqui " tutum eſt, ſays Quintilian, ſpeaking of a Man, " who found an Obſcenity in theſe Words of " Virgil, Incipiunt agitata tumeſcere.... (ζ) But, to " return to Malherbe's Verſe, Je veux bander, &c. " Thoſe who find an Obſcenity in it, have more " Reaſon than thoſe who found ſomething ob" ſcene in Terence and Salluſt; the Words aures and " animos removing all Ambiguity." Mr. Chevreau anſwered, (ϑ) That a Man muſt be blind not to ſee ſuch things, and that when he does not perceive thoſe Obſcenities, 'tis a ſign he is very much uſed to them.... The Reader does not expect to find thoſe Obſcenities in Books, and bluſhes when he meets with them. What would Mr. Menage have ſaid, if after he had approved my Obſervation, he had read in a ſmall Book I have juſt now read, Je ſuis convaincu qu'on examine aujourd'huy les choſes, &c. and in another, On vit dans le Conſiſtoire tout autrement? If it be a ſhameful thing to ſhew thoſe Obſcenities, 'tis more ſhameful ſtill to write 'em; and there is a neceſſity to diſcover 'em, that others may avoid 'em. A little after he blames this Expreſſion of Malherbe, elle étoit paroiſſante juſques au Nombril, (She was to be ſeen down to the Navel): (κ) he pretends, that this laſt Word is one of thoſe that can't be modeſtly written... (λ) That Word, in its proper Senſe, belongs only to Phyſicians and Midwives, who call every thing by its Name; and herein Decency and Modeſty don't permit us to imitate them. One wou'd think he had a Mind to revive the old Cuſtom, when the Words Shoe, Foot, Bed, Breeches, were not ſpoken without adding under Correction, with Reverence, &c. This was one of the moſt material Points of Civility, whereby one might know well-bred Children; at preſent it is quite out of Doors. But to proceed, " (μ) One cannot too " carefully avoid ſuch Obſcenities as leave filthy " Ideas in the Mind, and offend nice Ears. C. Ser" vilius Glaucia Quæſtor in the Year of Rome 640, " was look'd upon as the Filth of the Streets, by " reaſon of the Meanneſs of his Soul; and yet the " moſt eloquent Man among the Romans cou'd not " bear that he ſhou'd be call'd (ι) Curiæ ſtercus, " nor that the great Loſs the Common-wealth ſu" ſtain'd by the Death of Scipio, ſhou'd have been " expreſs'd in theſe Words, Reſpublica morte P. Scipionis Africani caſtrata. M. de Balzac did not ob" ſerve Decency, nor the Precepts of the ancient " Rhetoricians, whom he often call'd his Maſters, " when he writ to a Friend concerning a certain Per" ſon, Qu'il étoit tout composé de parties honteuſes. Our " Language

(*) Chevræana 1. part. pag. 350.

(†) See what Mr. Arnauld ſays in his Defenſe de la traduction de Mons B. 4. ch. 2. pag. 334.

(‖) Note, That Quintilian, lib 8. cap 3. obſerves, that inſtead of cum notis hominibus, one ſhould ſay, cum hominibus notis.

(‡) Liberis dare operam quam honeſte dicitur? Cicero Epiſt. 22. lib. 9. ad famil. pag. 58. edit. Grav.

(ε) Chev*ræana* 2. part. pag. 122.

(ι) Menage Obſerv. upon Malherbe, pag. 388.

(ζ) Id. ib. pag. 581.

(ϑ) Chevræana ib. pag. 123.

(κ) Ibid. pag. 124.

(λ) Ibid. pag. 125.

(μ) Chevræana ib. pag. 275. 276.

(ι) Quintilianus Inſtitut. Orat. Lib. viii. cap. vi. De Tropis.

as you may ſee in a Paſſage of Coſtar (B), which has a great Affinity with the Subject in hand.

I have already obſerved that 'tis impoſſible to ſatisfy the Puriſts, againſt whom I am writing. The Ground they go upon, will make 'em lay aſide, whenever they pleaſe, abundance of Words not yet condemn'd by them, which according to their Maxims, do not leſs deſerve to be rejected than thoſe which they have actually laid aſide. There's no avoiding their Cenſure. Tho' you relate Things in modeſt Words, as it has been practiſed in the 2d Volume of the Menagiana, they'll ſay, * That there are ſome Paſſages in it plainly contrary to Modeſty, which cannot be read without Horror, by virtuous Perſons. Cou'd Father Bouhours avoid being criticiſed, tho' in his French Tranſlation of the Goſpel he took all poſſible Care to lay aſide every Word that might appear never ſo little unbecoming †? Was not M. Deſpreaux (whom the illuſtrious Preſident de la Moignon || often commended for having purged ſatyrical Poetry from the Filthineſs, which till then had been, as it were, peculiar to it) accuſed of Obſcenity, for having uſed ‡ the Words Embryo, voix luxurieuſe, morale lubrique? If ſuch Words can't be admitted, there will be no end of cenſuring.

I know ſeveral Perſons who blame Mezeray for ſaying a that ſome Sparks, who had committed Adultery, were mutilated in the Parts wherewith they had offended. Their Cenſure is grounded upon theſe two Reaſons: One is, That there was no need to mention a Circumſtance that offers ſuch an obſcene Object: The other is, That he ſhould at leaſt have omitted all the Words after mutilated, that Word being ſufficient to expreſs the Thing. I deſire thoſe Criticks not to take it ill of me, if I believe the Circumſtance they would have omitted, to be one of thoſe which an Hiſtorian

* Journ. des Savans of the 21. of February 1695. pag. 145. Dutch Edition.

† See the 3 Letter of a learned Lady to another Lady her Friend. p. 8.

|| See the Preface to Deſpreaux's Works.

‡ In the 10 Satyr.

a 'Tis in the 2 Volume of his chronological Abridgement ad ann. 1313. where he ſpeaks of ſome Sparks who courted the Daughter in-law of Philip the Fair.

"Language has been ſo modeſt for theſe ſixty "Years, that we ſeldom uſe the Words Whore and "Bawdy-houſe, which the Preachers formerly uſed "without any Scruple in their beſt Sermons.

It appears from all thoſe Paſſages, that M. Chevreau was very ſevere in his Theory; but his Practice was not anſwerable to it: For ſhou'd one ſtrike out of his Works every thing that defiles the Imagination, there would be abundance of Gaps in them. To ſpeak only of the Chevræana, wherein he appears ſo rigid a Moraliſt, How many Things are there in it that excite very obſcene Idea's? Some of thoſe Paſſages are only Quotations, and others proceed immediately from him. Why ſhou'd a Man preſcribe any Rules which cannot be obſerved in a general Hiſtory, nor in a Collection of all ſorts of Obſervations?

It will not be improper to give here an Inſtance of what he ſays concerning the Preachers of former Times; and therefore I ſhall ſet down ſome Paſſages out of a Sermon of John de Monluc, Biſhop of Valence, and one of the moſt eminent Preachers of the XVI Century. "(a) He who deflowers "and corrupts a Virgin, is guilty of Fornication, "a Crime mention'd in 22d Chapter of Deuteronomy; and yet in our Days no Account is made of "abundance of ſuch lewd Actions that are daily "committed: many poor Maids are enticed, ſeduced, and brought to Perdition; and thoſe who "have debauch'd them, glory in it, and think it "much to their Honour that they have been able "to conquer thoſe Women, who had for ſome time "reſiſted the Temptations of the Fleſh. But if "they are not puniſh'd in this World, the moſt "high God, who ſees every Thing, will in Time "call 'em to an Account: They ſhall give an Account of the Time they have loſt, of the Money they have ſpent upon Bawds, and of the "Faults committed by the Maid after ſhe has been "ſeduced; they ſhall be anſwerable for her being "forſaken and finding no Body to marry her. "Then they will know whether they had any "Reaſon to boaſt of ſuch an execrable Action "...... (b) Thoſe likewiſe infringe this "Command, who contrary to the order of Nature, they commit that enormous and deteſtable "Crime call'd Sodomy: Such Perſons are condemn'd "to Death by the Law of God, as we read in the "20th Chapter of Leviticus ..... (c) That Command is alſo tranſgreſs'd by thoſe, who commonly live in Delights and Pleaſures, who ſpend "their Time in Feaſting and Banquetting, and "pamper their Body to make it a Veſſel of Luxury and Whoredom. St. Peter gives a lively Deſcription of 'em in the ſecond Chapter of his ſecond Epiſtle ..... (d) Sporting themſelves with "their own Deceivings, whilſt they feaſt with you; having their Eyes full of Adultery, and cannot ceaſe from "Sin beguiling unſtable Souls. That is, their only End "and Intention is to deceive poor Souls, and by "their Banquets and Feaſts, to allure them to Adultery and all manner of Filthineſs. So that "their Habitations are Bawdy-Houſes, wherein People meet, Matches are made, and Women are ſeduced: in a Word, they are the "Plague of a Country; and yet ſuch People are "moſt eſteem'd and honour'd, eſpecially thoſe who "are the Ring-Leaders, and as it were, the Cocks "in their Pariſhes.

The Uſe that can be made of the Paſſages extracted out of that Sermon, is to know that the Liberty of expreſſing oneſelf in ſuch a plain manner, is not ſinful in itſelf, for then it wou'd not have been lawful in Henry II's Time. If it was lawful then, ſhou'd a Preacher uſe it in our Days, his only Fault wou'd conſiſt in not conforming to the Mode. But if any one ventured at this preſent Time to wear a Ruff, Wou'd he not offend againſt the Mode? And yet it wou'd be no ſinful Action.

(B) A Paſſage of Coſtar, which has a great Affinity with the Subject in hand.] The polite Voiture (who wou'd believe it?) was accuſed (e) of Obſcenity, tho' he was ſo well acquainted with the genteel Part of the World. Let us ſee what his Apologiſt anſwer'd: "(f) There is hardly any Lady that "ſcruples to repeat and ſing the Verſes which M. de "Voiture made upon a Lady's Back-Side, and I don't "know one that makes any Difficulty to ſay, un "cul d'artichaud, and un cul de ſac". The Apologiſt adds theſe remarkable Words. (g) Let us hear our ridiculous Critick. (2) 'Twas fear'd there was not enough of this ſort of Wit in M. de Voiture's Letters, and that in this reſpect he would not come up to Plautus and Ariſtophanes; and therefore 'twas thought neceſſary to add theſe Words in the laſt Edition, which were wanting in the 178 Letter. I conſent to the caſtrating of Ulpian, and even of Papinian, ſince you will have it ſo; for they beget nothing but Law-Suits. This Thought is very ingenious. Hitherto I have always heard People ſay, without any Scruple, that a Book, was caſtrated to denote a Book that is not entire, but curtail'd. If our Adverſary had any Intereſt in the Academy, he would get this licentious Expreſſion aboliſh'd, and this modeſt Phraſe ſubſtituted in its room, to injure Books and make 'em Eunuchs. The Paſſages of Quintilian (3) quoted by him, are wrongly quoted, and that Author maintains, That if ſome Expreſſions of Salluſt were accounted obſcene, 'twas not the Writer's but the Reader's Fault. As for Celſus, who pretended to find an Obſcenity in a Verſe of Virgil, the ſame Quintilian blames him for it, and ſays, that if ſuch a Niceneſs was allowable, no Man cou'd be ſure of ſpeaking modeſtly, and every Body ſhou'd be ſilent. 'Tis to be obſerved, that Coſtar, who affords me this Paſſage, was none of thoſe learned Men who are unacquainted with the genteel Part of the World.

(a) Monluc Biſhop of Valence, Sermons ſur les dix commandemens de Dieu, pag. 504. edit. of Vaſcoſan 1558. in 8.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 506.

(c) Id. ib. Pag. 507.

(d) Ibid. pag. 508.

(e) See the 11 Section, of Girac's Anſwer to the Apology for Voiture.

(f) Coſtar Suite de la defenſe de Voiture pag. 187.

(g) Coſtar ibid. pag. 191, 192.

(2) Pag. 72, & pag. 73.

(3) Page 72. Ductare exercitus, & patrare bellum apud Salluſtium dicta ſanctè & antiquè ridentur à nobis, ſi Diis placet: quam culpam non ſcribentium quidem judico, ſed legentium. Quintil. l. 8 cap. 3 Si quidem Celſus cacophaton apud Virgilium putat Incipiunt agitata tumeſcere; quod ſi recipias, nihil loqui tutum eſt. Ibid.

ought never to forget; for if there is any Thing extraordinary in the Puniſhment inflicted upon a Malefactor, it ought to be particularly mentioned. The ſecond Remark does not appear to me better. A Sentence of Death may import that a Malefactor's Hands, Noſe, or Ears ſhall be cut off, before he be put to Death; and therefore the Word mutilated would not ſufficiently expreſs the Circumſtance which Mezeray was to mention. But ſuppoſing that this Word is ſufficient, Does it follow from thence, that the Addition of the reſt is a Fault? Don't we commonly ſay, I have ſeen it with my own Eyes, I have heard it with my own Ears? There are ſeveral needleſs Words in thoſe Phraſes, and yet no Body finds Fault with them. Laſtly, I ſay that thoſe Criticks contradict themſelves: they only blame this Addition as being unneceſſary; the Thing, ſay they, had been well enough underſtood without it. They are not therefore againſt offering an obſcene Image to the Mind, they wou'd only have two or three needleſs Sounds omitted. Their Zeal for Purity wou'd have been edifying, had they been altogether againſt the Uſe of any Thing in Hiſtory, that may excite an obſcene Idea; but they allow of it, provided it be done without any needleſs Words. Thus they deſtroy in this laſt Remark what might have been edifying in the firſt. Such is the nice Taſte of our Puriſts: They blame one Expreſſion, and approve another, tho' they offer the ſame Obſcenity to the Mind. The Obſervations printed at Paris in the Year 1700, againſt Mezeray, will be very acceptable to thoſe Criticks. See the Margin (a). He is blamed in (b) that Book for commonly uſing the Words Concubine, Baſtard, and Adultery, which are inconſiſtent with the Niceneſs of our Age. I am ſure they wou'd not condemn the Words Favourite, natural Son, and conjugal Unfaithfulneſs, which have the ſame Signification. How incoherently do they argue!

The new Whims of thoſe who, as I am told, begin to reckon the Words lavement and medecine among obſcene Terms, and to uſe the general Word Remedy in their room, wou'd be leſs unreaſonable. The Word Gliſter was laid aſide, as including too many Circumſtances of the Operation, and the Word Lavement took its place as having a more general Signification. But becauſe the Notion of the Word Lavement is grown too particular, and takes in too many Circumſtances, it will be quickly laid aſide for fear of ſullying the Fancy, and none but general Phraſes will be uſed, ſuch as J'etois dans les remedes, un remede lui fut ordonn &c. which do not more particularly denote a Gliſter or a Purge, than a Bag of Herbs hung about the Neck. Theſe are certainly very ſtrange Whims, and were they approved in all their Conſequences, they would deſtroy abundance of Expreſſions, to which every Body is uſed, and which are very neceſſary to thoſe who recover of a Sickneſs, and to their Viſitants; otherwiſe it wou'd be no eaſie thing to keep up a Converſation in their Chambers, and there wou'd be a Neceſſity to uſe the whole Jargon of finical Women: But after all, thoſe Whims are better grounded than thoſe of the Puriſts, who are willing that an obſcene Image ſhou'd be imprinted in the Mind, provided it be with ſuch and ſuch Words, and not with others.

To ſum up what I have ſaid upon this Head, I obſerve,

I. That the Queſtion is not about a Point of Morality, but about a grammatical Matter, which ought to be decided by the Judges of the Politeneſs of the Style.

II. That I ſhall ingenuouſly confeſs, I don't pretend to the Glory of ſuch a Politeneſs.

III. That I don't think all Authors are obliged to ſubmit to the new Notion of a polite Style; for were it exactly followed, there wou'd be no need at laſt of any Dictionary but that of finical Women.

IV. That this new Politeneſs is not ſo well eſtabliſh'd as to obtain the Force of a Law in the Common-wealth of Learning. The ancient Cuſtom remains ſtill (c), and may be uſed till a Preſcription begins.

V. That in ſuch a Book as this is, 'tis enough not to act againſt the common Practice; but any one who keeps within thoſe Bounds as carefully as I have (d) done, may uſe ſeveral Expreſſions which wou'd not be approved in a Sermon, or a Book written for the Ladies. 'Tis enough for him, that they are uſed in anatomical Books, in Caſes drawn up by Lawyers, and in the Converſations (e) of learned Men.

AN EXAMINATION of the Thought of thoſe who ſay that ſome things offend Modeſty.

But that it may the better appear that Morality is not concern'd in the preſent Queſtion, I muſt obviate another Objection. Let us ſee whether one may alledge this Pretence, That every Phraſe which offends againſt Modeſty, is an Attempt upon Morality, ſince it is prejudicial to Chaſtity.

Whereupon I obſerve in the firſt Place, that thoſe who ſay that ſome Things are repugnant to Modeſty, muſt needs mean either that they weaken Chaſtity, or diſpleaſe the Lovers of that Virtue. In the firſt Senſe, their Propoſition cannot be admitted; and if Women are to decide the Caſe, they'll be infallibly caſt. But doubtleſs Women are the moſt competent Judges of ſuch a Thing, ſince Shame and Modeſty are infinitely more allotted to them than to Men. Let them tell us what paſſes in their Breaſt, when they hear or read a Diſcourſe which offends Modeſty. I am ſure they will not ſay, not only that it fills their Minds with obſcene Thoughts, but alſo that it excites in their Hearts a wanton Deſire which they can hardly reſtrain; in a Word, that they find themſelves expoſed to Temptations whereby their Virtue is ſtaggered and very much endanger'd. We may be ſure, that inſtead of ſuch an Anſwer, they'll ſay, that the Idea which riſes againſt their Will in their Imagination, fills their Mind both with Shame, Indignation and Anger. But 'tis certain, that nothing can be more effectual than this, to corroborate Chaſtity and remove the contagious Influence of an obſcene (a) Becauſe Mezeray ſays that a Prieſt was depoſed for being ſurpriſed with a Woman, and mutilated in thoſe Parts that are uſeleſs to an honeſt Clergyman, the Author of the Obſervations pag. 64. asks this Queſtion: "Had he not ſpoke with more Decency, if he had ſaid only that he was mutilated? Had not the thing been underſtood? However he might have pitch'd upon an Expreſſion leſs ſcandalous.

---

(b) Pag 18. & 19.

(c) M. Menage's Friends were accuſed of Obſcenity in the Year 1695. for a Book printed with Licenſe.

(d) Here I have follow'd Quintilian's Precept in relation to ſome Words that are grown obſcene. Vel hoc vitium ſit quod κακέμφατον vocatur; ſive mala conſuetudine in obſcenum intellectum ſermo detortus eſt, ut Ductare exercitus, & Patrare bellum apud Salluſtium dicta ſancte & antique, ridentur a nobis, ſi diis placet; quam culpam non ſcribentium quidem judico, ſed legentium, tamen vitanda, quatenus verbis honeſtis ne... nibus pe... diſſimu... & eva... centibus etiam v... tiis cedendum eſt, ſive junctura deformiter ſonat. Quintil. lib. 8. cap. 3. pag. 367.

(e) As they were made in M. Menage's Houſe.

obſcene Object imprinted in the Mind; ſo that inſtead of ſaying, according to the firſt Senſe, That what offends Modeſty, endangers Chaſtity, it ought to be ſaid on the contrary, that it is a Fence for that Virtue; and conſequently, if we underſtand this Phraſe, Such a thing offends Modeſty, in the ſecond Senſe, we ought to believe, that inſtead of weakning Chaſtity, it corroborates it.

And therefore it is ſtill true, That if an Author be blam'd for not following the moſt refin'd politeneſs of Style, 'tis a meer Grammatical Buſineſs, in which Morality is not in the leaſt concern'd.

AN OBSERVATION concerning the Vexation of Readers.

Groſs Obſcenities are leaſt dangerous.

If it be reply'd, That Morality is concern'd in it, ſince the Author expreſſes himſelf in ſuch a manner as vexes the Readers: I anſwer, That this Argument is grounded upon a falſe Hypotheſis; for there is no Writer that can prevent the Spite and Vexation of the Readers on a thouſand Occaſions. Every Controverſiſt, who defends his Cauſe with great Art and Subtilty, continually vexes the zealous Readers of the contrary Party. Whoever in a Relation of a Journey, or in the Hiſtory of a Nation, relates Things that are glorious to his Country and Religion, and ſhameful to Foreigners and other Religions, cruelly vexes the Readers, who are not prepoſſeſs'd as he is. The perfection of an Hiſtory conſiſts in being unacceptable to all Sects and Nations; for 'tis a ſign the Writer flatters none of 'em, but tells every one their own. Many Readers fall into ſuch a Paſſion when they meet with certain things in a Book, that they tear the Leaf, or write in the Margin, (a) Thou lyeſt, Rogue, and deſerveſt to be ſtrapp'd. None of theſe (b) Things can be alledg'd as a Reaſon why Authors ſhould be try'd at the Bar of Morality: the Criticks are their only Judges.

The only Thing that may be further objected, is, That Morality is concern'd in the reprſentation of obſcene Objects, becauſe it is apt to excite unlawful Deſires and lewd Thoughts. But this Objection is not ſo ſtrong againſt me as againſt thoſe, who uſe the Periphraſes and nice way of wrapping up things, which ſome complain I have neglected; for they don't hinder the Impreſſion of the Object upon the Imagination, but imprint it without exciting any Shame and Indignation. Thoſe, who uſe ſuch Periphraſes, don't pretend to make themſelves unintelligible; they know every body will underſtand what they ſay, and 'tis certain they are perfectly underſtood. The delicacy of their Touches has only this Effect, That People look upon their Pictures the more boldly, becauſe they are not afraid of meeting with Nudities. Modeſty wou'd not ſuffer 'em to caſt their Eyes upon naked Obſcenities; but when they are dreſs'd up in a tranſparent Cloth, they don't ſcruple to take a full view of 'em, without any manner of Shame, or Indignation againſt the Painter: And thus the Object inſinuates itſelf more eaſily into the Imagination, and pours its malignant influence into the Heart with greater liberty, than if the Soul was ſtruck with Shame and Anger; for thoſe two Paſſions exhauſt the activity of the Soul, and put it into ſuch a trouble that it can hardly have any other Sentiment. At leaſt 'tis certain, that Impurity cannot prevail ſo ſtrongly upon a Soul aſham'd and provok'd, as upon One that is free from Shame and Vexation. Pluribus intentus minor eſt ad ſingula ſenſus. When the Soul is affected with a Paſſion, it is leſs ſuſceptible of another.

I muſt further obſerve, That when an Obſcenity is imperfectly repreſented, but in ſuch a manner that One may eaſily ſupply what is wanting to it, thoſe who hear it finiſh the Picture that ſullies the Imagination; and therefore they have a greater ſhare in the production of that Image, than if the thing had been fully explain'd. In this Caſe they had been only paſſive Subjects, and conſequently the admiſſion of the obſcene Image wou'd have been very innocent; but in the other Caſe they are one of the active Principles, and conſequently, are not ſo innocent, and have more reaſon to fear the dangerous Effects of that Object, which is partly their Work. Thus this pretended regard to Modeſty, is really a more dangerous Snare; it makes One think upon a filthy Subject, to find out what was not clearly expreſs'd. Is it proper to put People upon ſuch Thoughts? Were it not better to prevent 'em altogether?

This is ſtill of greater force againſt the round-about Writers. Had they us'd the firſt Word they met with in a Dictionary, they had only touch'd upon an obſcene thing, and gone preſently over it; but the Periphraſes they have ſought out with great Art, and the Periods they have corrected and abridg'd, till they were ſatisfy'd with the fineneſs of their Pencil, made 'em dwell ſeveral Hours upon an Obſcenity. They have turn'd it all manner of ways; they have been winding (C) about it, as if they had been unwilling to leave ſuch a charming Place This is ad ſirenum ſcopulos conſeneſcere, caſting Anchor within reach of the Syrene's Voice, and the way to ſpoil one's ſelf. 'Tis certain, that excepting thoſe who are truly Devout, moſt of our Puriſts are not in the leaſt concern'd for Modeſty, when they avoid

---

(a) I have ſeen ſuch things written in the Margin of ſome Books.

(b) I except Hereſies, the reading of which has vex'd the Orthodox Chriſtians.

(C) They have been winding about it, as if they had been unwilling to leave ſuch a charming Place.] This puts me in mind of an Inſcription (*) ingrav'd in Golden Letters on a black Marble upon the Pont notre Dame at Paris.

Sequana cum primum Reginæ allabitur urbi,
Tardat præcipites ambitioſus aquas.
Captus amore loci, curſum obliviſcitur anceps,
Quo fluat, & dulces nectit in urbe moras.
Hinc varios implens fluctu ſubeunte canales,
Fons fieri gaudet qui modo flumen erat.
Anno M. DC. LXXVI.

Thoſe Verſes were made by M. de Santeuil.

(*) Deſcription nouvelle de la ville de Paris tom. 1. p. 206. Dutch edit. 1685.

ſo carefully the Expreſſions of their Anceſtors, they are profeſs'd Gallants, who Cajole all ſorts of Women, and have frequently two Miſtreſſes, one whom they keep, and another who keeps them. Does it become ſuch Men to exclaim againſt a Word that offends Modeſty, and to be ſo nice when a thing is not ſufficiently wrapp'd up? We may apply to them what Moliere ſaid of a pretended Prude: "(a) Believe me, thoſe Women, "who make ſuch a-do, are not accounted more virtuous for it. On the contrary, "their myſterious Severity, and affected Grimaces, make every body willing to cenſure their Actions. People are mightily pleas'd to find out ſomething to blame in "their Conduct. And to give an Inſtance of it, There were t'other Day ſome Wo-"men at this Play oppoſite to our Box, who by their affected Grimaces during the "whole Play, and turning their Heads, and hiding their Faces, occaſion'd many ſcur-"vy Jeſts upon them, nay, a Footman cry'd out, That their Ears were more chaſte "than the reſt of their Bodies." The Men I ſpeak of, think only of making themſelves admir'd for the delicacy of their Pen.

The Janſeniſts are accounted the beſt Moraliſts; and I do but follow their Opinion, when I ſay, That a groſs Obſcenity is leſs dangerous than one that is nicely expreſs'd. I am not ignorant, ſays one of 'em, "(b) that they call ordures only ſuch "Words as are groſly obſcene, and Gallantries, thoſe that are expreſs'd in a nice and "ingenious manner; but Obſcenities, tho' cover'd with an ingenious Ambiguity, as "it were with a tranſparent Vail, do not ceaſe to be Obſcenities; they do not leſs "offend chaſte Ears, defile the Imagination, and corrupt the Heart; a ſubtil and im-"perceptible Poyſon, is not leſs mortal than a violent one. There are ſome Enco-"miums upon Modeſty, which Modeſty itſelf cannot bear. Witneſs that of (1) Fa-"ther le Moine. The groſs Obſcenities of a Carman or Porter, are not by a great "deal ſo pernicious, as the ingenious Words of a cajolling Spark." This Janſeniſt having mention'd ſome wanton Thoughts vented by Father Bouhours, under the Name of an Interlocutor in a Dialogue, which are expreſs'd in very nice Words, goes on thus: (c) All Parents, without excepting thoſe that are moſt ingaged in the Vanities of the World, will acknowledge that thoſe pernicious Fooleries are MORE DANGEROUS than GROSS Obſcenities; that they corrupt Young People, and make a very ill Impreſſion upon 'em. I have quoted in my Dictionary a Paſſage of M. Nicolle, wherein he poſitively affirms, That unlawful Paſſions are more dangerous, when cover'd with a ſhew of Virtue.

This cannot be deny'd: Nay, a Woman of an imperfect Virtue would run leſs danger among brutiſh Men, who ſhou'd ſing bawdy Songs, and talk lewdly like Soldiers, than among Men who expreſs themſelves in reſpectful Terms. They wou'd think themſelves indiſpenſably oblig'd to be angry with thoſe Brutes, and to leave the Room full of Rage and Indignation. But flattering Compliments, intermix'd with ambiguous Words, and ſome Freedom nicely expreſs'd, wou'd not ſtartle them; they wou'd lend an Ear to them, and gently receive the Poyſon.

A Lover wou'd immediately loſe all his Hopes, ſhou'd he groſly and filthily propoſe his ill Deſign: He is a Bungler in the Art of Love, if he has no regard to Modeſty in his amorous Addreſſes.

There is no Father but wou'd rather have his Daughters bluſh than laugh at a Story. If they bluſh (d), they are ſafe, Shame prevents the ill effect of the Obſcenity; but if they laugh, it makes an Impreſſion. If they laugh, 'tis doubtleſs becauſe the Obſcenity was artfully wrap'd up, and cover'd with an apparent Modeſty. Had it been groſly expreſs'd, it wou'd have excited Shame and Indignation. Farces in our Days are more dangerous than they were in the Days of our Anceſtors: In former times they were ſo obſcene, that virtuous Women durſt not appear at 'em; but now they don't ſcruple to ſee 'em under pretence that Obſcenities are wrap'd up, tho' not in impenetrable Covers. Are there any ſuch? They wou'd bore 'em thro', were they made up of Seven Hides like Ajax's Shield.

If any thing cou'd make la Fontaine's Tales very pernicious, 'tis their being generally free from obſcene Expreſſions.

Some Ingenious Men much given to Debauchery, will tell you, That the Satyrs of Juvenal are incomparably more apt to put One out of conceit with Lewdneſs, than the modeſteſt Diſcourſes that can be made againſt that Vice. They will tell you that Petronius is not ſo dangerous, notwithſtanding his groſs Obſcenities, as he is in the nice Dreſs of Count de Rabutin; and that the reading of the Book Intituled Les Amours des Gaules, will make One more fond of Gallantry, than the reading of Petronius.

It were wrong to conclude from what has been ſaid, That the leaſt Evil wou'd be to uſe the Expreſſions of Porters. I know the Stoicks laugh'd at the Diſtinction of Words, and maintain'd, That every thing ought to be call'd by its Name, and that there being nothing diſhoneſt in the Conjugal Duty, it could not be denoted by any immodeſt Word, and that therefore the Word us'd by Clowns to denote it, was as good as any other. You may ſee their Sophiſms in a (e) Letter of Cicero. Perhaps, it were no eaſy thing to ſilence 'em by the way of Diſpute, but they don't deſerve to be admitted to it.

What has been accounted a Rule of Decency and Modeſty in all Societies, time out of mind, and with the unanimous Conſent of the Publick, ought to be look'd upon as a firſt Principle, which none can be allow'd to contradict. And therefore when a whole Nation are agreed in calling ſome Words immodeſt, inſomuch, that the very Porters who uſe 'em moſt, are perſuaded of their obſcenity, and abſtain from them before

(a) Moliere, Critique de l'Eſcole des femmes ſc. 3 p. 15.

(b) Reponſe à l'Apologie du Pere Bouhours pag. lxxiii & ſeq. edit. 1700.

(1) Lettre Provinciale XI. Peintures morales by Father le Moine B.

(c) Ib. pag. LXXVIII.

(d) Erubuit, ſalva res eſt. Terent.

(e) The 22d of the 9th Book ad familiar.

before Perſons of Honour, and would be ſcandaliz'd to hear 'em pronounc'd in a publick Aſſembly, no private Perſon can be admitted to oppoſe ſuch a Judgment: All the Members of the Society are oblig'd to reſpect it. The Courts of Juſtice afford us a remarkable Inſtance of it; for Lawyers are not allow'd to repeat ſuch Words, when they plead for the Puniſhment of thoſe who uſe 'em to revile their Neighbours. They will have publick Modeſty reſpected in the hearing of a Cauſe; but when they judge by Report, they not only permit the Reporter to mention the very Words of the Offender tho' never ſo obſcene, but alſo command him to do it. This I have from a Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, who told me within theſe few Years, that being willing to uſe a Periphraſe the firſt time he reported ſuch a Cauſe, the Preſident gave him to underſtand that there was no Occaſion to have a Regard to chaſte Ears, but to judge of the Nature of the Offence, and that therefore he was obliged to ſpeak the very Word it conſiſted in. I fancy the Inquiſition (CΔ) uſes the ſame Method.

The Stoicks went doubtleſs by the ſame Rule, and if in their private Conferences they did not think it neceſſary to prefer a Word to another, there was a neceſſity for them to conform to the common Style in publick. The unanimous Conſent of Nations ought to be ſubmitted to in that reſpect by all private Perſons.

Wherefore ſince the Word Putain (a Whore) which our Farefathers uſed in their (a) graveſt Books, as freely as the Latins uſed the Word Meretrix, begins to be generally decried 'tis fit all Authors ſhou'd begin to diſuſe it, and ſubſtitute the Word Curtezan in the room of it, ſince the World will have it ſo. But this is at the Bottom a groundleſs Nicety; for either the Word Curtezan excites as ſtrong an Idea as the other, or a weaker one. If the former, there's nothing got by it, every Body will have a Notion of an infamous Object; if the latter, 'tis leſſening the Abhorrence of the Publick for a Proſtitute. But does ſuch a Creature deſerve ſuch a Regard? Were it not better to aggravate the infamous Notion of the Trade ſhe profeſſes? Are you afraid of making her too odious? You are for giving her a handſome Name which formerly ſignified a (b) Court-Lady. One wou'd think you are afraid of offending her, and willing to pleaſe her by a quaint Name. The Conſequence of which wou'd be, if People argued right, that the Word Curtezan wou'd quickly grow obſcene, and a ſofter one ſhou'd be uſed inſtead of it. One ſhou'd ſay, a Woman who behaves herſelf ill, and then, a Woman that is talk'd of, and then, a ſuſpicious Woman, and then, a Woman who does not live (c) a holy Life, and at laſt deſire the moſt finical Ladies to invent ſome other Periphraſe.

AN Anſwer to the Objection grounded upon Uncivility.

I am juſt now ſenſible of another Objection. 'Tis a Piece of Uncivility, will ſome ſay, to inſert in a Book what cannot be ſpoken in the Preſence of virtuous Women; and therefore ſince Uncivility is blameable, morally ſpeaking, the Fault for which you may be blamed, does not concern Grammar, but Morality.

I anſwer in the firſt Place, That Uncivility is not an ill Thing, morally ſpeaking, but when it proceeds from Pride, or Contempt of others; but when a Man wants Civility, either becauſe he knows not the way of expreſſing it, or does not think himſelf obliged to follow it, he is guilty of no Sin. D'ye think that an old Profeſſor of the Sorbonne is bound to know all the Arts that are practis'd by the young Abbots of the Court, to expreſs their Reſpect to the Ladies with great Politeneſs? That Profeſſor has other Things to learn that are more important; and tho' he knew what ſort of Civility is in faſhion, he might lawfully diſpenſe with it. His Age and Character don't require he ſhou'd conform to it, but rather the contrary. I add, that new Civilities are a Slavery introduc'd by great Men, or invented by their Flatterers, to the Prejudice of the ancient Liberty. But if it be lawful for every private Perſon to depart from the old Cuſtom, 'tis alſo lawful to keep it till every Body has laid it aſide, and it becomes ſome Perſons not to be too haſty in taking up new ways. 'Tis with this as 'tis with Faſhions in Cloaths. Vain People immediately appear in the new Faſhion, but the grave and wiſe do it only when 'tis grown adult, if I may be allowed to ſay ſo. A Medium ought to be kept in thoſe Things; a Man muſt not be one of [CΔ I fancy the Inquiſition uſes the ſame Method.] I don't think the Inquiſitors will have ſuch Abjurations, as contain horrid Obſcenities, to be publickly read; but during the Trial they hear 'em, and when they are written down, they are read with a loud Voice in a private Place. Such was the Method of the Inquiſitors of Rome in the Year 1698 towards Brother Peter Paul, di San Giovanni Evangeliſta, a bare-footed Auguſtin, convicted of Prophanation and Impiety, and of an abominable Lewdneſs. I have a Copy of the Abjuration, abjura Semi-publica, which he made in a Chappel al ſacello di Caſa Graniſi, and I find that among other things he was told: (*) Diceſti haver tu moſtrato e rimoſtrato alle tue ſopradette devote con le quali tu proſequivi gl' abbracciamenti in parte naſcoſte che tu per la dolcezza di quelli eri rapito in eſtaſi, e ſentivi un godimento infinito dell' amor divino, e che tu t' inſervoravi in quell' eſtaſi .... Hai detto haver bacciate alle tue donne le parti vergognoſe, e che doppo haverle coſi bacciate a toccate l'hai benedette & li hai aperti li meati, e pregavi dio che li conſervaſſe in tutto quello benedetto clauſtro verginale .... Hai detto che alcune donne ti hanno lavato le parti baſſe tre volte, la prima per purgarſi dalle colpe mortale, la ſeconda dalle veniali, e la terza dalle imperfettioni. Hai detto che alcune volte in godere delle donne tu ſentivi ſpecie di martirio ..... che un giorno parimente l'hai fatte radunare e ad una per una invocare e bacciare il tuo membro genitale.

(a) The Tranſlators of the Bible of Geneva uſed it.

(b) See the Chevræana part. 2 pag. 415.

(c) Note that Sandoval ſpeaking of the abominable Actions committed at Rome by the Army of Charles V, in the Year 1527, is contented to ſay it was not a holy Action obra no ſanta. See la Mothe le Vayer pag. 177 of the 2 Vol of the Edition in 12.

'Tis not to be queſtion'd that the Inquiſition wou'd publiſh thoſe Things, were it neceſſary to undeceive a formidable Cabal, and an exaſperated Mob, who ſhou'd maintain that a Monk had been ſeverely puniſh'd for ſmall Faults. Thus it was thought neceſſary to publiſh the Informations made againſt the Knights-Templars, tho' never ſo full of horrid Obſcenities, rather than People ſhou'd think their Order had been deſtroyed without a juſt Cauſe.

(*) I have followed the Orthography of the Manuſcript Copy imparted to me by Dr. Silveſtre at his Return from Rome in the Year 1700.

the firſt that takes 'em up, nor the laſt that leaves them; and none makes himſelf ridiculous by keeping the old Faſhion, but when it is quite out of Doors.

I anſwer in the ſecond Place, that an Author is not bound to ſuppreſs all the Words that cannot be civilly ſpoken in the Preſence of virtuous Women: Witneſs M. de ſaint Olon, who is no Stranger to the Ways of the Court: He wou'd not have ſaid before the Ladies in a ſerious Converſation what he has (a) writ concerning the Marriages of the Africans.

There are many Reaſons for taking a greater Liberty in a Book than in Converſation. An Obſcenity ſpoken before virtuous Women in good Company, makes 'em very uneaſie; they can't ward off the offenſive Blow; 'tis not in our Power to hear or not to hear, what we are told in our Language. The accidental Meeting of a naked Man, or the Sight of a lewd Picture, is not without Remedy; 'tis but turning one's Back, or ſhutting one's Eyes; but one can't ſtop the Mouth of a talking Man. The Shame occaſion'd by an Obſcenity, is much greater when we are ſurrounded with People who obſerve our Looks. The Confuſion and Perplexity of a virtuous Woman upon ſuch an Occaſion, makes her very uneaſie: This Uneaſineſs is attended with Indignation, becauſe Men don't uſe to talk ſo before Women whom they reſpect, and think to be honeſt, but before Women of whom they have an ill Opinion. There are no ſuch Inconveniencies with reſpect to a Book. If there is any Thing in it which you take to be too free, you may read it or let it alone. For Inſtance, you may foreſee that the Article of the Courtezan Lais in my Dictionary, will contain ſome Quotations of that Nature; don't read it. Let ſome truſty Perſons take a View of the Book, before you undertake to read it, and let 'em inform you of what is to be ſkipp'd. Beſides a Woman who is alone when ſhe reads a Book, is not expoſed to the Looks of a Company, (b) which is the Thing that moſt perplexes and confounds her: And becauſe an Author ſpeaks to no Body in particular, ſhe does not think herſelf ſlighted or offended.

But you cou'd not but know, will ſome ſay, that there are now many Women who read Books of Literature; and therefore you ſhou'd not have been contented with what you call common Civility; you ſhou'd have obſerved the niceſt and the moſt rigid Civility, that the fair Sex might not find any thing in your Book that might ſully their Imagination. My Anſwer is, that if it had been poſſible by obſerving ſuch a ſevere Civility to prevent the Reader's finding any ſuch Thing in my Dictionary, I had willingly ſubmitted to the Rules of the Puriſts, who come neareſt to the Taſte of over-nice Women; but I was ſenſible that the greateſt Niceneſs cannot remove any Image of an obſcene Object from the Mind of the Reader. This will not be eaſily believed, unleſs I ſhew the Truth of it with the utmoſt Evidence.

In order to it, I need only prove this ſingle Propoſition, the moſt obſcene and the modeſteſt Words that can be uſed to denote a filthy Thing, repreſent it as lively and diſtinctly in the Hearer's and Reader's Mind the one as the other. This ſeems at firſt a great Paradox, and yet it may be made ſenſible to every Body by a popular Argument. Let us ſuppoſe one of thoſe Adventures, which are ſometimes the Talk of a whole Town, a Marriage ready to be celebrated, and ſuſpended all of a ſudden by the Oppoſition of a third Perſon. That third Perſon is a Maid, who happens to be with Child, and demands that the Marriage her Lover has contracted with another ſhou'd be declar'd void. Let us ſuppoſe that a very virtuous Woman, who has only heard of this Oppoſition in general, is willing to know what Reaſons that Maid has for it. She might be told, She has the Misfortune of being with Child; he has had her Company; they have had a cloſe View of one another; they have been too familiarly acquainted; he has had the laſt Favour of her; ſhe has granted him the moſt precious Thing ſhe had, as it appears from the Conſequences; what paſs'd betwixt 'em, can't be modeſtly ſpoken, chaſte Ears wou'd be offended at it; ſhe is obliged to get her Honour repair'd. Many other Phraſes more myſterious might be found out in anſwer to the Queſtion of that virtuous Woman; but all of 'em wou'd imprint in her Mind the filthy and brutiſh Action, which has occaſion'd that Maid's Big-Belly, as ſtrongly as Michael Angelo cou'd have done it upon a Cloth: and if that virtuous Woman had heard by chance the bawdy Word whiſpered by a Debauchee in the Ear of another Debauchee, to let him know what it is, ſhe cou'd not have a clearer Notion of the Thing. None, tho' never ſo modeſt, can ſincerely deny what I have been ſaying, if they will examine what paſſes within their Breaſt: 'Tis therefore certain, that the modeſteſt and the moſt obſcene Words equally defile the Imagination, when the Thing denoted by them is a filthy Object.

THAT the niceſt Words ſully the Imagination as much as the moſt obſcene.

Tho' you uſe the modeſteſt Expreſſion made uſe of in the Scripture, to repreſent what we call conjugal Duty: (c) Adam knew his Wife Eve: (d) Abraham went in unto Hagar: (e) I went unto the Propheteſs: you'll never be able to weaken the Image of that Object; it will be imprinted in the Mind as fully as if you uſed the moſt obſcene Words. The ſame may be ſaid of the Phraſes, to conſummate a Marriage, the Marriage was conſummated, the Marriage was not conſummated, Expreſſions as it were conſecrated, that can't be avoided in the moſt ſerious Relations, and the moſt majeſtical (f) Hiſtories: Thoſe Words raiſe the ſame Idea as the Words of a Plough-Man.

But how comes it then, will ſome ſay, that a virtuous Woman is not offended with vail'd Expreſſions, and is angry with a bawdy Word? I anſwer that their Indignation proceeds from the acceſſory Idea's which attend ſuch a Word, but don't attend a Phraſe wrapp'd up in clean Linnen. The Impudence of thoſe who expreſs themſelves like Porters, and their want of Reſpect, is the true Cauſe of ſuch an Indignation.

(a) In his Relation of the Empire of Morocco, printed at Paris in the Year 1695.

(b) The moſt virtuous Perſons, when alone, are not aſham'd of the State they are in when they get out of Bed, but they wou'd be aſham'd if they were ſeen by others.

(c) Gen. chap. 4. v. 1.

(d) Ibid. chap. 16. v. 4.

(e) Iſaiah chap. 8. v. 3.

(f) Thoſe for inſtance which treat of the Divorce of Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon.

dignation. Their Expreſſion affords three Idea's: One is a direct and main Idea; the others are indirect and acceſſory. The direct Idea repreſents the Filthineſs of the Object, and does not do it more diſtinctly than the Idea of another Word. But the indirect and acceſſory Idea's repreſent the Diſpoſition of the Perſon who ſpeaks, his Brutiſhneſs and Contempt of the Hearers, and his Deſign of affronting a Woman of Honour. This is what ſhe is angry at. She is not offended, as ſhe is a modeſt Woman; for under this Notion nothing can offend her but the filthy Object: But ſhe is not offended at that Object; for if it had been repreſented to her Imagination with Phraſes as expreſſive as the bawdy Word, ſhe wou'd not have been angry; and therefore her Vexation proceeds from ſome other Reaſon, I mean from her being uncivilly uſed. Hence it is that a wanton Lady will often expreſs a greater Indignation againſt thoſe who talk Bawdy than a virtuous Woman, becauſe ſhe takes it for an Inſult and a bloody Affront. Her Reſentment does not proceed from the Love of Chaſtity, but from Pride and a Deſire of Revenge. As for virtuous Women, who are provok'd at a groſs Obſcenity, they are ſo out of a reaſonable Principle of Self-love; for they ought to be ſenſible of an Injury which deprives them of the Reſpect due to their Sex; and beſides 'tis very reaſonable they ſhould keep up a good Reputation, which they cou'd not do, ſhou'd they ſuffer that the ſame Things ſhou'd be told 'em that are told to lewd Women.

Thus I prove that it was impoſſible to leave out of this Dictionary every thing that ſullies the Imagination. It muſt needs be ſullied, which way ſoever the Reader be told that Henry IV had natural Children.

'Tis therefore certain that 'tis enough for me to keep within the Bounds of common Civility. If any one was ſo great a Lover of Purity, as to wiſh not only that no immodeſt Deſire ſhou'd ariſe in his Mind, but alſo that his Imagination ſhou'd be conſtantly free from every obſcene Idea, he cou'd not attain his End without loſing his Eyes and his Ears, and the Remembrance of many Things which he cou'd not chuſe but ſee and hear. Such a Perfection cannot be hop'd for, whilſt we ſee Man and Beaſts, and know the Signification of certain Words that make a neceſſary Part of our Language. 'Tis not in our Power to have, or not to have certain Idea's, when certain Objects ſtrike our Senſes; they are imprinted in our Imagination whether we will or not. Chaſtity is not endangered by them, provided we don't grow fond of 'em. If Chaſtity was inconſiſtent with every impure Idea, we ſhou'd never go to Church, where Impurity is cenſured, and ſo many Banes of Matrimony are bid; we ſhould never hear the Liturgy that is read before the whole Congregation on the Wedding-Day; we ſhou'd never read the moſt excellent of all Books, I mean the Holy Scripture, and we ſhou'd avoid as ſo many infectious Places, all the Converſations where People talk of Big-Bellies, Child-Births, and Chriſtnings. The Imagination runs in a Moment from the Effect to the Cauſe, and finds the Way ſo well beaten, that it goes from one End to the other, before Reaſon can ſtop it.

There is another Conſideration that may teach the Compilers of Literature, that 'tis enough for them to keep within the Bounds of common Decency; I mean, that they muſt not expect to be read by People, whoſe Ears and Imagination are ſo tender as to receive dangerous Impreſſions from the leaſt obſcene Object. I don't know whether it was reaſonably ſuppoſed in ancient Rome, that the obſcene Words ſpoken by little Children in the Chamber of a Bride, were the firſt ſhe had heard; but I am perſwaded, that in our Days, any Perſon of either Sex, who has been converſant in the World four or five Years, has heard abundance of obſcene Things, eſpecially in ſuch Countries where Jealouſie is not tyrannical: there People enjoy a great Freedom; merry Converſations, Sports, Feaſts, and Country-Journeys are very common; they only think of paſſing away the Time merrily. 'Tis true, the Preſence of the fair Sex prevents Obſcenities from appearing bare-fac'd, but they appear in a Diſguiſe; which, as I have ſhown above, does not hinder the Impreſſion of a filthy Object, no more than if one ſhou'd uſe the plain Words of a Clown. Women dare not be angry when Things are wrapp'd up, for fear of being accounted finical and preciſe. This is a meer Diſpute about Words: the Thing ſignified is admitted, but not all the Words that ſignifie it; and therefore an Author may very well believe his Readers will not be ſurpriſed, being ſtrengthen'd and harden'd by Cuſtom.

SECOND Queſtion. It cannot be ſaid that there are any Obſcenities liable to cenſure in this Book, as they conſiſt in the very Facts related by me.

'Tis certain, that Women who read Books of Literature, don't begin with that: they have already read Romances, Plays, and Love Poems. There's nothing in my Dictionary that can daunt 'em, after they have encountred ſuch Enemies. If the luxurious (a) Muſick of Opera's, the tenderneſs of Tragedies, the licentiouſneſs of Comedies, and the paſſionate Deſcriptions of the Effects and Diſorders of Love, make no dangerous Impreſſions upon 'em, they need not be afraid of reading the Articles of Abelard and Heloiſa.

This is what I had to ſay upon the firſt Queſtion I was to diſcuſs. I hope the Reader will be ſenſible of the whole force of my Juſtification, and own, that if there is any Obſcenity in my Dictionary that is liable to Cenſure, it does not proceed from the Expreſſions I uſe when I ſpeak of my own Head. What remains to be inquired into, is, whether it conſiſts in the things themſelves, when I ſet down the Words of other Authors, or only give the Senſe of 'em. This is the ſecond Queſtion I have undertaken to examine.

(a) 'Tis an Epithet of M. Deſpreaux in his 10th Satyr.

None can be for the Affirmative upon this Queſtion, without laying down this Hypotheſis: 1. That that an Hiſtorian ought to ſuppreſs all the lewd Actions that are to be found in the Lives of Princes, or private Perſons. 2. That a Moraliſt, who condemns Lewdneſs, ought never to mention any thing, that offends Modeſty. The Puriſts I have been ſpeaking of muſt neceſſarily follow this Hypotheſis; and 'tis certain, there have been at all times many People, who have condemn'd the Hiſtories and Invectives, in which Lewdneſs is hideouſly deſcribed.

If our Puriſts are willing to argue coherently, and to keep conſtantly to their Maxims, they muſt admit the whole Hypotheſis I have mention'd. They muſt ſay, 1. That an Hiſtorian ought only to obſerve, that Charlemagne, the two Joans of Naples, and Henry IV. of France were not Chaſte. 2. That a Preacher, and a Ghoſtly Father, and any other Man who deſires the Reformation of Manners, ought to cenſure Lewdneſs only in general. I have quoted an Author, who continually condemns the Hiſtorian Mezeray for mentioning ſome particular Facts which offend chaſte Ears. He cenſures him particularly for what he ſays of Margaret de Valois, the firſt Wife of Henry IV.

There have been ſuch Puriſts in all Ages; but great Authors have at all times laugh'd at their Scruples and Fancy, ſo that the Commonwealth of Learning has always been divided into two Parties upon this Head: Each of 'em alledg'd ſeveral Reaſons and Authorities; each of 'em raiſed Objections, and made Anſwers, and no ſupreme Tribunal did ever determine the Matter. And therefore I am diſpenſed from entring upon a long diſcuſſion; this affords me a ſhort way to come off. For if thoſe who deſpiſed the Maxims of the Puriſts, did always make a conſiderable Party in the Commonwealth of Learning, if they always maintain'd their Right, if that Difference has never been decided, every private Man may lawfully ſide with them, and believe at leaſt, that 'tis probable they are in the right. None can reaſonably deny the Privileges of the Doctrine of Probability in this Caſe. Thoſe who follow the (a) Anti-Puriſts, are not reduc'd to two or three grave Authors: They may reckon 'em by hundreds, and Writers alledge the inſpired by God. You'll find in Geneſis, that Moſes tells us, without any compaſs of Words, (b) that two Daughters having made their Father drunk, lay with him, and had Children by him; that Dina (c), Jacob's Daughter, was raviſh'd; that Juda, the Son of the ſame Patriarch, (d) defiled himſelf in an open Road with a Woman he took for a Proſtitute, but ſhe was his Daughter-in-Law, and knew him very well; and that Ruben, (e) eldeſt Brother to Juda, commited Inceſt with a Wife of his own Father. There are many things in Leviticus, which are not proper to be read in Proteſtant Churches. An abominable Action is related in the Book of Judges (f). The Prophets uſed the plaineſt Expreſſions to repreſent the Turpitude of Lewdneſs. See alſo the Deſcription of the Whore in the Revelation. They uſed ſome Compariſons (D) which the Miniſters durſt not relate at length. All the Proteſtant Tradeſmen in France could tell the popiſh Miſſionaries, in the Diſpute about the Merit of good Works, that all our Righteouſneſs is as filthy Rags; but the remaining part of the Paſſage was unknown to them, becauſe it was not put into controverſial Books. Has St. Paul, in his (g) Epiſtle to the Romans, ſuch a regard to Chaſte Ears as our Puriſts require? Does he not deſcribe in plain Words the abominable Impurities of the Heathens?

If it be objected to me, that the Sacred Writers have Privileges peculiar to them, ſunt ſuperis ſua jura; I anſwer, that not only the graveſt Heathen Writers, but alſo the ancient Fathers of the Church, writ with the ſame freedom. When Livy (h) does ſo gravely and majeſtically relate the ſuppreſſion of the Bacchanalia, he diſcovers ſeveral Abominations, which ſully the Imagination, and can't be read without horror. Seneca, the graveſt and moſt rigid Philoſopher of ancient Rome, deſcribes (i) the moſt infamous lewdneſs with the greateſt plainneſs. He condemns it with all the ſeverity of a Cenſor, but at the ſame time he makes a natural Deſcription of it. When the Fathers of the Church ſpeak of the Gnoſticks, or Manichees, or other ſuch Sects, they relate ſeveral things which not only defile the Imagination, but alſo make one's Stomach riſe, and might ſerve for a kind of Vomit. Arnobius, in his Invectives againſt the Heathens, is ſo little cautious in his Words, that Mr. de la Fontaine would certainly have dreſſed ſuch things more cleanly, and had been more reſerved in what concerns Priapus. St. Auguſtin, (k) on ſome Occaſions, expreſſed himſelf in very plain and obſcene Words. St. Ambroſe and St. Chryſoſtom have done the like; nay, the latter maintain'd, there was a neceſſity to do it in order to inſpire a true abhorrence for ſuch lewd Actions as one deſcribes. Caſaubon did not approve that (E) method; but he muſt give us leave to believe, that his Opinion about Moral Queſtions, is not to be compared with that of this Holy Father.

If

(a) So I call for brevity ſake thoſe who laugh at the pretended niceneſs of the Puriſts.

(b) Gen. chap. 19.

(c) Ibid. chap. 34.

(d) Ibid. chap. 38.

(e) Ib chap. 49. v. 4.

(f) Chap. 19.

(g) Chap. 1.

(h) Titus Livius lib. 39 pag. m. 749 & ſeq. Antony de la Faye in his French Tranſlation of Livy has not weaken'd the Original.

(i) See the Hexameron ruſtique journée 2. pag. m. 45. & ſeq.

(k) See the Hexameron ruſtique ibid. pag 58. & ſeq.

(D) They uſed ſome Compariſons.] The following Paſſage of Mr. Menjot will ſerve for a Commentary upon the Text of this Remark. (*) Hic obiter obſervabimus mulierem menſtruatam dici ἀποκαθημένην, à ſeptuaginta … veteris Teſtamenti Græcis interpretibus, ὡς ῥάκος ἀποκαθημένης πᾶσα ἡ δικαιοσύνη ἡμῶν, (1) omnis noſtra juſtitia eſt quaſi pannus menſtruatæ; eò quod Iſraëlitica fœmina αἷς ἦν τὰ κατ' ἐθισμὸν τῶν γυναικῶν, (2) ut alibi loquuntur iidem interpretes, during their monthly Courſes, ſedêre conſuevisſent, ut conſtat ex hiſtoriâ Rachelis (3) … … Ità idem Eſaias antea dixerat (4) λικμήσεις ὡς ὕδωρ τῆς ἀποκαθημένης, ventilabis, hoc eſt, diſperges ea (de idolis loquitur) ſicut immunditiam menſtruatæ, ut fert textus vulgata lectionis.

(E) Caſaubon did not approve that Method.] It does not become him to pretend to be wiſer than the ancient Fathers. If the queſtion was about the (*) Antonius Menjotius de paſſione uterina pag. 4. & 5.

(1) Eſaiæ c. 64.

(2) Geneſ. c. 31.

(3) Loc. cit.

(4) Ibid. c. 30.

If a Liſt were to be given of all the Hiſtorians from Suetonius to Mezeray, who have groſly related lewd Actions, it would fill up many Pages; and if it be ſaid, that Suetonius has been blamed by famous Authors, my Adverſaries will get nothing by it, ſince thoſe who (F) vindicate him, are as eminent as thoſe who find fault with him.

There is a vaſt Number of Moraliſts, who have deplored the corruption of their Age, and plainly particulariz'd (a) Sins, and their ſeveral kinds. I don't pretend to excuſe all the Caſuiſts; but I can poſitively affirm, that in the Church of Rome none of 'em can avoid ſaying many things that offend Modeſty. 'Tis well known, that Father Natalis Alexander declared for rigid Morality, and was engaged in many Quarrels upon that Account. I peruſed t'other day in his Moral Doctrines what concerns Sins againſt (b) the Seventh Commandment, and hardly found any period in it, but what contains many groſs Obſcenities: And yet I think he is one of thoſe who treat that Subject with the greateſt Modeſty; but 'tis a Subject that does not permit a Writer to have a regard to Modeſty. The ſame may be ſaid of the (c) Canoniſts, and thoſe who write Anatomical Books: and to ſhew that to this very day Men of a good Taſte and great Politeneſs ſide with the Anti-Puriſts, I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of the Author, who criticized Mr. de St. Evremont. Don't we ſee ſtill, ſays he (d), in the Theological Treatiſes of Humane Actions, the Explication of all the lewd Thoughts and Actions that can be ſuggeſted by Luſt? Thoſe Explications are not contrary to Modeſty, being neceſſary to thoſe whom God has appointed for the direction of others, who ought to have a perfect Knowledge of Sins, with all their Circumſtances, in order to make a Sinner ſenſible of the State he is in, and work his Repentance. But if you maintain ſtill, that thoſe Treatiſes are inconſiſtent with Modeſty, is there any Science more contrary to it than Anatomy, wherein all the Parts of Humane Bodies are viewed? yet there's no Law againſt thoſe who meddle with it.

The Party of the Anti-puriſts would be more numerous than it is, were it not that the Vanity or Malice of the Criticks ingage many Writers to ſide with the contrary Faction. There is hardly any Book but what is Criticiſed, and narrowly examined; and if there are any Thoughts or Expreſſions in it that want a certain niceneſs, ſeveral Writers will riſe up againſt it, and expreſs a great zeal for the intereſts of offended Modeſty. They fall earneſtly upon that Topick, and raiſe many Clamours. Nothing can be more eaſie, nor more proper to prejudice the Publick. A Critick who ſtrikes upon that Key is cried up by devout and polite People, and accounted the Protector of Purity: This is the Reaſon that moves him to declare for the Puriſts. He raiſes his Reputation two Ways: he ſets up for a Man who is concerned for good Manners, and who converſes with the polite World. This is only a piece of Craft in an Author: The Intereſt of Morality is no farther concerned in it than is neceſſary to form a fair out-ſide. Many who criticize Books only in Converſation, follow the Footſteps of the printed Criticks.

How many People inveighed againſt the Book (e) de contactibus impudicis, and the hiſtoria Flagellantium, becauſe Doctor Boileau was none of their Cabal in the Faculty of Theology? Had they been well pleaſed with the Author, who is a Man famous for his Probity and Learning, they would have approved his diſcovering the Obſce-the ſenſe of a Paſſage of Polybius, Suetonius, or Athenæus, one might reaſonably prefer his Judgment. But for a Man, who made the ſtudy of Philological Learning his chief Buſineſs, to pretend to rectify the moſt holy Fathers of the Church, upon Matters of Conſcience, is what can't be digeſted. However, we muſt acknowledge his Candor: he did not diſſemble that his Cenſure upon Perſius might be confuted by the Maxims of St. Chryſoſtome; he very ingenuouſly quotes the Words of that Father. (*) Poëta alioquin graviſſimus, & verecundiæ virginalis, ut teſtantur de illo veteres, à moribus ſuis heic diſceſſit. Sic enim alienam impudicitiam caſtigat, ut ſermonis licentia, etſi figuris obſcurati, caſtas aures offendat meritò. Omnino ſatius erat verecundiam ſilentio vindicare. Sed neſcio quomodo pervaſit etiam ſapientiſſimorum hominum mentes illa opinio, obſcœnitatem obſcœnitate aut liberiore ſaltem dictione eſſe caſtigandam. Quod quàm à recta ratione alienum? & tamen ſummis viris ita olim placitum. Quis ſine rubore quæ de ſpeculo Hoſtii ſcripſit Seneca legat, paullo qui ſit αἰδημονέστερος? quid beatus Hieronymus, ille tantus caſtitatis & virginitatis buccinator? nonne & ipſe aliquando in turpia turpiculè invehitur? ſanè quidem: neque id uno loco. Sed cauſſam quæ viros graves compulit, ut ita ſentirent, itaque ſciberent, aperit Johannes Chryſoſtomus, plenum illud omni virtute & ſanctimonia pectus. Ait ille homilia quarta in epiſtolam ad Romanos, eos quorum eſt ſcopus flagitia hominum nequam atque impudicorum reprehendere, cogit neceſſariò fœditatem illorum denudare, & quaſi ob oculos ſpectandam proponere: quia parum aliter profecturi ſint Ἂν μὲν γὰρ, inquit, σεμνῶς εἴπω, οὐ δυνήσομαι καθικέσθαι τοῦ ἀκούοντος, ἐὰν δὲ βουληθῶ καθάψασθαι σφοδρῶς, ἀνάγκην ἔχω ἀπογυμνῶσαι σαφέστερον τὸ λεγόμενον. Solet etiam in eam rem chirurgi exemplum afferre, qui ut tabo ac ſanie manans ulcus ſanet, non veretur ſibi manus inquinare, atque in fœtidiſſimum pus immittere. Ὁ ἰατρὸς, inquit, in priorem ad Corinthios, σηπεδόνα ἐκβαλεῖν βουλόμενος, οὐ σκοπεῖ πῶς καθαρὰς διατηρήσει τὰς χεῖρας, ἀλλ' ὅπως αὐτὴν ἀπαλλάξειε σπουδάζει. Quam ſententiam totidem ferè verbis ſæpe repetit, idemque in eam ad Theſſalonicenſes diſtinguendum monet, utrum dicantur ejuſmodi ſermones, ἐξ οἰκείου πάθους, an ἀπὸ κηδεμονίας: ex loquentis affectu, an curandi voluntate. See the Margin (†).

---

(F) Thoſe who vindicate Suetonius are as eminent as thoſe who find fault with him] Beſides what I have quoted (‡) in another Place, I ſhall ſet down here a fine Paſſage of Henry Glareanus. (||) De vitiis diſſertatio ſive diſputatio duplex eſt. Una, qua ad vitia homines allicimus ſuaſionibus, exhortationibus ac lenociniis: ut qui amare docent noſtra ætate, proh dolor! etiam potare, qui amatoria ludunt, ut juvenum mentes veluti inebrient, quales impudici Poëtæ. Ea diſſertio vitioſa eſt, ac deteſtanda, maximè homini Chriſtiano, plus etiam illis, qui juventuti ut magiſtri præſunt. Altera eſt diſſertio de vitiis, ut ea deteſtemur ac execremur: imò quoties de eis fit mentio, ut ab iis dehortemur, ab iis abſtineamus, & execremur. Hæc diſſertio neutiquam reprehendenda eſt; multi enim ſancti viri ac Doctores quemadmodum de virtutibus ſcripſerunt, ita è regione de vitiis copioſè diſſeruerunt. Ita quæ Cæſarum refert vitia Suetonius, in odium illorum monſtrorum id facit, ut ea ſcilicet fugiamus ac evitemus: imò cogitemus in quanta cæcitate fuerint perditi illi nebulones: & multò magis in quanta ſtupiditate mundus, qui talia portenta dignatus eſt ullo honore, cum nihil illis tetrius ac magis abominabile fuerit.

(a) See among others Joannes Sariſberienſis, Biſhop of Chartres, de nugis Curialium lib. 3. cap. 13. who alledges the Example of St. Paul in his Excuſe.

(b) Or, the 6th. according to the Roman Catholicks.

(c) When they explain the Title de frigidis and other Matrimonial Subjects.

(d) Diſſertat. ſur les oeuvres de Mr. de Saint Evremont pag. 216. 217. Paris 1698.

(e) That there were other Books moſt pernicious, printed at Paris, and written by ſome Doctors, againſt which the Sacred Faculty ſhould thunder out Anathema's, whereas they were ſilent: whereupon he named a Set of Books, among which that of Dr Boileau de contactibus impudicis was one. Afaire de Marie d'Agreda pag. 11.

(*) Caſaub. comment. in Perſ. ſat. 4. pag. m. 344. & ſeq.

(†) Note, That St. Chryſoſtome, and Caſaubon look upon this as a true point of Morality: One will have it to be advantageous to good Manners, and the other to be contrary to them. Wherefore I may ſay, that in a caſe of Conſcience and Morality in Caſaubon's Judgment ought not to be prefer'd; and I may ſay ſo without advancing any thing contrary to what I have ſaid above, that the thing I could be blamed for, would be only a Grammatical Buſineſs.

(‡) In the Article of Suetonius.

(||) Henricus Loritus Glaceanus præfat. in Sueton. apud Goldaſt. Prolegom. in Petronium cap. 2. pag. m. 30.

nities cenſured by him; but becauſe they did not love him they ſided with the Puriſts.

But tho' this Faction be never ſo numerous, either thro' ſuch Motives or more honourable ones, 'tis certain the contrary Party is conſiderable enough to juſtifie thoſe who ſtand for it. The Authority of the ancient Fathers of the Church, who therein imitated the Prophets and Apoſtles, makes their Opinion ſo highly probable, that if any one ſhou'd obſtinately maintain that it can't be follow'd with a ſafe Conſcience, he wou'd not deſerve to be minded.

If the Anti-Puriſts were contented to ſay that their Opinion is better, one might think oneſelf obliged to debate the Matter with them, and to compare together the Reaſons of both Parties, tho' in Truth it ſeems very ſtrange that Chriſtians ſhou'd queſtion whether there is a better Courſe to be taken than that of the ſacred Writers. But after all, one might hear their Objections, and propoſe Difficulties. I have no need of ſuch Diſcuſſions; 'tis enough for me that the Conduct of the Hiſtorians or Criticks, who relate obſcene Things, is not only allowed and authorized by a conſtant Practice, but alſo very good.

For if thoſe Authors cou'd lawfully write what I have writ, I may lawfully do the ſame, and quote them. I deſire no more. Others may examine, if they pleaſe, whether I had done better in taking quite another Method.

The Right I have to quote what I have quoted, is grounded upon theſe two Reaſons: One is, that if every Body is allowed to read Catullus and Martial, &c. an Author may be allowed to quote out of thoſe Poets ſuch Paſſages as he thinks fit: The other is, that if it be lawful for an Hiſtorian to relate a lewd Action of Caligula, an Author may relate an obſcene Thought or Remark of Montagne or Brantome; for ſuch a Remark is not near ſo bad as the Infamies of Caligula. It were a Contradiction or an abſurd Thing to ſuffer that Petronius and Suetonius, and the moſt wanton Poets, ſhou'd be printed and publickly ſold with Notes explaining the moſt brutiſh Obſcenities, and to forbid the Author of a critical Dictionary, attended with a Commentary, to alledge a Paſſage of thoſe Writers for the Confirmation or Illuſtration of a Thing.

AN ANSWER to three Objections.

Here I muſt examine three Objections that are commonly raiſed: 1. 'Tis ſaid that a Phyſician and a Caſuiſt are obliged by the Nature of their Subject, to rake into many Ordures, but that my Work required no ſuch Thing. 2. That thoſe who write in Latin, may take a Liberty which the French Tongue will not bear. 3. That what was allowable in former Ages, ought to be forbidden in ours, becauſe of its prodigious Corruption.

The firſt Objection can only be made by ſuch Readers as know nothing of the Nature of my Book. 'Tis not a Book like thoſe that are entituled Bouquet Hiſtorial, Fleurs d'exemples, Parterre hiſtorique, Lemniſci hiſtoriarum, in which an Author inſerts only what he pleaſes. 'Tis an hiſtorical Dictionary with a Commentary. Lais ought to appear in it as well as Lucretia; and becauſe 'tis a Dictionary that comes out after many others, it ought chiefly to contain what is not to be found in others. The Reader muſt find in it, not only a general Account of ſuch Actions as are beſt known, but alſo a particular one of thoſe that are leaſt known, and a Collection of what is diſpers'd in ſeveral Places. Proofs ought to be alledg'd, examin'd, confirm'd, and cleared. In a word, 'tis a Compilation. But every body ought to know, That a Compiler (a) who relates things, and Comments upon 'em, has all the Privileges of a Phyſician, and of a Lawyer, &c. as occaſion requires; he may uſe their verbal Proceſſes, and the Words belonging to their Profeſſion. If he relates the Divorce of Lotharius and Tetberge, he may publiſh ſome Extracts out of Hincmar, Archbiſhop of Rheims, who writ down the Impurities that were proved during the Trial. This is what I ſaid in my Reflections upon the pretended Judgment of the Publick, in the Year 1697. I repeat it with this other Paſſage: "(b) When I ſhall be taught the ſecret of collecting in a Compilation " whatever is to be found in the Ancients, concerning the Curtezan Lais, without " mentioning any lewd Action, I ſhall plead Guilty. At leaſt it muſt be proved a-
" gainſt me, that a Commentator has not the Privilege of collecting whatever " has been ſaid of Helena; but how can it be proved? Is there any Legiſlator who " told the Compilers, You'll go ſo far, and no farther: You ſhall not quote Athenæus,
" nor ſuch a Scholiaſt, nor ſuch a Philoſopher? Is it not uſual for them to inſert in a
" Chapter whatever their reading affords them?" I could name many Divines, who having deſignedly pitch'd upon a certain Subject, have quoted out of all Authors whatever they thought fit, tho' they were things that defiled the Imagination; I ſhall only name three, (c) Lydius, Saldenus, and Lomeier. They were Dutch Miniſters, the firſt at Dort, the ſecond at the Hague, and the third at Zutphen. They were very much eſteem'd for their Learning and Virtue. Whoever reads the Dialogues of the firſt concerning Nuptial Ceremonies, the Diſſertations of the ſecond (d) de Canis pretio, and the Diſſertation of the third (e) concerning Kiſſes, will find in them horrid Obſcenities, and abominable Quotations.

It will be ſaid, that thoſe Books are written in Latin. This is the ſecond Objection I am to anſwer, and I ſhall eaſily ſhew the weakneſs of it: for an obſcene object is no leſs offenſive to Modeſty, when it offers itſelf to thoſe who underſtand Latin, than when it makes an Impreſſion upon thoſe who underſtand French; and if it were a fault to imprint obſcene Objects in one's own and the Reader's Imagination, thoſe three Miniſters could not be juſtified. They underſtood what they writ, and made it intelligible to their Readers, and conſequently they have defiled,

(a) Theſe words are taken from my Reflexions upon a Piece intituled, Jugement du public &c. pag. 4.

(b) Ibid. pag. 14.

(c) James.

(d) In the Book intituled, Otia Theologica, printed in the Year 1684.

(e) in a Book intituled, Dierum genialium ſive diſſertationum philologicarum decas 1. printed in 1694.

filed, and do ſtill defile the Imagination of thoſe who read their Books. But were it not a very unjuſt Thing to tax them with ſuch a Fault? Thoſe who write in French ought not therefore to be taxed with it, for they do no more than underſtand what they write, and make it intelligible to their Readers.

I know two Differences will be alledged: One is, that thoſe who underſtand Latin, are not ſo many as thoſe who underſtand French: The other is, that thoſe who underſtand Latin are better provided than others, againſt the malignant Influence of obſcene Objects. I anſwer in the firſt place, That Latin is grown ſo common all over Europe, that the firſt Difference wou'd not be ſufficient to juſtifie thoſe who relate or quote obſcene Things in that Language; the Miſchief wou'd be very great. I ſay in the ſecond Place, that 'tis only by degrees that Study corroborates a Man againſt Objects that ſully the Imagination; and therefore Latin Obſcenities wou'd have a dangerous Effect upon Scholars. We hardly find, generally ſpeaking, that they are more chaſte and leſs debauch'd than other Young-Men. Laſtly, I ſay that moſt of my Readers are Men of Letters; for thoſe who have no Learning, little mind a Book intermixed with Greek and Latin Paſſages as mine is. However, if they are no Scholars, they can't underſtand the chief Obſcenities, ſince they are in Latin. To conclude, if there is any Solidity in the Differences objected to me, I may make Advantage of it.

I proceed to the third Objection, which runs upon the great Corruption of our Age. It is ſaid, that we have loſt both the Honeſty of Manners, and that of Words. The Words that were formerly modeſt, are no longer ſo; there's a Neceſſity to uſe others, otherwiſe we ſhou'd loſe the little Virtue that remains. I ſhan't examine whether there is any Reaſon to believe that Men are now more corrupt than they were in former Times. The (a) ſame Complaints have been made at all Times, and that very Thing ought to make us doubt of the Truth of it. I can hardly believe that the Corruption of our Age is equal to that of the Reign of Charles IX and Henry III. But ſuppoſing the Thing in queſtion, I ſhall draw a quite contrary Concluſion from it; for 'tis never ſo neceſſary to repreſent in a lively manner (G) the Turpitude of Vice, than when it prevails moſt; and 'tis a wrong Way of ſtemming the Current of Lewdneſs, to cry it down with ſoft Words, and to ſcruple to give an odious Name to a Proſtitute. Beſides, if there is ſo great a Corruption, What Benefit has the World got by that Chaſtity of Words introduced into the French Tongue within theſe ſixty Years, according to M. Chevreau's Calculation? Is it not a plain Sign that the Proſcription of pretended obſcene Idea's is an inſignificant Remedy? Who told you they ought to be expunged, for fear of entirely deſtroying Modeſty? Have you conſulted the Women for whoſe ſake you chiefly abſtain from thoſe Words? Have they confeſs'd to you, that their Honour is very much endangered by them? Wou'd they not rather ſay, that 'tis a Satyr upon them, to believe they are not Proof againſt an Idea and a Word? Wou'd they not tell you, that if they are for Words, that don't expreſs Impurity ſo fully, 'tis to give a more exact Notion of their Virtue, becauſe they are more ſenſible of Modeſty than Women were formerly? and therefore they don't look upon Obſcenities as a dangerous Thing; Obſcenities wou'd rather give a new Strength to their Modeſty. The only Reaſon why they are offended with them is, becauſe they think there is ſome Unpoliteneſs and Uncivility in certain Words. Thoſe who pretend that conſidering the prodigious Corruption of our Age, every Expreſſion which they call obſcene, ought to be avoided, are like a Traveller, who to keep his dirty Cloak from ſoiling, ſhou'd take Care notto put it in a ſmoaking Room. If the Depravation is ſo great, that the reading of an obſcene hiſtorical Fact might move young People to commit Adultery, you may be ſure they are ſo many Perſons infected with the Plague, whom you are afraid of making worſe, by placing them near a Man who has got the Itch. A polite Style, and nice Expreſſions will not cure ſuch People, and ſtop 'em upon the Brink of a Precipice.

(a) See a fine Paſſage relating to this in the 3d Volum of Vigneul Marville's Melanges.

(G) It is never ſo neceſſary to repreſent in a lively manner the Turpitude of Vice, than when it prevails moſt.] See in the Article of Peter Damian what moved him to write the Gomorrhæus, and conſider how the Dominicans reſolved to preach againſt the unnatural Sin, when they came to know that it was grown very common. Preaching being allotted to them, they deliberated whether they ſhou'd thunder out againſt that Sin, or ſay nothing of it; and they concluded that there was a Neceſſity to thunder out againſt it, ſince it was grown ſo crying. (*) Fratres Ordinis Prædicatorum, qui eum apud Chriſtianos locum invaſerunt, quem olim apud Gentiles obtinuerant Poëtæ & Satyrici, in tracta. de Turcis: Quæſitum extitit de gravi infectione populi Chriſtiani, quoad prædicta vitia (Sodomitica) an videlicet tam gravis infectio ex negligentia officii prædicationis contingerent, dum ipſi prædicatores gravitatem hujus vitii fidelibus non proponerent? Quæſitumque ulteriùs extitit, an propter ſimplices & innocentes expediret Prædicatoribus ſub ſilentio pertranſire de hujuſmodi vitiis diſſerendo? Reſponſum fuit, quòd quia officium prædicationis eſt præcipuum in Eccleſia ad extirpationem vitiorum & plantationem virtutum, ſi gravitas hujus vitii fidelibus ardenter proponeretur, ut quia videlicet pro vindicta clamat ad cœlum, &c. Ad ſecundum quæſitum reſponſum fuit, quòd omnino ſub ſilentio pertranſire non expediret, etiam propter quoſcunque innocentes, multiplici ratione. Primò, quia videmus quòd tales innocentes etiam ex diabolica ſuggeſtione continuè ſeducuntur abſque auditione verbi Dei, & declaratione illorum vitiorum. Unde utriſque tam reis quàm innocentibus expedit talis declaratio verbi Dei. Secundò ad hoc nos admonet Scriptura, prout eſt illud; Si non annunciaveris iniquo iniquitatem ejus, ſanguinem ejus de manu tua requiram. Et iterum; Clama, ne ceſſes: annuncia populo meo ſcelera eorum. Ratione etiam concludebatur. Nam Apoſtolus Paulus expreſſiſſimè loquitur ad Roman. 1. de hujuſmodi vitiis, & ſicut cuncta alia ſcripta ipſius neceſſariò prædicantur, ita & præſens hæc materia, cùm non ſit data diſtinctio inter ſuas doctrinas, quare videlicet una magis debeat eſſe prædicabilis quàm altera. Ad hoc eſt Gregorius in Moralibus; Sicut incauta locutio in errorem pertrahit, ita indiſcretum ſilentium in errore relinquit.

(*) Goldaſt. in prolegom. Petronii cap. 2. pag. m. 32, 33.

Certainly

Certainly this is the Sophiſm call'd, à non cauſa pro cauſa. The Fate of Chaſtity does not depend upon that: you don't go to the Cauſe of the Evil; it requires a quite different Remedy. Young People have their Minds full of obſcene Thoughts, and go thro' a Courſe of filthy Things, at leaſt in Words, before they read Suetonius. Ill Converſations unavoidable to every Lad, who is not kept at Sight, are a thouſand times more dangerous than Hiſtories of Debauchery. A learned Man (a) ſays, that the French Tranſlation of Plutarch by Amyot, is dangerous to Morality, becauſe Things are deſcribed in it with too great Freedom and Plainneſs, and becauſe there are ſome Words in it that have now an immodeſt Signification. He'll give me leave to be of another Opinion. The Deſcriptions and Phraſes of Amyot's Tranſlation have nothing in them that comes up to thoſe that are daily heard in the Commerce of the World. To which I add, that if this Verſion of Plutarch was dangerous to Morality, any other Verſion of Plutarch wou'd be ſo too, unleſs the Tranſlator took Care to leave out all the Paſſages wherein Things are deſcribed with too great Freedom and Plainneſs.

There is no Medium: either no lewd Action ought to be mention'd in a Book, or our Criticks muſt own it will always be dangerous, tho' written never ſo nicely. A Tranſlation will be more polite than the other; but if they are faithful, all the obſcene Objects that are in the Original will appear in them.

It may be granted to M. Chevreau, that Faire des enfans is a groſs Expreſſion, and that one ſhou'd ſay Avoir des enfans; but if any one ſhou'd further ſay that the firſt Expreſſion is very prejudicial to good Manners, and that the ſecond is very beneficial to them, be accounted a fooliſh Man.

Upon a due Examination of Things, it will appear that the Word Paillard ought to be rejected only for the ſame Reaſon that we reject the Words Contaminer, Vilipender, Vituperer, and a great many other old Words: That is to ſay, it has no other Fault but being obſolete. Thoſe who have nice Ears wou'd be diſpleas'd to hear the Words I have juſt now mention'd. For the ſame Reaſon they are offended with the Words Paillard and Paillardiſe; for if the Thing ſignified by them was the Cauſe of their Diſguſt, they cou'd not endure the Word Impudique, whoſe Idea is no leſs ſignificant than that of Paillard.

I ſhall make two other Obſervations: The firſt is, that our Puriſts generally approve on one hand what they condemn on the other. Ask a Roman Catholick, who is an Enemy to the Quietiſts, whether an Hiſtorian ought not to avoid touching upon Things that ſully the Imagination? he'll anſwer you, 'tis his Duty. Tell him ſome Days after, that a Relation of Quietiſm is come out, containing a particular Account of the abominable Impurity of Molino's Followers; give him to underſtand that you have been offended with the reading of that Book, and that ſuch Things are inconſiſtent with Modeſty; he'll anſwer you, that 'tis neceſſary to diſcover the Abomination of thoſe Hypocrites, in order to undeceive many People who are inclined to Quietiſm, and that the Author of that Relation is to be commended for expoſing to the publick View the infamous Practices of that Sect. Many other People will agree with you, that one can't have too great a Regard for modeſt Ears, and will exclaim with great Zeal againſt Suetonius and Lampridius; but if you ask 'em ſome Days after, Whether one ought to excuſe the Hiſtorians who have related ſo many abominable Things concerning the Albigenſes, Fratricelli, Adamites, Picards, Lollards, and Turlupins, their Anſwer will be that their Character of Hiſtorians and zealous Catholicks engaged them to acquaint the World with the Obſcenities of thoſe Hereticks, the Forerunners of the Lutherans.

The Engliſh Papiſts, who fled into France or Spain, did not offend the chaſte Ears of their Friends, when they publiſh'd ſeveral Satyrs againſt Queen Elizabeth, wherein they repreſented her as a Monſter of Lewdneſs. The Leaguers did not blame the Libels, which contain'd impudent Deſcriptions of the Lewdneſs of the Court of Henry III.

The ſame Inequality is obſerved among the Proteſtants. They did not complain that thoſe Libels againſt Henry III their Perſecutor, were offenſive to chaſte Ears. Buchanan, who publiſh'd a Book concerning the Lewdneſs of Mary Queen of Scotland, is a Man of bleſſed Memory among the Presbyterians; and yet that Book horribly defiled the Imagination. Nicolas de Clemangis, Pelagius Alvarez, Baptiſta Mantuanus, and many others, who made a very plain and obſcene Deſcription of the Lewdneſs of the Court of Rome, are placed by the Proteſtants among the Witneſſes of Truth. They quote 'em to this very Day upon all Occaſions, and long Paſſages out of thoſe Authors are to be found in moſt controverſial Books. You'll find many of 'em in a (b) French Book of the famous du Pleſſis Mornai. Not long ſince three (c) Miniſters, two of which are Swiſs, and the third a French-man, have reviv'd thoſe Quotations. Henry Stephens, who tells ſo many obſcene Stories in his Apology for Herodotus, was not blamed for it: That Book was thought very proper to ridicule the Church of Rome, and was approved upon that Account; there are many Editions of it, and I hear it has been lately reprinted at the Hague. Can there be a greater Collection of filthy Jeſts, Querks, and mean and obſcene Words, than what is to be found in ſome Books of Sainte Aldegonde, who nevertheleſs was very much eſteem'd and commended? The Book a German gave notice of in the Nova literaria maris Balthici in the Year 1699, which is to be intituled, Sacra Pontificiorum Priapeia, ſeu obſcænæ Papiſtarum in auricularibus confeſſionibus quæſtiones, quibus S. Confeſſionarii innocentes puellas fœminaſque ad laſci- té.

(a) Dacier Preface to his Tranſlation of ſome Lives of Plutarch.

(b) Intituled Le Myſtere

(c) Mr. Heidegger in hiſtoria Papatus, in the Year 1684. & in Magna Babylone, in the Year 1687. Mr. Zuinger in Tractatu de feſto corporis Chriſti, in the Year 1685. and Mr. Jurieu in his Prejugez legitimes contre le Papiſme in the Year 1685.

viam ſollicitant, will doubtleſs be very well approved; and yet it will be very offenſive to chaſte Ears, ſince it will contain a Collection of the obſcene Queſtions of Confeſſors. Which puts me in Mind of the illuſtrious Peter du Moulin, who objected to the Roman Catholicks the Obſcenities that are to be found in their Books concerning auricular Confeſſion. He took notice (a) of ſome that are horrid, and no leſs abominable than the Lewdneſs wherewith Procopius accuſes the Empreſs Theodora. Many Proteſtant Controverſiſts (b) have publiſh'd the Obſcenities that are to be found in the Books of Confeſſors.

But to ſpeak of a thing of a later Date, I ſay that the Book intituled Les avantures de la Madona & de François d'Aſſiſe, publiſh'd (c) in the Year 1701, is indeed written in very modeſt Words; but the Idea's which the (d) Author excites in the Mind of the Reader, are ſo horrid and monſtrous, that none but Lucian and ſuch like Men, can bear their Enormity. The Proteſtants are not offended at it; on the contrary, they believe that the Author deſigning to make every Body ſenſible of the Ridiculouſneſs of Popery without ingaging in any Controverſie, has done a Service to the good Cauſe. Some Complaints have been made (e) of what he ſays in Favour of Neſtorius; but he has not been blamed for any Thing elſe. The Biſhop of Meaux being obliged to mention (f) a Thing of the ſame Nature, in order to ſhew the Extravagance of a fanatical Woman, thought he had been defiled by it, and for a Remedy had Recourſe to this Prayer: "(g) Lord, if I durſt, I wou'd beg of you one of your Seraphims, with "a hot burning Coal to purifie my Lips defiled with this Narrative, tho' neceſſary". Take notice of this laſt Word: it makes much againſt thoſe who ſay that the Imagination of the Reader ought to be reverenced even at the Expence of Truth. That Prelate, who is otherwiſe ſo careful to avoid Obſcenities, that he dares not uſe (h) the Word Paillarde (Whore) without making an Excuſe for it, did not think that the obſcene and horrid Extravagances of Madam Guyon ought to be ſuppreſs'd.

I don't mean, that generally ſpeaking, all the Proteſtants who have taken the way I have mention'd, deſign to bring Hiſtorians, Compilers, and Commentators under the Yoke of the Puriſts. I only believe that many of 'em pretend to do it; but ſince they approve afterwards what they had condemn'd, their Taſte and their Teſtimony can do me no Prejudice, and I may take Advantage of the Opinion of all the reſt who are not inconſiſtent with themſelves.

It cannot be ſaid that for the Good of the Church, an Author may be allowed to write Things that ſully the Imagination, and that in this Caſe he is to be commended for doing it. Such an Aſſertion can't be admitted; for if the publiſhing of Obſcenities was an ill Thing in it ſelf, it cou'd not be uſed for the Benefit of a good Cauſe, without tranſgreſſing againſt a Command of God, importing that (i) we muſt not do Evil, that Good may come of it.

I proceed to the ſecond Obſervation. Have I not acted againſt this fine Precept of Iſocrates, (k) Believe that whatever cannot be honeſtly done, cannot be honeſtly ſpoken? And ought not this Precept to be a Law to all Chriſtians, ſince St. Paul (l) wou'd not have any thing that is filthy to be named among them? I anſwer, that this excellent Axiom concerns (H) only the ill Cuſtom of young People and married Men, who ſpeak on all Occaſions of their lewd Practices and impudently Diſcourſe of every thing relating to that ſort of Pleaſures. 'Tis at leaſt certain that this Apoſtle never meant that Men ſhou'd forbear talking ſeriouſly, virtuouſly and hiſtorically of a lewd Action. He did not deprive Parents of the Liberty of examining their Children about the hiſtorical Facts contain'd in the Bible, and making 'em repeat that Jacob's Daughter was raviſh'd, that a Son of David raviſh'd his own Siſter, &c. Nothing can be more ſhameful than this Action of David's Son; and yet there's no harm in repeating, preaching, and printing it? Cou'd St. Paul forbid to mention it? Wou'd he have prohibited the reading of the Bible? Was he not willing that his Letters ſhou'd be read, and that the very Children ſhou'd know what he writ to the Romans concerning the abominable Life of the Gentiles? A Man muſt be mad to think that the Precept of Iſocrates ſignifies that a Scholar ſhou'd never give an Account to his Tutor or Father of ſuch Paſſages of the Iliad as concern the Adulteries of the Gods.

If one had a Mind to carry the Diſpute as far as it can go, it might be ſaid that Robbing, Betraying, Lying, and Killing are diſhoneſt Things, and that there is no Diſhoneſty in mentioning thoſe Crimes; but becauſe 'tis evident that the Precept of Iſocrates concerns only Sins contrary to Chaſtity, ſuch an Objection wou'd be a meer Cavil. The Cynicks and the Stoicks made uſe of it to juſtifie their Doctrine that there is no Obſcenity in any Word: Cicero (m) confutes 'em only by ſuppoſing that there is a natural Shame.

(H) That excellent Axiom condemns only the ill Cuſtom.] Here follows the Thought of a Commentator upon thoſe Words of Iſocrates. "Prohibetur hic omnis αἰσχρολογία καὶ βλασφημία καὶ αἰσχρουργία, quibus nihil eſt indocto vulgo jucundius aut uſitatius, cum nihil ſit turpius & homine indignius .... Huc accerſatur Divi Pauli præceptum: πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία ἐν ὑμῖν μηδ᾽ ὀνομαζέσθω. Chriſtus etiam ματαίους λόγους ἀποδοῦναι ἐπεῖπεν. Sed nos parum curamus, proh dolor! reddendam Deo rationem de verbis. Nec mirum, cum tam flagitioſa & conſcelerata vitæ ſit & morum licentia. Væ væ nobis, niſi mature reſipuerimus.

'Tis

(g) Id. ib.

(h) This holy Apoſtle took care not to call the Proſtitute he ſpeaks of, an Adultreſs, μοιχαλίδα, μοιχαλίδα, but a publick Woman, and if I may be allowed to uſe but once theſe odious Names, a Whore, a Proſtitute, πόρνην. Id. Preface to the Revelation pag. 27. of the Edition printed at the Hague.

(i) Rom. 3. 8.

(k) Ἃ ποιεῖν αἰσχρὸν, ταῦτα νόμιζε μηδὲ λέγειν εἶναι καλόν. Quæ facta ſunt turpia, ne dictu quidem decora eſſe puto. Iſocrates ad Demonicum p. m. 6.

(l) Eph. 5. 4.

(m) Nec vero audiendi ſunt Cynici, aut ſi qui fuerunt Stoici pæne Cynici, qui reprehendunt & irrident, quod ea quæ re turpia non ſint, nominibus ac verbis flagitioſa ducamus: illa autem quæ turpia ſunt, nous appellemus ſuis. Latrocinari, fraudare, adulterare, re turpe eſt; ſed dicitur non obſcœne: Liberis dare operam ſtum eſt, nomine obſcœnum: pluraque in eam ſententiam ab eiſdem contra verecundiam diſputantur. Nos autem m ſequamur, & omne quod abhorret oculorum auriumque approbatione, fugiamus. Cicero de officiis lib. 1. cap. 35.

'Tis time to conclude this long Diſſertation; 'Tis a Subject more difficult to treat than one can think. I hope my Juſtification will be fully approved, not by thoſe who are too preſumptuous to be able to ſee that they are undeceived, but by thoſe who have been too eaſily impoſed upon by others, or by ſuperficial Reaſons. If they were excuſable for being dazzled with ſpecious Appearances, before I publiſh'd theſe four Explanations, they can be no longer ſo if they perſiſt in their Illuſion. They ſhou'd have followed the Command of our Saviour, (a) Judge not according to Appearance, but judge a righteous Judgment. They have yielded to the firſt Impreſſions of the Objects, without expecting to hear the Reaſons on both ſides; which is always neceſſary, eſpecially when the Queſtion is to judge of a Writer who does not follow the moſt common Way. One ſhou'd immediately ſuſpect that he has ſome Reaſons for it, and that he wou'd not make ſuch a Step, if upon a long Examination of his Subject, he had not conſidered the ſeveral Parts of it more carefully than thoſe who only read his Work. This well grounded Suſpicion ſhou'd make People very cautious in giving their Judgment: but the Thing can't be help'd; all that can be hop'd is, that their ſecond Thoughts will be better than the firſt.

(a) John 7. 24.

I muſt acquaint the Reader, that I have juſtified, in ſeveral Places of this Dictionary, ſuch Things as might have offended ſome Readers.

17 JY 63

THE TABLE.

The Reader may obſerve, as he looks into this Table, that when the Figures ſtand alone, the Text is referr'd to; but when follow'd by the Letters a or b, that denotes the firſt or ſecond Column of the Remarks; and if the Letter n be added, it denotes ſome Marginal Note to the ſame Column.

And for the eaſier finding out of the Matters in the Table, the Figures are ſometimes follow'd by the Capital Letter referring from the Text to the Columes, with the Directions ad in. ad med. ad fin. which immediately diſcover the Matter ſought for.

That the Reader may alſo without Trouble know in what Volume he is to look, we take notice in this Place, that the Second Volume begins at Page 801. with the Letter C. The Third Volume at Page 1551. with the Letter H. And the Fourth Volume at Page 2439. with the Letter P.

We have mark'd this on the ſecond Page of every Leaf in the Index, that the Reader may not be oblig'd to turn back for Directions.

A B.

Abbey (of St. Denis). The Ground of the Court's Power over its Monks, 23. a. An Abbey given for a Song, 333. n.

Abbreviators, ought to have a good Taſte, 57. a. See Abridgments.

Abderame, compar'd to Alexander and Scipio in point of Continence, 11. b. How he diſpoſed of the Daughter of Eudes Duke of Aquitain, 2249. b.

Abderites: What their Diſtemper was, 15. b. What Cicero underſtands by an Abderite, 1109. b. Whether they wrote a Letter to Hippocrates, to deſire him to come and ſee Democritus. 1081. a.

Abelard (Peter): his turn of Wit and his Vanity, 20. b. Had Thoughts of flying into Turky to avoid the Perſecutions of Orthodox Inquiſitors, 158. b. The Catalogue of his Manuſcripts, 195. b. They did not anſwer the general Opinion of the Author's Subtilty, 196. a. A Liſt of ſome particular Opinions, whether truly or falſly aſcribed to him, 584. b. & ſeq. His Deſcription of the Terrors he was under upon the Calling of any Council or Convocation of the Clergy, 159. a. His Works when publiſh'd fell much ſhort of the Reputation he had in his Life-time, 196. a. His Poſition that we ought to believe nothing that may not be prov'd by natural Reaſon condemn'd as Heretical by Innocent II. and the whole Gallican Church, 2139. b. A Fore-runner of the Socinians in the Point about Chriſt's dying, 584. b. Condemn'd by Proteſtants more than by many Catholicks, 586. a. The great Intereſt he had in the Court of Rome, by means of his own Scholars in the higheſt Promotions there, 1333. b. The Lamentation of the Women of Paris, on occaſion of his loſing his Manly Parts, 1336. b. The firſt who brought School-Divinity in vogue, 1600. His intemperate careſſing of Heloiſia deſcrib'd, 1601. a.

A C.

Abiram; whoſe Fate was the pretended Alluſion among the Pagans to the Fate of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, 215. a.

Ablancourt (Fremont d') a Reflexion on one of his Thoughts, That Princes ought to underſtand Latin. 2476. b.

Abrabanel (Rabbi) liv'd on a foot of Civility with the Chriſtians, but wrote the bittereſt in the World againſt 'em, 34. a. His Interpretations on the Books of the Old Teſtament highly eſteem'd, 33. His idle Conceit about the Nature of the Serpent's Temptation, 1251. a. His impious Thought upon the motive of the Prohibition againſt touching one of the Fruits of the Garden of Eden, 1257. b.

Abraham; born and bred an Idolater, and made Idols, and ſold them, according to a Jewiſh Tradition, 34. a. The firſt who publickly maintain'd the Unity of God, 34. b. The firſt Refugee baniſh'd his Country on the ſcore of Religion, Ibid. Fear'd Death more than conjugal Diſhonour, 2675. b. His Diſſimulation not eaſily accounted for, 2676. b.

Abram (Pere) his Notes on the Paraphraſe of Nonnus, and his Commentaries on Cicero very learn'd, 36. b. Scarce known in foreign Countries to the moſt Learn'd, not even to Dr. Cave, 37. a.

Abridgments. Qualities requiſite to make a good Abridgment, 400. b. It requires a great Diſcernment, 407. b.

Vol. II. 881.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 2439.

407. b. Advice to thoſe who undertake to Abridge, 1115. b. Abridgments would be found very faulty if compar'd with the Originals, 1130. b.

Abumuſlimus, General of the firſt Caliphs of the Race of Abbaſſ. His Metempſychoſis very different from that of Pythagoras, 41. a. The Agreement between his Doctrine and that of Spinoza, Ibid.

Abyſſins; why their Emperors have born the Name of Preſter John, 32. a.

Academicks; did not teach an Indolence to Inſenſibility, 1058. a.

Academy; the Founder of the middle, 317. a. The Founder of the third Academy did not differ from the ſecond, 857. a.

Acarnania; what point of Merit they pleaded to the Romans, when they ſollicited their Aſſiſtance againſt their Neighbours, 42.

Acatalepſis (The) or Incomprehenſibility of Things, by which of the Philoſophers firſt taught expreſly and formally, 318. b. Vide Incomprehenſibility.

Accidents; Peter D'Ailly explain'd 'em as Deſcartes does, 132. a.

Acciſſire; the meaning of this Term, 50. a.

Accius (Junius) a Latin Dramatick Poet. His Anſwer why he who ſucceeded ſo well on the Stage, could not ſpeak in the Courts, 48. b. A Comedian puniſh'd for naming him on the Stage, tho' he pleaded that 'twas permitted to name one who had given Pieces of his own to be repreſented, Ibid.

Acco; a word to frighten Children among the Greeks, its Original and Occaſion, 50.

Accurſius (Mariangelus) why he calls Salluſt Countryman, 52. a. Corrected 700 Paſſages in Claudian a Horſeback, 52. b. Added five new Books in his Edition of Ammianus Marcellinus, Ibid. The Oath he took to clear himſelf from Plagiariſm, 53. b.

Accurſius, a Florentin Civilian; Of Opinion that Theology was needleſs, and the Roman Laws ſufficient for underſtanding Divine Matters, 51. Author of the Maxim of Ignorance among the Lawyers, Græcum eſt non poteſt legi, 51. a.

Accuſations; a way to judge of the Truth or Falſhood of them, 614. a. b. Never receiv'd againſt Perſons abſent in the Service of the Republick of Rome, 873. a. Extraordinary Articles of Accuſation in an open Court, 305. a. In what Caſes the Accuſed ought to be clear'd, 2050. b.

Accuſers, how odious a Character, 884. a. Have in all Ages taken Advantage of what is ſaid upon the common News for a Foundation of their Accuſations, 1071. a. Hated even where they do but their Duty, 883. b.

Achilles; nurs'd with the Marrow of Lions, 57. a. Repreſented by the Poets not ſo much under the Idea of Bravery as that of invincible Courage, 58. b. His Temple ſwept by Birds, 65. b. The Splendor of his Apparition ſtrikes Homer blind, 66. a.

Acidalius; the ground of aſcribing to him the Treatiſe, intitled, Women not rational Animals, 68. b. The honeſt Deſign of this Treatiſe, 1392.

Acontius, his Conjecture on the Clearſightedneſs of the xvith Century, 70. a. The Character of his Book, de Stratagematis Satanæ, Inſcrib'd to Queen Elizabeth, 70. b. The Character of his Book de Methodo, 71. a. His Project of a general Comprehenſion and Toleration, 72. a.

Acoſta, why he changed the Chriſtian for the Jewiſh Religion, 72. His Argument againſt the Truth of the Jewiſh Religion, 74. b. The Reaſons on which he might have renounced Natural Religion, 75. a.

Actors, The Privilege of thoſe who are chief Actors on the great Stage of the World, 107. b.

Actuarius, a Dignity belonging to the Phyſicians in the Court of Conſtantinople, 57. a.

Adam, how long he continued in a State of Innocence, 17. a. his long Mourning for Abel, and Abſtinence from Eve's Embraces, according to the Jewiſh Fables, ibid. His great Knowledge, 79. a. His prodigious Stature, according to the Talmudiſts, 81. a. His Life written by Loredano, a Venetian Nobleman, a moſt ſcandalous and blaſphemous Piece, 1256. b. The Conceit of a Rabbi who mentions Adam's Tutor, 2500. b.

Adam (Pere) his diſtinction between inſpired Writings and the Expreſſions of thoſe who are inſpired, 83. b. His reading Lectures of Anatomy to a Nun on the Parts of Generation cenſured, 86. a.

Adamites, variouſly calumniated, 87. b. Proteſtants and Catholicks falſly Reproach each other with having Adamites among 'em, 88. b.

Adonis, alluded to by the Prophet Ezekiel under the Name of Tammuz, 93. a. The Poem of Cavalier Marini with this Title, highly priz'd by the Italians, 302. a.

Adolphus (Guſtavus.) An Order publiſhed in Rome againſt the keeping any Print, or Poem, or Medal of him, 1654. a.

Adoption; the Ceremony uſed in Adoptions among the Barbarians, 1648. b.

Adriani (John Baptiſta;) a high Character of his Hiſto. 77, 94. Not conſidered by the Italians according to his Merit, ibid.

Adrianople; ſo called by the Emperor Hadrian by advice of the Oracle, to be cured of ſome Returns of Madneſs, 159. a.

Adultery; its odd kind of Puniſhment among ſome of the Ancients, 152. a. Its very old and ignominious Puniſhment among the ancient Romans, 456. b. The ſeventh Commandment againſt Adultery ſtrangely Expounded away, 801. a. b. Damages awarded for Adultery by Caius Marius, 1277. Adultery puniſhed more ſeverely than Murther in Heathen Countries 2675. b. The Reaſon of this, ibid.

Ædeſius, a Chriſtian Zealot and Martyr, gives Hierocles, Governor of Ægypt, a box on the Ear in open Court, 1658. b.

Æſchylus; how ſav'd from being ſton'd to Death for an Impiety, 1227. a.

Affranchiſing; when the Affranchiſing of the Peaſantry began in France, and upon what Occaſion, 904. b.

Agatho; his Maxim that 'tis likely many things ſhould happen againſt all likelihood, 100. a.

Agathocles; his good and ill Qualities, 2885. a. Timæus ought not to have medled with his Hiſtory, 2887. b.

Age; wherein conſiſt the Pleaſures of old Age, 2737. b.

Ageſilaus would not ſuffer his Queen or Daughter to be better Dreſs'd than the other Women of Sparta, 103. a. A fine Saying of his, ibid. His Religion as a private Man, 103. b. His Religion as a King, ibid.

Agis, the firſt King of Lacædemon who died by the Hands of his own People, 213. b.

Agnes, Widow to Henry II. her ſingular Caſe of Conſcience propoſed to Peter Damianus the great Caſuiſt, 1341. a.

Agnus Caſtus, the Original and Reaſon of this Name, 2811. a.

Agreda (Mary d') Extract of a Pamphlet concerning the Condemnation of her Book, 109. b. 110. a.

Agricola (George) his Verſes upon Indulgences, 111. a. b. The Reaſons of his not turning Proteſtant, ibid. b. The Lutherans refuſe his Body burial, ibid.

Agricola (John) Founder of the Antinomian Sect, 112. He would have reſtor'd the uſe of holy Oil, ibid. One of the three who drew up the Interim or Project of Reunion of Proteſtants and Papiſts, 113. a.

Agricola (Rodolphus) his Reaſons for not Marrying, 114. b. His Prognoſtick of Eraſmus's Greatneſs, ibid.

Agricola (Cornelius) charges the Sorbon with ſelling their Opinion in favour of Henry VIII's Divorce, 119. b. Is ſuppoſed to be gain'd over afterwards by Cranmer, ibid. Said to have led the Devil about in a String, and in the ſhape of a black Dog, 120. a. What kind of Reformation he would be at, 123. b. His occult Philoſophy explain'd a kind of Quietiſm, 124. A remarkable Paſſage left out of his Works in the Edition of Lyons, ibid.

Agrigentum; the wonderful Quality of the Salt found there, 1404. b. An extraordinary Effect of the Zeal of its Inhabitants for the Statue of Hercules, 1405. a.

Agrippa, his quarrelling with the Trojans for not ſending Guides over the Scamander with his Wife Julia, no Argument that he loved Julia, 2684. b.

Agropoli (Marquis d') Grandee of Spain, put to trouble by the Inquiſition for Writing againſt ſome fabulous Traditions which make for the Glory of Spain, 284. a. Looked on as a Writer who betray'd the Honour of his Country, ibid.

Aguirre (Cardinal) wrote againſt the Deciſions of the Clergy of France in 1682, 125. b. Raiſed from a Spaniſh Monk to the Cardinalſhip, for his Zeal for the Court of Rome, ibid.

Ajax (Telamonius) his Anſwer to his Father, who adviſed him to Pray before he went to Battel, 127. b. Invoked by the Greeks before the Battel of Salamis, 128. The Arms of Achilles wafted to his Tomb by the Storm which Shipwreck'd Ulyſſes, ibid. Alexander would ſee and honour the Sepulchre of Ajax, 128. How the Crime which he committed againſt Caſſandra was expiated by the Locrians, 854. b.

Ailly (Cardinal d') his Character by Launoi, 103. a. Bewitched to Aſtrology, 131. b. Condemns ſeveral Tenets of the Church of Rome, ibid. One of the Forerunners of Deſcartes, 132. a.

Air; The Air the Principle of all Things, according to ſome Philoſophers, 1827.

Akiba (Rabbi) the Motive of his Studies, 138. The Reaſons of his altering the Hebrew Text of the Bible, ibid. a.

He's

He's the Compiler of the Jewiſh Traditions, ibid. b. His myſterious Doctrines of the Cloſeſtool, 139. a.

Alabaſter (William) Chaplain to the Earl of Eſſex in Queen Elizabeth's Days, upon his Expedition to Cales, his fondneſs of the Catholick way, 139. The ſtrange Effect of the laſt word of his Latin Tragedy Roxana on a Lady preſent at the acting of it, ibid. His whimſical manner of ſolving the Difficulty about our Saviour's being three Days and three Nights in the Bowels of the Earth, ibid. a.

Alains, leſs Barbarous than the Huns, 141. Their Worſhip, ibid. Conjugal Duty perform'd by them in Waggons, ibid.

Alamandus (Cardinal of St. Cecilia) harangues at the Council of Baſil againſt the Pope's Superiority over Councils, 142.

Alanſon (Duke of) the true Ground of the Hatred betwixt him and his Brother Henry III. 1624. b.

Albertus (Magnus) a Plea for his Writing on obſcene Subjects, though a Biſhop, 147. b. Said to have clear'd the Debts of his Biſhoprick of Ratiſbon by means of the Philoſophers Stone, ibid. His Body free from Corruption for ſeveral hundred Years, 146. b. The Invention of Cannon aſcribed to him, 147. His Sagacity in diſcovering that his Maid had loſt her Maidenhead by the Tone of her Voice, 1709. c.

Albigenſes; it is not true that they were Manicheans, 1153. c.

Alcæus, values himſelf more on being a Soldier than a Poet, 33. h.

Alciatus (Andrew) the firſt who corrected the barbarous Latin of the Civilians, 145. His Apology for his unconſtant unſettled Temper, 155. b. His mercenary Spirit ibid.

Alciatus (Terence) a Jeſuit, pitch'd on by Urban VIII. to anſwer Father Paul, 158. The reaſon of his Dilatorineſs in that performance, 159. a.

Alcibiades, the greateſt Lover of Pleaſure in the World, and the readieſt to quit them when his Affairs required it, 1630. a.

Alcinoi Menſa, & Alcinoi Apologus, the ground of theſe two Proverbs, 160. a.

Alcmena, why ſhe bore three Moons over her Forehead, 221. f. The opening her Tomb ſuppos'd to be the cauſe of a Calamity in Haliartus, parallel to the Accounts of Calamities in ſeveral Legends upon diſturbing the Bodies of the Saints, 165. b.

Alcyonius (Peter) ſuſpected of having deſtroy'd the only Manuſcript extant of Cicero de Gloria, to embeliſh his own Treatiſe de Exilio. 1. Loth to own that the Book de Mundo, aſcribed to Ariſtotle, and which he Tranſlated in Latin from the Greek, is a ſpurious Piece.

Alcoran, the Number of the Words which it contains, and how many of 'em are true, and how many falſe, 2110. a. The reaſons why the Spaniſh Inquiſition condemn'd Bibliander's Tranſlation of it, 619. a. Its Text corrected by Bibliander, 619. a. Of twelve thouſand Words which are in it, there are only three thouſand true, by Mahomet's own Confeſſion, 1110, kk. The Advantage the Mahometans reap hereby, ibid. The Expoſition of the Chapter of the Elephant in the Alcoran, according to the Turkiſh Commentators, 2017. c.

Alcoran of the Cordeliers, what it is, and the occaſion of writing it, 1352. H.

Aldobrandus; noted as an inſtance of the Ingratitude of the Publick to Men of Publick Spirits, 162.

Aldegonde (St.) whether he had ſufficient ground to ſend to the States of Holland, that Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Alençon were Married, 2651. a.

Aldhelme (St.) the manner of his proving the Perfection of his Chaſtity, 1340. b.

Alegambe (Pere) his notorious Lye of Beza, 560. c.

Aleſius (Alexander) his miraculous Preſervation, 1708. a.

Alexander; the Roman Emperor, his medly of Worſhips, and manner of preparing himſelf for them, 297. b. 298. a.

Alexander VI. (Pope) Died by the ſame Poiſon that he himſelf had mixed for Cardinal Hadrian, 1557. b.

Alexander VII. (Pope) a formal Story of his Inclination to turn Huguenot, 969. a. His Civil Carriage to ſome Engliſh Proteſtant Gentlemen, 970. a. How related by Blood to Mahomet IV, ibid. A very impudent Cheat put upon him by ſome Dutch Bookſellers, 971. a.

Alexander the Great; his Anſwer to him who offer'd him the Lyre of Paris, 63. b. His fine Anſwer to a Queen who ſent him delicious Refreſhments, 78. Why called Iskender Dhoulcarnein, 963. b. The Difference between his Character and that of his Father Philip, 2076. b. Whether the Romans ſent Ambaſſadors to him, 2077. a. His Chaſtity and Continence called in Queſtion, 586. b. Whether the Story of his being reprimanded by Apelles, for expoſing his Ignorance in Painting, be true, ibid. His Superſtition and Credulity, 346. b. An Apology for him in theſe Points, 347. a. Has Books ſent after him into Aſia, and particularly the Greek Poets, 1581. H. Forces theſe Words out of the Delphian Prieſteſs's Mouth, My Son you are invincible, 1757. E. By what means his Preceptor render'd himſelf agreeable to him, 1955. Z.

Alexander ab Alexandro (a Civilian) his Reaſons for quitting the Bar, 178.

Alexander (Cardinal) his vaſt Work againſt the Profeſſors of all Sciences not publiſhed after his Death, 171. a. The reaſon of his Willingneſs to quit this World, expreſs'd by himſelf in a Greek Epitaph, ibid. b. His Nickname of the Bearer of the Bulls, 172. Affected to ſay, that the Hereticks took the hints of all their falſe Doctrines from Eraſmus his Works, 172. a. Of a Friend, and once a Chamber Mate, turns a moſt bitter Enemy to him, ibid. b.

Alexandra; a Statue ſo called, of whom, 872. H.

Alexandra; a Poem that has much exercis'd the Ancient and Modern Criticks, 1928. y.

Alexandria; the Eternity of the World taught publickly there in the VIth Century, 211. b.

Ali, Son-in-Law of Mahomet, thrice put by the Throne thro' the Credit of Ayeſcha, Mahomet's Widow; and at laſt, when he aſcends it, ruined by her with his whole Family, 2111. b.

Allatius (Leo) how high he ſtrains the Power of the Pope, 183. b. His anſwer to Alexander VII. who asked him why he wou'd not Marry, 184. a. He wrote Greek forty Years with one Pen, ibid. A Defence of him by the Gentlemen of Port-Royal againſt Mr. Claude, ibid. b.

Alliances; the French and Spaniards reproach each other reciprocally on their entring into Alliances with Hereticks, 869. b. The Pope may make Alliances with Infidels, for Preſerving the Liberties of the Church, ibid.

Almachius; ſuppoſed to be an imaginary Saint, with the Reaſons of his Canonization, 183. b.

Almain (James) wrote for the Authority of the Council of Piſa above the Pope, 184.

Almanack; how it came to be St. Almanachus, 183. b.

Almoner; the Great Almoners of France appointed Commanders of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, when and wherefore, 201. The Title of Great Almoner of France, when it firſt took place, in whoſe Reign, and in whoſe Perſon, 912. b. When called the King's Great Almoner, and under whoſe Reign did this Title begin, ibid. When call'd ſimply Almoner, ibid.

Almucheſi; a Magick Looking-glaſs, its Properties, 461.

Alpheus Varus; from a Cobler of Cremona, came to be Conſul of Rome, 180.

Alphonſo I. King of Naples, his extraordinary Love of Learning and Learned Men, 2330. a. An inſtance of his filial Duty, ibid.

Alphonſus X. King of Caſtile, his finding Fault with the Works of God in the Creation of the Heavens, 901. b. The firſt who cauſed the Publick Acts of his Kingdom to be drawn up in the vulgar Tongue, and the Bible to be Tranſlated into it, 901. He's confounded with another Alphonſus, neither of which is truly Author of the Code of Alphonſus, 902.

Alphonſines; Aſtronomical Tables, who the firſt Author of them, and what the Expence of them was, 901. b.

Alva (Duke d') his Anſwer to Henry II. of France, when ask'd about the Sun's ſtanding ſtill during the Battel of Muhlberg, fought by Charles V, 949. b. An Inſtance of his fierce intractable Temper, 1508. b.

Alum; a kind of it with which the Ancients rub'd over Towers of Wood, to render them incombuſtile, 329. b. Whether it has the vertue to render Wood incombuſtible, 330. a.

Amable (St.) his Gloves and Cloak born in the Air by a Sunbeam as he Travell'd, making a kind of Umbrella, 193.

Amama (Sixtinus) the occaſion of an Order of the Synod of Frieſland, that none ſhou'd be Ordain'd without a competent Knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew, 194. a.

Amaſtris; the Hiſtory of this Princeſs, and of the Town which bore her Name, 1109. a. b.

Ambaſſador; an Ambaſſador who ſcruples making Court to a Courtezan, is not fit for his Place, 937. b. The Anſwer of a Spaniſh Ambaſſador to a Roman Abbot, who told him there was but one way of coming at a Secret, and that was thro' a Courtezan, ibid. one Article of their Catechiſm, 558. A. Of all Religions are the ſame, 672. F.

Ambaſſadrice-Extraordinary; a Lady qualified with this Title, vid. Guebriant.

Ambition; the Ambitious ſubmit to the ſlaviſheſt Actions, 937. b.

AM AN. AP.

Amboiſe (Adrian d') his handſom Epitaph, 197. a.

Vol. II. 801. Amboiſe (Michael d') the Titles of his Books lively and promiſing, but the Subſtance good for nothing, 197.

Vol. III. 1551. Ambroiſe (St.) his Carriage towards Theodoſius the Emperor, 457. C.

Vol. IV. 1439. Ambroſians; a Title which ſome Sorcerers of Nancy in Lorraine gave themſelves, 1378. Art. IV.

Amelius, was 24 Years a Diſciple of Plotinus, 197. In one of his Books he cited the beginning of St. John's Goſpel, to confirm Plato's Doctrine, 198.

Amelot (Mr.) cenſur'd on his rendring a Paſſage in Father Paul unfairly, 1701. a.

America; which was the firſt Voyage that the French made thither, 1919.

Americans; the Corruption of their Manners, and their Averſion for Maidenheads, 1911. a.

Ameſius; his Character of the Puritans and Anti-Puritans in England, 199. No medium, according to him, between ſuppreſſing Epiſcopacy, and bringing back Popery, ibid.

Ammonius wrote a Book of the Courtezans of Athens, 208. His Aſs had a wonderful Taſte for Poetry, 209.

Ammonius (Sacca) called Theodidactus from his excellent Knowledge, not in Religion, but Philoſophy, 210. a.

Ammonius (Andrew) Secretary to Henry VIII. Eraſmus's Advice to him how to carry himſelf at the Court of England, 212. His pleaſant Account of the Executions in England on the Score of Religion under Henry VIII. and the Fruitfulneſs of Sects amidſt the Flames, 213. a. n.

Amniomancy; an Art of divining by inſpecting the Membrane in which the Fœtus is encloſ'd, 1773. a.

Amours; more condemned, and more pernicious to the State in Queens than in Kings, 2327. b.

Amphiaraus; the Fable of the Earth's opening to ſwallow him, an alluſion to the Story of Corah, Dathan and Abiram, 215. a.

Amphitryon; a Comedy of Plautus, 'till what Age acted in Rome, 221. a. falls very ſhort of Moliere's Amphitryon ibid.

Amurath IV. had Machiavel's Prince Tranſlated into Turkiſh for his own Reading, 1081. b.

Amyot (James) Biſhop of Auxerre, reproached by Charles IX. his Pupil, for his Avarice, and his Living on Neats Tongues, 199. a. Died worth 200000 Crowns in Caſh, ibid. b. A Judgment on his Tranſlation of Plutarch, 201. b. Had been a Calviniſt in his Youth, 202. b. A Paſſage in Plutarch about Pompey's biting the Courtezan Flora, not underſtood by him, 1322. a. A Diſſertation upon it, ibid. Ow'd his great Preferments to an humorous Emulation in Charles IX. 1559. b.

Amyrault (Moſes) Miniſter of Saumur, obtains that the Deputies of the Proteſtant Synods ſhou'd not kneel when they ſpoke to the King of France, 204. b. Paſſive Obedience his Darling Doctrine, 206. b. His generous refuſal of an active Obedience againſt Conſcience, ibid. b. His endeavour to prove that things may be foretold without the Spirit of Prophecy how intended, 912. b.

Anabaptiſts; in what Year they firſt landed in England, and how they were received there, 240. b. Subdivided into two Sects, that of the Hutterians, and that of the Gabrieliſts, ibid. a. n. Their Martyrs mixed with the Martyrs of Geneva, 241. b. Whether every Woman among the Anabaptiſts be obliged, by their Principles, to grant any Man the favour who deſires it, and ſo reciprocally, 2436. Reflections on this Principle, 244. a. Where their firſt Fury broke out, 681. b. Their Conferences with Luther, and bitter Curſes againſt him, ibid. An Inſtance of their being the moſt rigid of all Chriſtian Moraliſts, 2145. a.

Anacreon; which of his Poems are univerſally allowed to be his, and which ſuſpected, 224. a. b. The Gallantries between him and Sappho feign'd at Pleaſure by Hermeſianax, 2670. a.

Anatomy; a Doubt propoſed to the Caſuiſts, upon the Reading Lectures in Anatomy to Women, 86. a.

Anaxagoras; the firſt Heathen Philoſopehr who admitted a pure Spirit diſtinct from Body, 1827. a. What difference he made between the Souls of Men, and thoſe of Brutes, 2516. a. His laſt Requeſt upon his Death-bed, 225. b. The firſt of the Heathen Philoſophers, who ſaid that the Chaos was cleared by an Intelligence, 226. The firſt who made God the Author of the Order and Symmetry of the Parts of the World, 229. b. His Doctrine of the Homoiomeriæ confuted at large, 231. b. 232. a. b. His Prediction of the falling of a Stone from Heaven fulfilled, 234. a. His five Anſwers upon the News of the Sentence of Death pronounced againſt him, upon the News of the Death of his Sons, and upon his being asked, whether he had a mind to have his Corps buried in the Town where he was born, 236. a. Whom he thought the happieſt Man, ibid.

Anaximenes, his Notion of the Origin of the Gods, 151. a.

Ancients; a Reflection on the Parallel between the Ancients and Moderns, 1022. b. The difference between them and the Moderns as to Comedy, 2481. Several among them did not believe the common fabulous Traditions, 58. b.

Ancre (Mareſchal d') the ſtrange Rage of the Populace againſt his dead Body, 1015. a. His Faults extenuated in Mareſchal d'Estree's Memoirs, 1016. a. His vaſt Riches, ibid.

Anderini (Iſabella) a famous Italian Actreſs, her Profeſſion in the Epitaph upon her Tomb mentioned next before the Hopes of the Reſurrection, 257. a.

Andreas (John) the famous Canoniſt; the Anſwer he made his Wife, when, ſurprized by her in carnal Copulation with his Maid, ſhe asked him where were his Wiſdom and Prudence now? 254. b.

Androgynes; an Account of Plato's Androgynes, 1640. a. b. A kind of Hermophradites, 81. a.

Androis, what it was, 146. a.

Andromache; the Subject of ſeveral fine Tragedies, ancient and modern, 260. a. The Exceſs of the Paſſions in Corneille's Anromache, the Cauſe of an Actor's Death, ibid.

Anecdotes; the Sources for them, 282. a.

Angels (Tutelar or Guardian) the Doctrine of the Pagans concerning theſe Angels, 805. a.

Angels; two kinds of evil Angels according to Athenagoras, 418. b. No Syſtem or Hypotheſis can leſs diſpenſe with good and evil Angels, than that of Spinoza, 926. b.

Anger; a very judicious Advice to Friends, when either is angry with the other, 2723. b.

Angleſey (Earl of) his formal Atteſtation, that King Charles the IId. and King James then Duke of York, aſſured him Icon Baſilikè was not wrote by their Father, but by Doctor Gauden, 2053. b.

Anicius, the firſt Roman Senator who turned Chriſtian, 266.

Animals, how produced according to Anaxagoras, 226, 327. b.

Anjou (Rechin, Earl of) his mean Paſſion for his Wife Bertrada, after ſhe had married Philip King of France, 1325. b.

Annaliſts ought to have ſeveral Copies of their Annals, and lodge ſome of them in truſty Hands, 831. b.

Anne (Saint) neither the Scripture, nor the Writings of the three firſt Centuries, make mention of her, 269.

Anne (Mother of the Bleſſed Virgin.) a Diſpute about her Monogamy, 121. b. Ridiculous Legends concerning her, 1760. a. Her Feaſt how modern, and on what occaſion inſtituted, ibid. b.

Anne, the Propheteſs, Daughter of Phanuel, no Nun, 269. a. An Expreſſion in St. Cyril, no Ground for making her ſuch, ibid. b.

Anniceris; a Coachman of ſingular Addreſs in his Art, 1077. b. Why Plato deſpiſed him with all his Addreſs, ibid.

Anthony (St.) his Image ſnatched out of the Prieſt's Hand in a ſolemn Proceſſion, and toſſed over the Bridge of Geneva by Farel, one of the firſt Reformers, 1282. b.

Antichriſt; the vulgar Opinion that he is to be born of a Monk and a Nun, 701. a. Mrs. Bourignou's ſtrange Opinion concerning him, 702. b. The Pope, when declared Antichriſt by an expreſs Article in the Confeſſion of the French Proteſtants, and by whoſe Means, 1307. a. Legacies left by ſome Mahometans to a great Prophet, who is to come and deſtroy Antichriſt, 2176. a. A very ſingular Opinion of him, and how he is to poſſeſs himſelf of fortified Towns, 702, and 2087. b.

Antinomians; their Founder and Principles, 1781. b. Bare more Reſpect to Ariſtotle, than to the uncreated Wiſdom, 366. a.

Antiperiſtaſis; baniſhed out of Philoſophy, how it takes place in Religion, 2617. b.

Antonia; a Roman Family ſo call'd; a groſs Overſight of Father Vavaſſor's, with relation to it, given as an Inſtance of what ſtrange Overſights the learnedſt Men may commit, 274. a.

Antoniano (Silvio) his extraordinary Talent at Latin Poetry by that time he was ten Years of Age, 282.

Antony (Mark) the great Roman Orator and Lawyer; why he ever affected not to be thought a Learned Man, when in Reality he was very Learned, 275. b.

Apaſi (Michael) Prince of Tranſilvania, the Cauſe of enſlaving the Kingdom of Hungary, 285. b.

Apelles, the Comedian, the muſical Tone of his Voice, even in crying, 1446. b. Caligula prolonged his whipping, that he might have the Pleaſure of hearing him cry, ibid.

Apelles; a particular Inſtance of his great Talent in taking the Likeneſs, 186. b. A Proof of the Excellency of his Paintings, ibid. His Maſter-piece, 187.

Apicius; an Inſtance of his Gluttony, and Curiouſneſs in eating, 191. a.

Apion; the Matter of his Embaſſy from the People of Alexandria to Caligula againſt the Jews, 192.

Apocalypſe. See Revelations.

Apollinaris (Sidonius) a groſs Miſtake of his in Point of Chronology, 321. a.

Apollo, his owning Archilochus, the foul mouth'd, filthy Slanderer, for a Son of the Muſes, and reſenting his Death, though he had been killed in fair Fight, blam'd by the very Heathens, 331. b. This made uſe of by Origen and Euſebius, to expoſe the Pagan Gods, ibid.

Apologues; who was the firſt Author and Inventer of them, 1232. a.

Apollodorus; a famous Architect in Hadrian's Days, the Faults he found in a Temple built by the Emperor, very judicious, 1675. a. 194 a. Loſt his Life by it, ibid.

Apollonius Tyaneus; the Parallels made by the Heathens between his pretended Miracles, and thoſe of Jeſus Chriſt, diſturb the Chriſtians in St. Auguſtin's Days, 198. a. An Account of thoſe that had written the Life of this Impoſtor, 199. a. Aped the Son of God, 197. a. In what Point did he fall ſhort of him, and ſink ſhamefully, ibid. What is told of him, with regard to the aſſaſſinating Domitian, Diſſert. 1.

Apparitions; Stories of Apparitions not to be diſcredited in ſome Caſes, 1411. b. Accounted for by natural Cauſes, according to ſome Syſtems of Philoſophy, 1681. a.

Aquarius; the Sign in the Zodiac, its Original, 354.

Aquaviva (General of the Jeſuits) whether he approved Mariana's Book De Inſtitutione Principis, 1182. a.

Aquila; Author of the Alterations in the Hebrew Text of the Bible, 138. a.

Aquinas (Thomas) why he broke the Androis or Brazen Man of Albertus Magnus to ſhatters, 146. a. Of Opinion with Ariſtotle, that Women are Defects of Nature, where ſhe has not Strength enough to form the other Sex, 1394. a.

Aquitain; famous in the 5th Century for the beſt Wits and Orators in the Roman Empire, 2720. b.

Arabians, obſerve the Cuſtom of marrying thoſe of their own Tribe, 2092. b. The extraordinary Modeſty of the Women of Arabia, in the Days of Tertullian, 2089. b. Their Philoſophers will rather depart from the Doctrines of Mahomet, than contradict Ariſtotle, 364. a. Some of their Authors boaſt of having ſeen a Copy of the Goſpels, in which Mahomet was plainly and expreſly ſpoken of, and that there was but one true Copy beſides in the World, 1110. a. The Arabian Women propoſed as Patterns of Chaſtity by Tertullian, 2098. b.

Arbriſſell (Robert d') Founder of the great Abby of Frontevaux in France; whether the Reaſons maintaining that he lay in Bed with the Nuns of his Abby, by way of Mortification, be ſolid or no, 132. a. 1329. b. 1330. a.

Arcadius ſtands up, and is uncovered before his Preceptor, by the order of Theodoſius, 397.

Arceſilaus; the firſt notorious Wrangler among the Philoſophers, and the firſt Diſturber of the Publick Peace among them, by an obſtinate way of diſputing, 318. a. How he rectified the Doctrine of Democritus and Epicurus, 321. a. Led into Pyrrhoniſme by Plato's Books, 317. aa.

Archagatus, the firſt Phyſician that ever came to Rome. An. Ur. 531. 880. b.

Archelaus, Biſhop of Caſcara, his fiery Zeal, 2166. a. of Opinion that Manes ought to be deſtroyed like a wild Beaſt, ibid.

Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, in the Days of Tiberius is cited to Rome, and judged by the Senate, 328. a. eſcapes by counterfeiting Madneſs, ibid. b.

Archilochus, his Death reſented, 331. b. and Apollo blamed for owning him a Son of the Muſes, ibid. Vide Apollo.

Areopagus, how ſevere againſt Atheiſts and Enemies to Religion, 1035. H.

Areotatus, the Gallant of Chelydonis, Wiſe of Cleonymus, King of Sparta, how waggiſhly the old Men of Sparta uſed to call out to him in the Streets, while Sparta was beſieged by Cleonymus, 1001. a.

Aretin (Guy) the Inventer of the ſix Notes, Ut, re, mi, &c. in Muſick and the Gamut, 336. falſly ſuppoſed to be the Author of the three Books, in defence of the real Preſence againſt Berengarius, which belong to Guitmond, a Monk, ibid. a.

Aretin (Peter) immortalized not by his own Works, but by an unlucky Line upon him in Arioſto, 340. a. He own'd the lew'd Poſtures that paſs under his Name, 341. a.

Aretin (Leonard) his bold Plagiariſm, 337.

Aretin (Francis) his ſtrange Opinion, that the Marquis of Mantua was obliged to ſuffer his Daughter, betrothed to the Son of the Duke of Millan, to be viewed naked by Commiſſioners from that Duke, 2755. a.

Arezzo; its Inhabitants obliged by the Orders of Charles the VIIIth of France, to kneel before the Statue of a Lyon, and ask Pardon, 1076. a.

Argæus; Mount Argæus, where worſhipped as a God, ſworn by, and Statues erected to it, 846. b.

Argenis (Barclays) criticiz'd, 497. a. much admired and read by Cardinal Richlieu, 497. b. and by Balzac, ibid. its Latin bad notwithſtanding, ibid.

Argenternis, Profeſſor in the Civil Law, wrote down every thing remarkable that he heard in Converſation, tho' even from the meaneſt Perſon, 1401. b.

Argenteuil (Nuns of) expelled all at once for Incontinency, 1604.

Argians; the Rule of their Dates, their Æra and Account of Time taken from the Inſtallment of the Prieſteſs of Minerva, 983.

Arguments (Negative) in ſome Points of Fact when they take place, 704. a. Equal to a Demonſtration in ſome Caſes, 912. C. Books written for and againſt its Authority, 1669. F.

Argyropylus, The firſt Greek who taught Philoſophy at Rome, 344.

Ariminais, The Name of the Deity which the Perſians, and after them the Manichæans, acknowledg'd for the Principle of Evil, 344.

Ariſtides, the great Ingenuity of a Citizen of Athens, who voted for his Baniſhment, 356. a. Allow'd of Perjury, where the Intereſt of the State was concern'd, ibid. b.

Ariſtander the Soothſayer, an Inſtance of his extraordinary Power over Alexander the Great, 346. b.

Ariſtarchus, the famous Critick, Inventer of Aſteriks and Obeliks to mark the Paſſages in Books, 349. b.

Ariſtippus, his Doctrine led Men into Diſſoluteneſs only when miſunderſtood, 358. b.

Ariſton, an eminent Stoick Philoſopher, his manner of judging of the Greatneſs of God, 375. b. is much diſturb'd at the ſight of an Hermophradite-Ball, as being an Object that gave the Scepticks and Acalepticks, his Adverſaries, an Advantage over him, 358. a.

Ariſtophanes; his Deſign in writing his Comedy of the Clouds, according to ſome, 325. a. To whom is the Publick oblig'd for the firſt Edition of his Works, 2318. His laſhing the nocturnal Devotion of his times, 2871. b.

Ariſtotle, equall'd to Adam in Science and Underſtanding, 79. a. Hardly any of his Demonſtrations neceſſary but that of the Unity of God, 132. b. The Agreement between his Philoſophy and that of Plato, 210. a. Some of his Books condemn'd to be burnt by a Council held at Paris, Anno 1209. 434. a. Whether his Works in Greek were in France before the time of Averroes, ibid. His Books had like to have been all condemn'd to the Flames by Caracalla, on a belief that he had been an Accomplice in Poiſoning Alexander the Great, 2076. a. His extravagant Opinion concerning the formation of Woman, 1393. b. What kind of Knowledge he aſcribes to Brutes, 2518. a. b. The Hiſtory of the Preſervation of his Works, and the cauſes of corrupting the Text in divers Places, 2900. a. His Morals read to the People in the Churches inſtead of the Goſpel, in ſome Parts of Germany, 366. The firſt Reformers clamour'd loudly againſt his Philoſophy, ibid. b. Is unjuſtly Cenſur'd by the Author of the Art of thinking, in favour of Parmenides, 3049. a. The Hiſtory of the Deſtiny of his Works, 1900. a. His Ignorance and Errors about the Jewiſh Nation, 361. a. The Jews pretend he was of the Seed of Iſrael, and of the Tribe of Benjamin, 361. b. The ridiculous ground of ſome Mens believing him a native Jew, ibid. What the ground was of the action of Impiety brought againſt him, according to Origen, 362. a. The extravagant Elegies given him, 363. a. b. What is of glorious conſequence to him, but which at the ſame time makes his Works to be doubted, 1901. b. His Name or Works ſcarce heard of at Rome in Cicero's Days, 262. a. Who was the firſt that brought his Works into any Repute there, and digeſted them into order, ibid. b.

Whether he burnt all the Books of thoſe who had Philoſophis'd before him, and particularly the Books of Solomon, 1078. P. A ſilly Story of the Jews on this head, ibid. Allows Thales and Anaxagoras to have been wiſe Men, but not prudent, and why, 225. a. He is horribly ill

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 2139.

uſed by Luther, 1919. E. E. His Phyſicks and Morals, by whom Tranſlated, 344. b. Who have diſcuſſed what Works of his, or of thoſe that go under his Name, are genuine, and which are not, 1951. b. The Conformity between his Doctrine and that of Spinoza, 926. B. His Works brought to Rome for the moſt part with the Library of Apellicon, 561. b. Several faulty Copies taken of them, 562. a. The Indexes which we have at preſent made to them, by whom, at that time, after having put them in order, ibid. b. When and how Nature forms Women according to this Philoſopher, 1393. b. Who was the firſt of the Moderns, and in a manner the laſt, that took his Thought right, 926. A.

Arminians have run into Errors much more pernicious than thoſe of the 5 Articles, 1420. a. Theſe render their Schiſm incurable, ibid. Ought not to have removed the ancient Bounds of the Reformation, 373. E. They reject the Authority of the Synod of Dort, 1201. Are depoſed and baniſhed, ibid. The People curſe them as the firſt Cauſe of the Troubles in Church and State, ibid. b.

Arnauld (Mr.) The Reaſon he gives why the obſcene Latin Poets are not put into the Liſt of prohibited Books, 646. a.

Arnobius; his Opinion of the Language which our Saviour commonly made uſe of, 996. a. His ſcoffing at the Gods of the Heathens liable to be retorted, 983. b. Ridicules the Pagans on Jupiter's taking nine Nights to make Hercules, when Hercules could get 50 Children in a Night, 1644. b. Leſs Orthodox about Matter conſidered as one of the firſt Principles, than the Stoicks, 2492. b. Confutes the Pagans who held two kinds of Divinity, ibid. His Thoughts that they who believe a God may be happy, if right, whereas they cannot be unhappy if miſtaken, improved, and by whom, 2468. b. His Notions of the Natural Mortality of the humane Soul, 2606. a.

Arragon (Don Pedro d') Ambaſſador of Spain, called a wicked Man to his Face by Alexander the VIIth, and anſwers his Holineſs fiercely, 969. a.

Arragon (Joan of) the Poetical Apotheſis or Deification uſed towards her after Death, 310. a, b. The Deſcription of her Beauty, and of the Symmetry and Proportion of all the parts of her Body, ibid.

Arragon (Mary of) Wife of Otho the IIId. Emperor; entertains her Lover as a Chamber-maid in Woman's Cloaths, 314. He is diſcovered by the Emperor, and ſtript before many Witneſſes, ibid.

Arras; The Treaty of Arras relating to the Submiſſions made by Charles the VIIth of France, to the Duke of Burgundy, 776.

Arrianiſme; Its Extirpation in Spain by Recaredus, 370. I, K.

Arſinoe; An Iron Statue of her ſuſpended in the Air by the Means of Loadſtones, 2105. b. 2106. b.

Art of Slandering; There is ſuch an Art according to Scaliger. They who do not underſtand it, do more harm to themſelves than to others, 268. b.

Artemidorus; cited on occaſion of Dreams, and their Signification, 3. b.

Artillery, who was the Inventor of it, 146.

Artiſts; great Artiſts generally whimſical and untoward Humoriſts, 287. a. An Inſtance of their Inſolence to Perſons of the firſt Rank, 294. a.

Arundelian Marble; an account of them, 2698. a. b.

Aruſpices, by whom firſt inſtituted, 990.

Aſpaſia, the Miſtreſs of Cyrus the younger, her Hiſtory abridged, 991. a. b. 992. a. b.

Aſſe of Buridan; the Origin of this Proverb, 778. a. b. A comical Satyr, 308. b.

Aſs (Golden) of Apuleius, a Judgment upon it, 308. b. This Romance capable of a good Commentary, ibid. Some pretend to find the Myſteries of the great Work in it, ibid.

Aſſaſſins encouraged by the Example of Judith, 1785. a.

Aſterisks; who was the firſt Inventor of them and Obelisks, the firſt to damn, the ſecond to approve Paſſages in Books, 349. b.

Aſterites, a kind of Stone, which was fired by the Rays of the Sun, 1237. a. ſaid to be a powerful Philtre, and that which Paris gave to Helena, ibid.

Aſtrea, a Romance, the chief Exceptions to it, 1986.

Aſtrology; how an Aſtrological Prediction, which is no better than a Chimera, may yet happen to be accompliſhed, 902. a. The Objection againſt it from the different Fate of Twins, how anſwered, 2380. b. If it diſcovers Futurity, muſt be grounded upon a compact with the Devil, and is meer Magick, 2633. a. The Indulgence of Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Courts for Aſtrologers beyond Magicians or Conjurers highly blameable, ibid.

Aſtronomy, how far Socrates thought it a fit matter of our Study and Application, 238. b.

Atavus, what Relation it denotes, 1363. b.

Atheiſm: The Mahometans look on the Doctrine of a firſt Mover when join'd to that of the Eternity of the World, as pure Atheiſm, 434. b. The charge of it become a great Abuſe, 1680. b. Whether Atheiſm be a greater Evil than Paganiſm, 296. F. Whether ſuppoſing a firſt Mover, and yet admitting the Eternity of the World, be not Atheiſm, 433. E.

Atheiſts, their force of Soul ſaid to be Maniack and Unnatural, and compar'd to the Strength of the Lunatick in the Goſpel, 855. a. What, according to them, has been the Cauſe and Origin of human Laws, 1035. Their Syſtem of the Origin of Religion, ibid. Who are thoſe in ſome Peoples Opinion, who write beſt againſt Atheiſts, 1883. At what Age and Circumſtances Men begin to turn Atheiſts, 1909. a.

Athenians, when and by whom deliver'd from the Domination of the thirty Tyrants, 1019. E. How highly they prized the freedom of their City, 1025. Reproach'd with their meanneſs and want of Spirit by Demetrius, 1878. a. A Law of theirs againſt Malefactors, abrogated by Chriſtianity, 1179. F. Made a Decree that no Sophiſt ſhould plead Civil Cauſes, 1709. a. What kind of Inceſt allow'd, and what forbid by their Laws, 2674. a. By whom deliver'd from their Fears of an Eclipſe, and how, 2530. b.

Athens, rewarded the Aſſaſſin of Cotys the Tyrant with a Crown of Gold and the Freedom of their City, after they had complimented this ſame Tyrant with his Freedom there, and with a Crown of Gold, 1025. b. What a value they ſet upon the Freedom of their City, ibid. How the Athenians received great Princes who came to their City, 2523. a. Who was the firſt that brought Philoſophy to Athens, 321. b. A Diſpute between Neptune and Minerva, which ſhould give the Name to this City, 345. We have only the fair ſide of this Republick in Hiſtory, at bottom it was inſlaved by the Demagogues, 2468. a.

Atomiſts; their Hypotheſis not ſo Abſurd as that of the Spinoziſts, 1084. Q.

Atoms; the difference between the Atoms of Democritus, and thoſe of Epicurus, 1189. b.

Attila, orders a blaſphemous Panegyriſt upon himſelf and his Verſes to be thrown into the Fire, 2011.

Attalus, King of Pergamum, how he maintain'd his Dignity in Athens, 2522. a. The firſt who invented Embroider'd Hangings, 2526. b. The exceſſive Prices paid by him for fine Paintings, ibid.

Aubigné (D') has made too bold with a Paſſage of Monſieur de Thou, 96. b.

Aubigné (Monſieur d') Grandfather to Madam Maintenon. Whether the Son of Joan d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, by a private Marriage, 2348. a.

Audebert (Pere) a Jeſuit; Overtures made by him from the King of France and Cardinal Richlieu, towards a Re-union of the Romiſh and Proteſtant Communions, 205. b.

Aventine (John) his Annals publiſh'd by the Proteſtants from a perfect Original, 424. a. His Fate wherein reſembling that of Father Paul, 426. a.

Averroes; Ariſtotle's great Commentator underſtood not a word of Greek, 427. The firſt that ventur'd to Bleed a Son of his own at ſix or ſeven Years of Age, contrary to the Practice and Opinion of all the ancient Phyſicians, who reckon'd it Death before fourteen, 427. b. His great Hatred for Avicenna, and how expreſſed by him, ibid. His Opinion of the Unity of the intellectual Soul in all Men, and its diſtinction from the informing Soul, one Eternal, the other Mortal, 428. a. His Saying of the three Religions, the Chriſtian, the Jewiſh, and the Mahometan, 430. a. His Contempt of Tranſubſtantiation, ibid. His remarkable Wiſh, 433. a. His Prediction of the Calamities of Corduba, on ſeeing the Alcoran ſold at a Stall for a Ducat, and a prohibited Book of Bawdy Poems for ten Piſtoles, 433. b.

Auguſtin, (St.) intreated by the Chriſtians in his time to refute the pretended Parallel between Apollonius Tyaneus, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, 298. a. His Apology for Abraham's lying with Hagar diſcuſſed and confuted, 2679. a. b. His manner of refuting Cicero, where he values the Divinity of Romulus, becauſe eſtabliſhed in Times of Learning and fine Senſe, 2684. a. A thought of his upon the Conjugal Duties leſſening a Wiſe Man, 2640. a. In what Caſes it is a Sin, though a venial one, ibid. His Authority leſſened by ſome Romiſh Divines, in prejudice to the Reform'd Doctrines of Predeſtination, 2661. b. The Troubles he lay under from Dreams, after he had weaned himſelf from the Corruptions of the Fleſh, 1335. a. The Reaſon he gives why

Adam

Adam did not conſummate his Marriage 'till after the Fall, 17. a. Wherein does he make the opening the Eyes of our firſt Parents to conſiſt, 79. a. By whom treated with the Title of Hot African, Intricate and Obſcure, and charged with going beyond the Truth, in oppoſing the Enemies of Grace, 83. a.

Inclines to approve an Adultery committed by a Wife by the conſent of her Husband, in order to ſave his Life, 70. a. The Point argu'd, ibid. His Deſcription of the Perverſeneſs of his Childhood, 434. b. How his Syſtem perplexes the Court of Rome, 436. a. 437. b. A notable Paradox, whether St. Auſtin was a hard Drinker or no, curiouſly diſcuſſed, 438. b. His wicked kind of Prayer for Chaſtity before his Converſion, 698. b. Thought ſubtle Diſputations in Religious Matters an Evil fit to be deprecated by ſolemn Proceſſions, 1148. a. His Remark on the Words of St. Paul, Fly Fornication, 1318. b. Wrote a Retractation for calling the Muſes Goddeſſes, tho' only in a poetical Strain, 1386. b. Cenſur'd on a Thought of his about the Beaſtlineſs of the Cynicks, 1670. b. His Argument to prove the unreaſonableneſs of the Pagan Diſbelief with regard to ſome of the Scripture Miracles, ſhewn to be fallacious, 1766. a. Takes notice of a Diſpute in his own Time, and before him, whether Brutes had Souls, 2514. a.

Auguſtus, A Jeſt of his on Caſſius Severus, who was always Impeaching, though the Parties were always acquitted, 883. b. The Ground for ſaying that he deſign'd to Marry his Daughter Julia to Cotiſo King of the Getæ, 1027. a. His ridiculous Order enjoining all in any Country who had any Dreams concerning the Republick to declare 'em openly, 2133. b. Whether he was the Inventer of the Dances of the Pantomimi, 521. a. b. Not much skill'd in polite Learning, if we believe the Emperor Hadrian, 1556. a. In danger of being kill'd by his Father the very Day of his Birth, upon a Prediction that he ſhould be Emperor of Rome, 2379. a. A wiſe Edict of his for preſerving the Chaſtity of Maids, 2871. b.

Avicenna, his Opinion concerning the Production of new Men after the univerſal Deluge, 926. b.

Avignon, a cheap Purchaſe to the Pope, 2322. The price of Queen Joan of Naple's Iniquity, 2324. a.

Aunoi (Mademoiſelle d') a Character of her Writings, 2376. b.

Aurelian, his exceeding Severity of Life and Manners, 441. a. The rule of his Favours, ibid.

Aurelius (Marcus), his Anſwer to thoſe who adviſ'd him to divorce his Wife, 2000. b.

Aurelius (Petrus), his Deſcription of the Obſcenity of the Book de Matrimonio, by the Jeſuit Thomas Sanchez, 2668. a. 2669. a.

Auſonius, whether he was a Chriſtian or no, 450. a.

Auſtria (Don John of) Son of Charles V. twice deceiv'd in his Mother, and never knew his true Mother, 452. b. Who ſhe was according to the Menagiana, 453. b. n. His Anſwer to Don Carlos, Son of Philip II. who call'd him Baſtard, 454. a. Suppoſed by ſome to be Charles the Vth's Son by his Siſter the Queen of Hungary, 1727. b.

Auſtria (Houſe of) ſaid to be deſcended from the Senatorial Family of the Anicii in Rome, 266. Who firſt reſtor'd this Houſe to its ancient Splendor in Germany, 1118, 1119, 1120.

Authority (the Way of). People come back to it, after they have been running it down, 190. b. 2397. a. The Church ſubject to infinite Diviſions without it, 241. Whether there be any difference between the Church of Rome and the Proteſtants, with regard to this way, 1126. b.

Authors, the reſemblance of the Works of Authors of the ſame Party, 17. b. Their not having recourſe to Originals an almoſt unavoidable Cauſe of their Errors, 235. b. An Inſtance of this, ibid. What Authors have born the Title of Divine, 338. Apt to cite thoſe Works which they don't ſet their Names to, 147. b. What it is that makes ſome dye without the Quality of Authors, 159. a. Which is the true Epocha of an Author's Glory or Flouriſhing, 915. b. A Reflection on the Parallel between the ancient and modern Authors, 1022. b. Why great Authors are more ſubject to commit Faults than others, 538. b. One may paſs over the good Qualities of an Author, but not deny them, 534. b. They who are Aggreſſors in any Point, in what Caſes they may leave a Defendant's Replies unanſwer'd, and in what they may not, 535. a. A Jubilate Author, what it means, and whence borrow'd, 580. b. Italian Authors ridiculouſly Scrupulous in not uſing any Terms but what are claſſical even in Treatiſes of the Chriſtian Religion, 670. b. Thoſe Authors who uſe Quotations, and thoſe who write wholly from their own Stock, compared in Point of Excellence, 1189. a. b. In what Caſes they may prefer their own Judgments to thoſe of their Readers, 1571. b. An Inſtance of their exceſſive fondneſs for their own Productions, 1604. Thoſe who religiouſly quote Chapter and Page deprive themſelves of the Honour of being quoted, 2384. b. A Maxim which they ought to conſult carefully, Diſſert. VII. a.

Some ſeem to write with the greateſt facility, who write with extreme pain, 1497. b. 2143. b. 2145. a. Their tenderneſs for their Works, 1604. a. They ought in ſome Caſes to prefer their own Judgment to that of others, 1572. b. What they ought to do to obtain a Recompence from the Publick, 1574. b. Some Authors correct their Writings too much, 1497. b. 1945. a. Some are more hard to be contented in the beginning of a Work, than they are after, 1946. b. Others, to whom the Reviſing a Work which is to be Reprinted, coſts more trouble than the firſt Compoſition, ibid. Whether it be better for them to be judged by one that is an Author himſelf, or by one that is not, 1571. a. Complain of the Ingratitude of their Age, 2445. a. b. It's impoſſible but thoſe who have many Adverſaries ſhould contract a habit of an injurious Stile, an Inſtance of this in Pareus, 2457. b. Have a right to Coin new Words, 2674. b. Never fail, whatever Subject they write on, to diſcover what Religion they are of, 2808. b. Their vicious manner of citing Authors, 2866. D. A Reflection on the Conduct of thoſe, who get the Books of their Adverſaries cenſured or condemn'd by the Higher Powers, 2876. b. Breed a great deal of Confuſion by their Negligence, in not placing their Words in the natural Order of their Thoughts, 465. a. Change their Maxims according to Occaſions, but chiefly the Theologiſts, 476. a. A Moral which may ſerve for a Conſolation to the little Authors, 538. a. It's of great uſe to collect Examples of their unfair Dealing, 618. a. Ought to take Cognizance of the commoneſt Writings, and the Pieces which vaniſh the ſooneſt, 689. b. There are ſome things which Authors never publiſh, when once they come to know their own Buſineſs, 818, 819. P. Several of them would never have written, if they had never been attack'd, 812. a. People are apt to ſay, whether true or falſe, that they knew ſuch an Author familiarly, when he happens to become famous, 783. b. 869. b. They alledge and cite with a thouſand Alterations what the Ancients have ſaid, 1009. H. Cannot avoid being interpreted by the Age to come in ſeveral contrary Ways, 999. a. The Illuſion of thoſe Authors who value themſelves on being hated by oppoſite Sects, 1123. E. Whether the Proteſtant Authors have been hated by the Roman Catholicks, on the ſcore of having well defended their Cauſe, ibid.

Automatons: Whether Deſcartes was the Inventer of the Opinion, that Brutes are meer Machines, or Automatons, 2513. b. The Hypotheſis of Brutes being Automatons very favourable to Religion, 2604. b. 2605. a. What it is that incommodes this Hypotheſis moſt, 2610. a.

Autumn. The Autumn of beautiful Perſons is agreeable, 1266. a.

Ayeſcha, the favourite Wife of Mahomet, her Incontinence, 2111. a. Look'd on by the Mahometans as a Propheteſs, and an Oracle, ibid. b.

Ayrault (Peter) his Treatiſe of the paternal Power, on occaſion of his Son's becoming a Jeſuit againſt his Will, 134. Deprives his Son of his Bleſſing by an Act before a Notary-Publick, 135.

Azotus; its Siege, the longeſt that ever was, 455.

B A.

BAbylas (St.) who was the Emperor whom he ſtop'd at the Door of his Church, or whether he ever ſtop'd any, 4 7. a. b. His Bones ſilenc'd the Oracle of Apollo near Antioch, 458. b.

Babylonians; their Pretenſions to Regiſters of 470000 Years, 459. Confuted upon Enquiry by Ariſtotle, 460. A Correction of Father Hardouinus, with regard to a Paſſage of Pliny, about the Antiquity of Letters among them, 460. b.

Bacon (Fryar) His Letter to Clement IV. preſerved in the Library of Lambeth, ſetting forth that the Laity ought to read the Scriptures, 462. His Project of an Univerſal Grammar, ibid.

BA.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1550.
Vol. IV 1439.

Bacon (Francis Lord) his Prophane Expreſſion in a Letter to the Prince of Wales, 463. a. his whimſical Will, ibid.
Bacoue (Leo) a Converted Hugonot, and the only one who roſe to a Biſhoprick under Lewis XIV. 463.
Bagni (Cardinal) his Exclamation on ſeeing the Councils in 37 Vol. 465. b.
Bajazet II. preſents Innocent VIII with the Iron of the Lance that pierc'd our Saviour's Side, 1755. b. Sends to Rome the Iron of the Lance which peirc'd our Saviour's Side, 1755. a. Had an Inclination for the Sciences 1886. b.
Baillet; his Doubt concerning a piece of Sacrilege, 476. b. Praiſed on his Civil Manner and Equity, 614. a. Has forget one Anti in the Collection which he has made of them, 1857. G. His Diſcourſe on the Lives of the Saints, 1933. b.
Baithuſeans; a Sect among the Jews, wherein it differ'd from the Sadduces, or whether it differ'd them at all or no, 3642. a. b.
Balbus (Cornelius) a Spaniard, the firſt Foreigner who came to be Conſul of Rome, 471. his Nephew Cornelius Balbus the firſt Foreigner who triumphed, ibid.
Ballads, more uſeful in ſome Caſes than Sermons or Pamphlets, 2651. b.
Baldus. The damage he ſuffer'd in his Knowledge by intermitting his uſual daily Studies, 475. a. his anſwer to the Biſhop of Pavia, who ask'd him, why the Laws Chang'd ſo often, 476. b. how he excus'd his contradicting himſelf in his Reaſonings, ibid.
Baldus, (James) His Pen a Sacred Relique, 476.
Baldus, (Bernardin) his reaſon for excuſing Faults in our Acquaintance, 478 a.
Baldus Lipatinus, a Provincial of the Franciſcans, on ſuſpition of being a Proteſtant, after 20 Years impriſonment, caſt into the Sea, 1748. a.
Balzac. A Pamphlet wrote by him at 17, in favour of Liberty, and the depoſing Doctrine, 481. b. his Stratagem to get himſelf preferr'd to Voiture, 484. A Blunder of his in applying a Thought of the Poet Agatho. 100. a. The Difficulty he found in Writing, 2144 a. Tax'd with Vanity in not quoting his Authors, 680. b. A ſhort and fine Elogy of him, 2879. b. His Railleries on the Impatience of Modern Wives, who happen to have Husbands of too nice a Conſtitution, 679. D. One perceives that his Compoſitions coſt him dear, 1497. G. How much he contributed to the Politeneſs which is ſpread over France, 1961. D. Was very Vain, 2445. H. Speaks honourably of the Prince of Condé, at the time when he was in Rebellion, 2397. a. A Judgment on his Works, 2879. N.
Bankrupts, the Puniſhment of Bankrupts in ſome Places of Bœotia, 1652. b.
Baptiſm of Proteſtants held invalid by ſome Popiſh Divines in the beginning of the Reformation, but declar'd valid by a Brief of Pius V. 2659.
Baptiſm, ſaid by ſome Learned Men to have been Adminiſtred to ſome Perſons of what Age or Sex ſoever, Naked as they came into the World, 1565.
Baptiſt (St. John) a pleaſant paſſage of the Abbot of Vitelloni upon his being ſhew'd the fifth or ſixth Head of St. John Baptiſt at Amiens, 2744. a.
Bar, no Scandal in antient Rome for a Lawyer to unſay and contradict former Opinions at the Bar in favour of his Client, 274.
Bara, the word in Geneſis which is rendred Create, does not ſignifie the producing out of nothing, 2184. a. who is the firſt Author of the Remark, ibid.
Barbara, (the Empreſs) her lew'd anſwer, 492.
Barbarus, (Hermolaus) his Queſtion, whether a Wiſe Man ought to Marry, concluded in the Negative, 488. b. conſulted the Devil for the ſenſe of a cramp Word in Ariſtotle, 490.
Barchochebas, his proof of the Courage of his Followers, 499. a. Two falſe Meſſiahs ſaid to be of this Name, one of which was put to Death by his Followers, for want of a good Noſe in Smelling, 501.
Barclay, (John) the Pride of his Wife's Heart, 496. b.
Barlette (Gabriel) his buffoon way of Preaching, 502. a:
Barlow, (Biſhop) his Book againſt the Depoſing Power of Rome, tranſlated into French, and publiſhed at Paris, 1681.
Barnes, (Dr.) Editor of Euripides, an Examination of the Explication which he gives of the Balance and Scales of Lucian, 1263. F.
Barnes, (John) a Benedictin, his Book againſt Mental Reſervation, 108. a. his deplorable end. ibid.
Baronius, (Dominick) maintain'd, that it was not neceſſary to profeſs the Truth outwardly in time of Perſecution, 511. a.
Baronius, (Cardinal) ſhews that a Miracle performed by St. Martin on a fair Tryal of Skill between him and St. Germain, does not prove the former to be the greater Saint, 843. b. condemns the Doctrine of Peter Damian, againſt the Secular Coercion of Popes over Emperors as Erroneous, deriv'd from Tertullian firſt, and afterwards from Julian the Apoſtate, 184. a. ſides with the Heathen Authors againſt the Eccleſiaſtical, to put a ſlur upon Conſtantine, 1290. b. Miſtaken in calling Ann the Daughter of Phanuel a Nun, 268. dare not decide between Socrates and Theodoret on the ſubject of one of the Kings of Perſia, 9. a. Why he never would name the Centuriators of Magdebourg, not even when he endeavour'd to refute them, 182. F. How it comes to paſs, that he confirms ſome Calumnies of the Pagans, 1290. B. He is an Enemy to Kings, and his Annals are full of Lies, 2694. B. A Confutation of his Annals, 798. G. Δ.

BA. BE.

Bartholomew (Maſſacre of St.) The Apology for this Maſſacre, by whom Written, 951. a. Its Cauſes falſly repreſented, 1955. Q.
Barthius, cenſures ſeveral great Men on their placing a Modern Poet in the Rank of the Antients, 1061. D.
Bartolocci (Father) miſtakes Monſieur Amyrault for a converted Jew, 102. a. gives a high Character of his Diſſertation concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity, ibid.
Baſil (St.) his Argument againſt the Marcionites of no Force, 2167. a. & ſeq. Solves the Difficulties of the Manichæans very ill, 2487. b. would not have People truſt to the Caſtration of Eunuchs, 1007. B. A Compariſon alledged by him on this occaſion, ibid. Makes but an ill Anſwer to the Manichæans, 2485. E.
Baſilides (Duke of Muſcovy) the occaſion of his ravaging Livonia, 650. b.
Baſina, her impudent Anſwer to her Adulterer Childerick, 515. a. Her Conduct worſe than that of Helen of Troy, ibid. b.
Baſſora (Prince of) the Traffick he drives by ſelling his Mahometan Subjects Places in Paradice, and ſigning Paſſes to them, which are to be allow'd by Mahomet, 2176. a.
Baſſompierre; the firſt of this Family was the Offspring of a Woman by a Spirit, 2404. 2405. H.
Battel; It's a Folly to pretend we have gained it, when the thing it ſelf has no Conſequences, 927. The moſt ordinary Cauſes of its Inſignificancy is the victorious Commander's fearing a Peace, ibid. A.
Baſtards, the natural Reaſon of their being robuſt and quick-witted, 1341. b. Whether it is any Diſhonour to be a Baſtard, 1880 a.
Baſtardy; no Suſpicions of Baſtardy a juſt Reaſon to deprive a Prince of his Crown, 101. a, b.
Battori (Sigiſmund) confeſſes his Impotence, and is divorced, 1631. a.
Bavaria. Annals of Bavaria, by whom compoſed, 1311. a.
Bavaria (Lewis of) razed out of the Catalogue of Emperors, but replaced by the ſame Hand, and upon a publick Recantation, 787. His Reign is reckoned but as an Interregnum by Rainaldus, who gave him no other Title but that of the Bavarian, ibid. B. His Apology by Herward, condemned by the Inquiſition; and why, ibid. C.
Baudius, like to be baniſhed Holland for writing a Poem in praiſe of Spinola, 525. a.
Baudovin (Francis) a famous Civilian, changed his Religion ſeven times, 530. a. His crafty Advice to the Cardinal of Lorrain for defeating the Reformed at the Conference of Poiſſy, 531. b.
Bautru (Monſieur) wherein conſiſted his Philoſophy, 537. Why his Lady would not be called by his Name, ibid. His Anſwer to his Confeſſor at his laſt Hour, 538. b.
Bayle (Mr.) Author of this Dictionary, admires at thoſe who admire Homer's Iliads, 61. a.
Beans, who was the firſt that abſtained from them, 216. b.
Beaſts (Brute) their Actions are perhaps one of the greateſt Abyſſes that our Reaſon can be exercis'd upon, 492. a. Whether Deſcartes may juſtly be reputed the Inventer of the Opinions which he had concerning Beaſts, ibid. 2513. a. b. What the Opinion was of the ancient Philoſophers about them, ibid. E. Whether the Ancients taught, that they were only Machines or Automatons, ibid, H. Δ. Facts related of Beaſts perplex the Followers of Ariſtotle no leſs than Deſcartes, 2604. B. A Liſt of thoſe who have believ'd that they had a reaſonable Soul, ibid. D. ibid. K. The Carcaſſes of Beaſts hung up and expoſed, to keep other Beaſts of their Species within their Duty, an acknowledgment that they have Free Will, ibid. F. Authors who have maintain'd that they were no more than Machines or Automatons, ibid. K. Diverſe Opinions about the Soul of Beaſts, 2712. a. b. 2713. a. Their Regularity, how it is a good good common Place of Morality, and how not, 495. a. b.

Beatitude of Man, what is the formal and efficient Cauſe of it, 1190. G. An Opinion of Mr. Arnaud on this Head examin'd, ibid.

Beaucaire; his Talent in wording the Deciſions of the Council of Trent, 540. b. A Juggle between him and the Cardinal of Lorrain about the Jure Divino of Biſhops, 541. a.

Beaumont (Francis de) Sieur d'Adrets, his Cruelty in the Religious Wars of France, 545. b. Bathed his Sons in Blood, 548. a. Prefaces his Ordinances with St. Paul's Salutation, ibid. b. His Deformity deſcribed by Thuanus, ibid.

Beaune (James de) Treaſurer of France under Francis I. Hang'd for miſapplying the Publick Mony, 1350. b.

Beauty; how many things go to make a Woman a perfect Beauty, 1587. a. Can't maintain its Empire without the Auxiliaries of Wit, 1597. a. The Deſcription of a perfect Beauty, 310. A. B. Thirty things go to make a perfect Beauty, 1587. A △. Wherein conſiſts its force, 1597. a. The Autumn of Beauty is agreeable, 1266. O. 2062. A. There have been Cities, in which not only the Women, but the Men diſputed about Beauty, 2857. E.

Beda (Noel) his violent oppoſition to the Divorce of Henry VIII. 551. b.

Bedel (Biſhop) the Reverence of the Iriſh Rebels for him, 553.

Beings; diſtinction between Beings and half Beings, 2514. b. The Order and Gradation of Beings according to the Platoniſts, 2520. a.

Believe; nothing in the World ſo hard to a Man of Senſe as to believe, in the Opinion of Monſieur Des-barreaux, 1088 F.

Bellai (William du) what Charles V. ſaid of his Pen, 555. b. He perſuaded the Lutherans of Germany that his Maſter Francis I. had favourable Sentiments of them at bottom, at the ſame time that he was Burning their Brethren by dozens at Paris, ibid.

Bellai (Cardinal) privately married to Madam Chatillon, 558. b.

Bellarmine (Cardinal) compared to Demetrius the Silverſmith, 560. a. Compared to Leo an African, who was compared to Æſop's Bird, ibid. b. The Falſhoods publiſhed of him by ſome Proteſtant Writers, prejudicial to their own Cauſe, ibid. b. What he expunged and omitted out of the Virgin's Liturgies, 1562. b. His Controverſial Writings ſaid to have done more hurt than good to his Cauſe, 563. not to be bought in the Bookſellers Shops at Rome, 564. a. His Book de Romano Pontifice condemned by Sixtus V. for what Reaſon, 565. a. His fine Quibble when asked why ſo few Cardinals were in the Catalogue of Saints, 566. a. Clement VIII. his Character of him, 566. a. His Vow in Caſe he ſhould be made Pope, ibid. His Marks of the true Church the ſame which the Mahometans alledge for the Truth of Mahometiſme, 2115. a. in what Senſe Anſwers to him may bear the Title of Bellarminus Enervatus, according to the Roman Catholicks, 976. b. Cenſures Cardinal d'Ailly's maintaining from the appearance of of the Star, that the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt might be foretold by Aſtrological Calculations, 131. a. Forced to contradict himſelf in his Controverſies againſt different Sectaries, 275. a. New Lectures ſaid to be founded at Oxford and Cambridge for the confuting of Bellarmine, 560. C. The exceeding Praiſe given of his Controverſial Writings, 567. a. His Works of Controverſy compared to Homer, and why, ibid. His Contradictions, 2704. B. A famous Proteſtant Divine is forced to retract what he had charged Bellarmine with, 561. F. Some of his ordinary Sayings, ibid. P. He uſed to ſay there were too many Chriſtians, 3009. B.

Belleforeſt (Francis de) ſo ready a Writer, that he was ſaid to have a Mold to caſt Books, 568. Mercenary mean Authors terribly laſh'd upon his Back, 569. a.

Belliere: his Embaſſy to ſave Mary Queen of Scots, a meer Comedy, 1173. S.

Belot; his Reaſons againſt Writing learnedly in the vulgar Tongue, 571. a.

Bembus (Cardinal) why he would not have his Friends read St. Paul's Epiſtles, 572. b. Sincere in his refuſal of a Cardinalſhip, 573. b.

Benedictins; the Founder of their Order nearly related to to the Houſe of Auſtria, 266. Accuſed of Forgery, 1378. B.

Benefices; the Miniſters of Venice at the Court of Rome dare not accept of any Benefices, the State of Venice having made a Law againſt ſuch, 489. G. Beſtowed on Poets for a recompence of filthy obſcene Verſes compoſed by them, 2599. M. One turned out of his Benefices for not being able to pronounce the Letter Q rightly, 2551. G. Chriſtian Societies which have but ſmall Benefices, are Sufferers by the Inclination of the Clergy for Tranſlations, 44. b.

Benefit; The ill effects of a Benefit, eſpecially where a Woman's Dowry is the Benefit, 562. b.

Beni (Paul) his preference of Taſſo to Homer and Virgil, 576. a.

Benjamin; who was the Inventor of it, 353. a.

Benſerade; an Original in one kind of Poetry, 579. b.

Berengarius, who was the firſt Author that wrote againſt him in Defence of the real Preſence, 336. a.

Bergier; his Treatiſe of the Point of Day, Diſſert. xxxv. xxxvi.

Bern (Canton of) differ'd in three Points with Calvin, 817. b.

Bernard (St.) his Paſſion, Credulity, and Sower Temper, 583. b. 584. a. His Errors privileged, ibid. His Opinion of the Souls of the Bleſſed, 696. His Come-off upon the Falſhood of his Prophecy, ibid.

Bertelier (Philibert) Preſumptions againſt his Deputation to enquire at Noyon about Calvin's Life and Manners, 665. b. His publick Act of the City of Noyon, certifying John Calvin's Crime of Sodomy an arrand Forgery, 602. b.

Bertrada, Wife of Philip I. of France, her extraordinary Addreſs in managing two Husbands at one time, and making them live well together, 1325. a.

Bervaldus, a Phanatick in Chronology, 597. a.

Berytus; how it came to be a Titular Metropolitical See under Theodoſius the Younger, 594. b.

Beſſarion (Cardinal) his excellent Thought upon ſeeing a Canonization at Rome, 557. a.

Beton (David) Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, Murthered in the Revolution of Religion in Scotland, 1840. A.

Bevilagua; Nuncio at Nimmegen, offered to viſit the Miniſters of the Proteſtant Princes, if they'd promiſe to return his Viſits, 969. a. n.

Beza (Theodore) does not think fit to explain the ſecret Reaſons of his quitting Lauſanne, 608. b. His Book de Puniendis Hæreticis turn'd on the Proteſtants, 609. a. Accuſed of an horrible Abomination, but without any Grounds, 614. 615. a. Some Lutherans, as well as Papiſts, twitted him with Candida the Taylor's Wife, 616. a. Cruelly reproached on account of his New Teſtament, 609. a. His undermatching himſelf ſomewhat ſuſpicious, 615. His extraordinary Beauty, ibid. Falſly ſaid to have own'd Bellarmine's Victory over the Proteſtants, 560. a. Vindicated from a Cruel Invective of Scioppius, 574. b. Cenſured on his Tartneſs and Diſingenuity, 534. and on his calling Baudovin a wretched Pedant, 535. a. His account of Calvin preferrable to Mainbourg's or Varillas's in all Matters which concern not Calvin's Reputation, 816. a. His great Moderation in ſpeaking of the Tragical end of Henry II. a great Perſecutor of the Proteſtants, 1618. a. The State with which he uſed to walk at one time in the Streets of Paris, 1708. b. Is cleared of an abominable Scandal which he has been charged with, 423. B. Whether he was of Opinion that Bellarmine had run down all the Proteſtant Controverſiſts, 560. C. A Bloody Invective of Scioppius againſt him, 573. N. He is calumniated grievouſly, 607. A. Kept Company in his Youth with a Woman upon promiſe of Marriage, which afterwards was executed, 608. C. Suppoſed to be the Author of the Book, Entituled, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos, Diſſer. 3090. 3091. He looks upon the Hierarchy as a Fundamental Abuſe, 1840. b. His Story of a Woman and her two Daughters, 2584. Y.

Bias; his Mark of a virtuous Woman, 1785. a. A Maxim of this Philoſopher, 1785. D. His Dilemma about Marriage might be turn'd otherwiſe, 1785.

Bible: The Alteration of the Hebrew Text, with regard to the Age of the Patriarchs, 138. b. A Queſtion ſaid to be made to Bochartus, about this Holy Book, 649. D. Luther's Verſion, and that of the Low-Countries, ſaid to be Defective, 1131. G. A deteſtable Poſition of a Proteſtant Divine, with regard to the Evidence of the Divinity of this Book, 2371. C. What Politician is accuſed of having ſpoken againſt the Bible, 2658. I.

Bible of Zurich, Reviſed and Publiſh'd at Lyons by the Spaniſh Divines, 620. a. Contains the Principles of all Arts and Sciences, according to Alſtedius, 186.

Bibliander (Theodore) had a hand in Tranſlating the Zurich Bible, and Tranſlated the whole Alcoran, 619. b. Saluted his Cat, miſtaking her for his Maid, ibid.

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1551. Vol. IV. 2439.

Bibliotheque; The Bibliotheque of the Jeſuit Authors, by whom begun, and by whom continu'd, 173. A. B. Qualities requiſite to make a good Bibliotheque, and the ordinary Defect of thoſe who undertake them, ibid. A living Bibliotheque, who ſo called, 1085. D.

Bibulus; what kind of War he made upon Julius Cæſar, 530. b. His publick Orders at that time, call'd Archilochia, and why, ibid.

Bigamiſts excluded from the Prieſthood by the Canons, 741. E. 743. B.

Bigots juſtify all their Paſſions at the Expence of Religion, 1719. F.

Billant (Adam) called the Virgil of the Joyners, 625. Does more Honour to the Joyners, than to the Poets, ibid. b.

Bion, the Philoſopher, valued himſelf on being the Son of a Whore, 626. b. Inſtances of his Wit, 627. a. Was one of the firſt who made a Jeſt of Religion, ibid. b. Why he wiſhed he was a Tart, ibid. A fine Deſcription of his Repentance, and exceeding Superſtition, before his Death, 628. a. The Anſwer attributed by Euſtachius to Antiſthenes the Cynick, is truly Bion's, ibid. b.

Bionei Sermones; what Horace underſtood by them, 627. a.

Birds; a Receipt for underſtanding the Language of Birds, 2894. a.

Biron (Mareſchal) a terrible Reprimand given him by Henry III. and his ſubmiſſive Behaviour, 1432. a. His Opinion about Henry IV's retiring, when hard preſs'd, into England, 1424. b. The Ground of his being ſuſpected for a Proteſtant, 1425. b. His Qualifications, ibid. His Maxim about prolonging a War, 1428. a.

Biron (Mareſchal Duke de) why he laughed at the Unfortunate Earl of Eſſex, 1428. a. His Character the ſame as that of Achilles in Homer, and Argantes in Torquato Taſſo, ibid. b. 1429. a. His inſupportable Pride and Vanity, 1428. 1429. b. His Life thrice ſav'd in Battel by Henry IV. Affronts the Queen of Navarre, and is mortified for it, 2352. b.

Birth; Great Men are willing to paſs over the Meanneſs of their Birth, 199. b. The Errors of People concerning the Birth of thoſe whom Providence has exalted above their Birth, 2910. a.

Biſhoprick; a kind of Denomination which needs not the ſame Arts to preſerve it, by which it is ſometimes obtain'd, 188. a.

Biſhops; the Title improperly given to ſeveral among the Ancients, 2705. b. An Apology for them that take up Arms, by whom written, and in whoſe Favour, 2647. a. Their Reſidence ſhewn by Experience to be no Preſervative againſt Corruptions, 1772. b. See Epiſcopacy.

Blanc (Le) ſuſpected of carrying on an Intrigue with Mareſchal Turenne, for reuniting the Reformed, 542. b. Reduc'd the Controverſie between Proteſtant and Papiſt to nothing, ibid. a.

Blanche (Queen of France); the Foundation of her Politicks, 903. a. Her affronting a Lady that gave her Child, afterwards S. Lewis, Suck, when ſhe her ſelf was in a high Fever, ibid. b. Her hard Uſage of the Queen her Daughter, S. Lewis's Wife, 904. a.

Blandrata, his Corrupting Tranſylvania and Poland with the Socinian Impiety, when ſo unſucceſsful elſewhere; accounted for by Mr. Malebranche's Combination of natural and moral Cauſes, 630. b. His Orthodox but Inſincere Confeſſion of Faith, 632. a. His unhappy End imputed to the Judgment of God, by Socinus and by Mainbourg, ibid.

Blaſphemy; the horrid Blaſphemy of an Engliſh Phanatick, compared with the Blaſphemy of Caligula, 1552. D. A terrible ſingular Blaſphemy, 2999. B.

Bleſkennius, his ſcandalous Account of the Manners of the Iſlanders, 1767. b.

Blondel (David) the Character of his Wit and Memory, 634. C. Has forgot a great many Authors who have affirm'd the Fact concerning Pope Joan, 1339. B. His great Talents, eſpecially Memory, 635. a. The Judgment of a Lady upon his Volume of the Sybils, ibid. b. His Book proving the Story of Pope Joan a Fable, offended ſome Proteſtants, 636. a. His Invectives againſt the Rump who beheaded King Charles I. and the States, who, inſtead of Revenging his Death, made Leagues with Cromwel, blam'd in Holland, 638. a. Why Sirmondus called him The Breaker of open Doors, ibid. b. The Ground of accuſing him of Plagiariſm, ibid. Said to have a Penſion for confuting the Story of Pope Joan, and not writing againſt Baronius, 639. b.

Blondel (Francis) why he thought the uſe of Chinchina in Phyſick a mortal Sin, 641. a.

Blondel (Francis) Profeſſor in Mathematicks; whether a Paſſage in his Travels, mention'd Pag. 641. b. ought, tho' true, to be ſuppreſs'd, 643. a. The croſſing his Genius ſpoil'd his being a good Merchant, or a good Poet, 643. a.

Blood (Circulation of the) underſtood by Ceſalpinus long before Harvey, 927. a.

Blount, his Tranſlation of Philoſtratus, enrich'd by impious Notes taken from Baron Herbert's Manuſcripts, 199. I. His Character and Tragical End, ibid.

Boaſters: A Deſcription of an impudent Boaſter, 808. a. b.

Bocace gave over reading the Bible, becauſe he thought Poetry was the Function which God had called him to, 644. b. His Decameron reliſh'd by the Proteſtants, 645. a. Why it has not been put in the Liſt of forbidden Books by the Inquiſition, 646. a. His Picture in Florence does not ſhew he had any thing in him agreeable, 1324. b. His Miſtreſs in his Fiammetta and Philocopo, was a Baſtard Daughter of Robert King of Naples, 1324. b.

Boccalini (Trajano) an Inſtance of the Difference between the Application of Rules, and the Act of Diſcourſing on them, 646. b. His ill Conduct the ground of a general Reflection on Lawyers, Phyſicians, and Divines, 647. a. Why he is liken'd to Terence, 647. b. Is murder'd by the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's Orders, ibid. Againſt what kind of Authors ought he to have made Apollo raiſe his Ban and Arrierban, 1004. F.

Bochartus play'd at Shuttlecock with the Queen of Sweden, 649. b. A Paſſage in Strabo about Telmeſſus wrong read by him, 2856. E. His Conjecture upon a Place of Suidas, where he ſpeaks of the Lobſters of Tenedos, is one of the beſt he has made, 2856. F.

Bodin, with all his Learning in the Law, had no Succeſs in his Pleas, 133. a. Believed the Exiſtence of Genii, which produced and preſerved all Sublunary Beings, 808. b. His Quality and Character, 654. b. 656. a. His Impiety and irreligion, ibid. a. b. His preference of the Jewiſh Religion above all others, 652. a. He aſſerts the Rights of the People above the Prerogative, 653. b. Maintains that Kings are bound by their Contracts, 657. a. Damns the depoſing Doctrine, and that of reſiſting even againſt Tyrants, without an expreſs Command from God, ibid. What means he allows to get rid of Tyrants, 658. a. Sides with the League againſt Henry IV. after all theſe fine Doctrines, ibid. The Anſwer that ſuch a Law was to be found on the back of the Salick Law made to him, and on what Occaſion, ibid. b.

Bodleian Library, (Catalogue of the) Books miſplaced in it, 2644. a. Peter Jarrige the Jeſuit confounded in this Catalogue with another Jeſuit call'd Peter Jarric, and the Work of the former aſcribed to the latter, 1746.

Bodies; how the Living differ from the not Living, according to Deſcartes, 1151. a. Are incapable of Thought, 1189. b. The Qualities of Bodies, which ſtrike our Senſe, are no more than Appearances, 2619. B.

Bodies, (dead) that have remained exempt from Corruption, 146. b.

Boethius; the Difference between his Objections and Anſwers about a Providence, 2630. a.

Bohemia (King of) his Exerciſes at School ſhew'd in the Vatican to Travelers, 188. b.

Boi (Syracuſano) ranſom'd himſelf from the Corſairs of Barbary by ſome Leſſons at Cheſſe, 658.

Bolſec; his Scandals of Calvin ſuſpected even by Roman Catholick Authors, 665. b. 666. a.

Bomberg (Daniel) the firſt who printed Hebrew Books at Venice, 1515. and the laſt who printed that Language well, 666.

Bonet (Honoratus de) Author of a Book, entituled, l'Arbre de Battailes, in which he aſſerts the Truth of Pope Joan's Hiſtory, 1339. a. Some Miſtakes about this Book, ibid.

Bongars (James) his Latin Letters, why learn'd by the Dauphin when he firſt learn'd Latin, and preferred for the uſe of young Princes to the beſt Claſſick Authors, 673. b. He cauſed the Queſtions to be publiſh'd, which the Jeſuit Cotton had drawn up to be ask'd the Devil, 673. b.

Bonnivet (Admiral) what he got by ſtealing in at a Trap-Door into the Queen of Navarre's Bed, 558. b. Thrice attempts to Raviſh Margaret Queen of Navarre, his Maſter's Siſter, 2339. a.

Books; as difficult to make juſt Additions to a Book, as to make a juſt Abridgment, 2138. b. Some People think the Titles of their Books may make them live, 197. What

What kind of Books at this time are like Mony cry'd down, 984. a. The fureſt way to make a Book ſell, 115. a. Why Zealots let ſome Books paſs for ſeveral Years, and then attack them, 122. a. Licenſers and Cenſors of Books, very negligent in their Function, a memorable Inſtance of this, 78. b. Thoſe which abound with Quotations, and thoſe produced from one's own ſtock, compared in point of Excellence, 1188. The perfecteſt and moſt Pious liable to Cenſure, 1393. a. The Book Entitled, Mulieres non ſunt homines; its honeſt and ingenious Deſign, 1392. b. An inſtance of the Impudence of thoſe in Holland in falſifying Books, 2507. b. The miſchief of falſe Figures or Prints before them, 694. a. Who was the firſt Philoſopher that Publiſhed a Book, 237. a. A Cenſure on thoſe who put off the buying the firſt Editions of Books, in hopes of better and cheaper Editions afterwards, 250. a. The cheapneſs of them upon ſome occaſion in Antient Times, 355. a. The Curioſity of People for cenſured Books; a lively Inſtance of this in the Prelates of France, 2647. b.

Borri (Cavalier) his horrible Doctrines, 683. a. What he ſaid, when he heard he had been burnt in Effigy at Rome, 633. a. A Doubt whether his Chiave del Gabinetto, or the Count de Gabalis ought to paſs for the Original, 684. a. Boaſted of his being deſcended from Burrus, Nero's Governer, 684. b. n.

Boſc (Peter du) Miniſter of Caen, his great Qualities and Talents, 688. His Doctrine of the Obedience due to Kings, 689. a. preached with his Hat on, 689. b.

Boſquet (Francis) Biſhop of Monpellier, a remarkable Paſſage about the Superſtitions of Popery left out of the ſecond Edition of his Hiſtory of the Gallican Church, and preſerved by Archbiſhop Uſher, 690. a.

Boſſulus, a Frenchman, Preceptor to Don Carlos, Son of Philip the IId. He writ only the Heads of his publick Orations, and ſupply'd the reſt Extempore, 691. b.

Boſſuet (Biſhop of Meaux) his Miſtake on occaſion of the Ubiquity and the firſt Authors of this Tenet, 3028. G.

Boucher (John) a Doctor of Sorbon, ſuppoſed to have abetted John Clement, Murtherer of Henry III. of France, 395. a. honoured for it, and preferred by the Spaniards in the Netherlands, 696. Spoke the Funeral Oration of Philip the IId. at Tournay, ibid.

Bouhours; the Uſefulneſs of his Advice to Authors about ranging their Words, 1185. b.

Bourbon (Conſtable of) prompted to the Siege of Rome by Predictions, 117. H. Saves his Life by his Horſe's ſhod the Reverſe way, 375. 376.

Bourbon (James de) impriſoned by his Wife in a Caſtle in Italy, 2269. b. He makes his Eſcape to Tarentum, delivers up the Place, and goes into France to turn Monk, ibid.

Bourbon (Cardinal of) aſpires to the Crown of France at the Sollicitation of the League, 1693. a. recommended by his Maſter Lewis the XIth to Edward the IVth, as a fit Confeſſor for a Prince of Pleaſures, 1157. b.

Bourbon (Charles of) what provoked him to go over to Charles the Fifth, and turn ſuch an Enemy to Francis the Firſt. 1350. b.

Bourbon (Houſe of) how much obliged to M. Schomberg, 1628. b.

Bourdeaux; its Parliament cenſured, 1711. K. An Inſtance of their Courage, 835. L.

Bourdelot (Abbé) the Tricks he played Bochartus at the Court of Sweden, 649. b.

Bourgoing (Edme) Prior of the Convent, to which James Clement the Aſſaſſin of Henry the Third, belonged; praiſes his Pupil from the Pulpit, and compares him to Judith, 1785. a.

Bourignon (Antoniette) a She-Fanatick, who believed ſhe ſaw in an Extacy how Adam was made before he ſinned, and how he alone could produce without a Female, 80. a. What Spirit and Temper ſhe was of, 702. a. b. Why ſhe would give no Alms, 700. a. The near Agreement between her Notion of the Monſtrouſneſs of Man's being divided into two imperfect Sexes, and that of the Philoſophers of the Terra Auſtralis, 2638. a. b.

Brachmanes, not of the number of thoſe Philoſophers who went naked, 1407. a.

Brandenbourg (Elector of) writes to Richard Cromwell of the Invaſion of the Swedes in Poland, and their oppreſſing the reformed Religion, 1012. K.

Brandon (Charles) Duke of Suffolk, his Amours with the Princeſs of England watched, and diſappointed in France, 1348. B.

Brantome; what he ſays of the Birth of Don John of Auſtria. His falſe Thought concerning the Children of Great Lords; cited 840. b. His eaſie Apology for the Lewdneſs of Joan of Naples, 2327. b. What he ſays of the Beauty of Donna Maria of Arragon, 313. a. and of the Birth of Don John of Auſtria, 635. A. A falſe reaſoning of this Author about the Children of great Lords, 697. b. To praiſe Francis the Firſt, he ſpeaks with too much Contempt of the other Princes leagued againſt Charles the Fifth, 941. A. Cites the Prince of Orange impertinently on occaſion of Charles the Fifth's Sentiments of Religion, 947. S. His Relation concerning Mary of England, Queen of France, is different from that of Mezeray and Varillas, 1348. C. According to him 'tis poſſible that a Queen may impoſe a Suppoſititious Child in the midſt of a great Court, ibid. He commits two Faults with regard to a Cup which Helena had made in the ſhape of her Breaſts, 1586. A. What he ſays of the Liberality of the Cardinal of Lorrain to the Poor, and to the Ladies, 1975. a. What he thinks of the Ladies who followed their Husbands to the holy Land, 1996. b. Says four things with regard to Joan of Naples, which are all falſe, 2263. b.

Braſil; the Savages of this Country have no Religion, 1917. g.

Braſs; Stories about a brazen Head, 461. b.

Bravery; whether there be any Machinal Connexion between it and the Love of Women, 1631. B Δ. Is, of all the Vertues, the moſt ſubject to fanatical Tranſports, 2527. b. Is often joined with Softneſs, and a Love of Pleaſures, 2838. A.

Brentius, a flaming Ubiquitarian, is againſt allowing the Zuinglians a Toleration, 755. b.

Breviary, of Burgos, ordered to be purged of the Legends, but all in vain, 1135. a.

Brevity, in Stile, the way to Barrenneſs, 48. a.

Brezé (Peter de) Lord of Varenne, his witty manner of reproaching Lewis the XIth, on his aſſuming a Deſpotical Power, 711. a.

Brezé (Mareſchal de) his Bluntneſs to Cardinal Richlieu, 713. b. Gets himſelf prayed for in the Proteſtant Church of Saumur, 205. I. Draws his Sword upon the Mareſchal de Chatillon, and why, 2097. b.

Briefs; ſome judicious Remarks about the Style that ought to be obſerved in the Pope's Briefs, 282. a. b.

Briſſac (M.) his generous Remonſtrances to Henry the IId of France, againſt the Treaty of Chateau in Cambreſis, 1613. b.

Britain; the Gallantries of the Britiſh Ladies how publick, when the Emperor Severus was in that Province, 1696. b.

Brothels; an Apology for them, by whom written, 801. a.

Broukolakas; what the Greeks underſtand thereby, 398.

Brueyere cited, 706. 2021. & alibi.

Brueys; how he puſhes Mr. Jurieu on his Prophecies, 1823. a. His reflections on Mr. Jurieu's gay Humour in the Day of his Brethren's Adverſity, 2621. G G.

Bruſſels; whether the bombarding of Bruſſels by Mareſchal Villeroy had been fairly foretold by Mrs. Bourignon, 2590. B.

Brutes; the Opinion that Brutes have no feeling nor Paſſions, to whom firſt aſcribed, 2514. a. b. The Opinion that Brutes are meer Machines, to whom firſt owing in theſe latter Ages, ibid. a. Why Deſcartes may be notwithſtanding reputed the Inventer of this Opinion, 2515. b. The Opinions of ſeveral ancient Philoſophers about the Souls of Brutes, 2516. a. & ſeq. A Book ſhewing that Brutes have rational Souls, and act with an Underſtanding ſuperior to that of Man, written upon a ridiculous Occaſion, 2603, 2604. a. The impious and the Epicureans affect to bring Brutes as near to Men as poſſible in Perfection, 2605. a. No Difference between them and Man, but Religion, according to a Father of the Church, 2606. b. allowed a Degree of Reaſon, Liberty and Virtue by the Socinians, and even to be capable of Rewards and Puniſhments, 2607. a.

Brutum Fulmen, an Error of Mr. de Thou, about this Book, 1703. a.

Brutus (Junius) not diſpleaſed to be thought he was deſcended from him, who delivered the Commonwealth from the Tyranny of Tarquin, 873. It's much doubted, whether he was or not, ibid. The forbidding his and Caſſius's Images to be carried in a Funeral Proceſſion, only gave them a greater Luſtre, 690. b.

Brutus and Cicero; how they differ'd in their Taſte of Eloquence, 739. I.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 1459.

Brutus (Lucius Junius) condemns his own Children to Death, 731. C.

Bucer endeavours to make appear, that the Doctrine of Luther and that of Zuinglius, about the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, are the ſame at bottom, 1703. a.

Buchanan; the Agreement between him and the Popiſh Writers for the League in Republican Maxims, 495. a. The Preſumptions are all againſt him in his Difference with Cambden, in the Hiſtory of Mary Queen of Scots, 830. b, always went with a Staff and a Ring, a. The bitter Invectives of ſome Roman Catholick Authors, particularly of Barclay, againſt him, 744. b. 745. a, b. Whether his Political Maxims be the Maxims of Proteſtants in general, ibid.

Budæus, Inventor of the Word Perfectibilibis, 490. a.

Bullen (Anne) her ſpreading her Petticoats when beheaded, for fear her Feet ſhould be ſeen, an Inſtance of her Modeſty, 661. a. Her being called the Engliſh Hackney Mare, and Francis the Iſt's Mule, are Forgeries, ibid. a. b. Her greateſt Crime, 662. b.

Bulls, Popes Bulls for the making Biſhops in France, how prejudicial to the Rights of the Gallican Church, 2156 a. A Bull, declaring the King of Navarre incapable of Succeeding to the Crown of France by reaſon of his Hereſie, 570. a.

Burgundy, (Parliament of) its little regard to the Royal Authority, 555. a.

Burleſque, its Defence, 1058.

Burnett, (Biſhop) his Remark on the Conduct of the Wittemberg Divines, in relation to Harry VIII's Divorce, liable to exceptions from a malicious Wit, 506. b.

Burnett (Doctor) ſaying that Monſieur de Thou Printed the ſecond Volume of Cambden's Annals from a Copy furniſhed to him by the Author, ſhewn to be a great Error, 831. a. b. the Supplement to his travels cenſur'd on the ſubject of Cavalier Borri, 685. b. An Examination of the Difference between him and Varillas on Occaſion of Cambden's Hiſtory, 830. 831. H. What he ſays of the Divines appointed to reviſe King Edward's Liturgy, 1752. b. A notable Saying of his about the Church of England's not defining the manner of the real Preſence; ſo that Perſons of different Sentiments in this Point may be of the ſame Worſhip and Communion, without declaring themſelves, 553. b.

Butas, how the Name of this Author, by various Corrections, became at laſt Plutarch, 786. Z.

C A.

Cabala, finds every thing in every Text of Scripture, 139. A. B. They lay a great ſtreſs on the Book of the Creation, 138. A.

Cacus, The Son of Vulcan, why the Romans ſaid that he breathed Fire and Flame at his Mouth, 2670. B. ad Fin.

Cæſar (Julius) why he ruin'd a Villa, where his Mother had been confin'd, 690. b.

Cain, Opinions concerning the Mark which God ſet upon him, 805. a. ſeveral ways of accounting for his fear of being ſlain when there were ſo few to be afraid of, 804. b. St. Cyril's Opinion, what it was made Cain's Offering unacceptable to God, 805. b. Why God would take cognizance immediately of his Crime, 804. A. ad Fin.

Cajetan (Cardinal) thought to be the true Author of the Books, which paſs under the name of Boccalin, 647. b.

Cajetan, cenſured for denying to Adam a perfect Knowledge of the Stars and of the Elements, 79. a.

Calais, when taken from the Engliſh, and by whom, 1294. H.

Calcagnini, Convicted of Falſhood with regard to the Venus of Apelles, 288. H. Attacks Cicero, 205. a.

Calderinus, (Domitius) falſly placed by the Proteſtants among the Witneſſes to the Truth, 803. b. The firſt that ventur'd to Comment on the difficult Poets, 808. what he uſed to ſay to his Friends when they would make him go to Maſs, 809. a. reckon'd by the Proteſtants among the Witneſſes of the Truth, ibid.

Calderona, an Actreſs to Philip, 455. b.

Calendar, the Reforming it, propoſed to the Council of Conſtance, 132. b. 2816. E. Δ. Who were the firſt Authors that publiſh'd ſome Thoughts concerning this Reformation, ibib. Three Means propoſed for it by John Maria de Tholoſſanis, ibid.

Calepin, a Judgment on Calepin's Dictionary, 2550. C.

Calenus (Olenus) a Southſayer of Etruria, how he would have Juggled the Romans out of the Empire of the World, 810. a.

Caligula. The Complaint he made of his own Reign, 1649. b. his Converſation with Jupiter and harſh treatment of his Godſhip, 811. a. b. giving the Captain of the Guard always ſome Bawdy word out of Contempt, the chief cauſe of his Death, ibid. thrice decreed to Death by Tiberius, is ſaved by the Interceſſions of Sertorius Macro, 2088. a. obliges this ſame Macro and his Wife to kill themſelves with their own Hands, 2087. a. His Queſtion to a Comedian and Favourite of his, 289. His Impiety, 111. G. His Extravagancies to Honour the Memory of Druſilla, 1129. C. The Jews refuſe to place his Statue in the Temple of Jeruſalem, 191. b. Gives his Licenſe to ſeveral Books which had been ſuppreſs'd by Order of Senate, on account of the Invectives in them, 884. K. Complains that no great Calamities happened in his time, 1649. R. The means that Macron makes uſe of to Inſinuate himſelf into his Favour, 2086. b. His Ingratitude, ibid. and 2087. b. Uſed to ſay, that his Mother was Born in Inceſt between Auguſtus and his Daughter Julia, 2369. a.

Callimachus, his Maxim, that a great Volume is always a great Evil, 1003. A.

Callipædia, what Judgment ought to be made of this Book and its Author, 2533. D.

Callirhoe, The manner of her loſing her Maidenhead, an inſtance of the fatal Power of a falſe Religion, 2683. b.

Calvary (Mount) Adam ſuppoſed to be Buried there, 811. I.

Calvin (John) the virulency of the Book written againſt him, intituled, Calvinus Judaizans, by Hunnius a Lutheran Divine, 1732. a. 1658. a. the Device and Motto before the firſt Edition of his Inſtitutions, 816. a. the three Points which he refuſed to ſubmit to in compliance with the Canton of Bern, 817. b. what he thought of the Revelations, 818. a. tax'd with Frigidity or Impotency, 819. a. his ſending his Son to be cured at the Shrine of St. Hubert a Fable, 810. a. the reaſon of his changing his Name from Cauvin to Calvin, 813. a. what turn might a cunning Satyriſt give to Calvin's great Vertues, 820. his alleging St. Chryſoſtom's Example on an occaſion, a ſly way of threatning the Magiſtrates of Geneva with an Inſurrection, 602. b. Perſecutes Blandrata by Letters, and drives him out of Poland, 631. b. charg'd by Caſtalio for having wrote a Preface to a Book that was a Banter on Holy Things, 889. b. his bitter charges againſt the Court of Rome, compar'd with thoſe of Peter Caſtellan, Great Almoner of France, 894. b. Calvin, Beza, and others, too haſty in their Judgments of Perſons, who ſhew'd ſome favour to the Reformation, 897. a. A violent Enemy to Ariſtotle, 367. a. An attempt towards clearing him of having ſpoken indecently of Sarah and Abraham, on Sarah's deſiring her Husband to make uſe of Hagar, 2678. b. His Doctrine on this Point much purer than that of the Fathers, St. Auſtin, St. Ambroſe, &c. 2680. a. Never was in Prieſt's Orders, nor ever proceeded beyond the ſimple Tonſure, 814. A. Was Ignorant, there had been two Seneca's, 814. A. When and why he publiſh'd his Inſtitutions, 814. B. Refuſes to ſubmit to the Deciſions of the Synod of the Canton of Bern, 816. F. Praiſed for his not having written on the Revelations, 818. M. Silly Stories told of him, ibid. n. His Diſintereſtedneſs, ibid. His Quarrels with Caſtalio, 889 G. He's reproach'd with having too greedily pick'd up any little Stories of his Enemies, 889. G. He does not ſpeak more ſtrongly againſt the Popes and Court of Rome than Caſtellan, 907. b. Whether ever he was in England, 1099. A. Some Preliminary Queſtions and Reſponſes very Impious, which he ſays Caſtalio made uſe of before he drank off his Glaſs of Wine, 889. G. Goes to Paris, at his return from ſtudying the Law, 2275. a. Treated ſome Perſons roughly, who were Protected by the Queen of Navarre, 2178. a. Gives his Judgment roundly of the Conduct of Sarah and Abraham, 2678. H. 2679. I. Makes uſe of Phraſes in his Catechiſm concerning the Lord's Supper, which ſeem to admit of a real Preſence, 2703. a. n. Calumniated by a Lutheran, 3028. b.

Calviniſts, had no form of Religious Worſhip at the time that Beza turn'd the Pſalms into Metre, 2205. a. Their Re-union with the Lutherans never to be accompliſh'd, as long as the Judges are Eccleſiaſticks, 1723. a. Violence exerciſed on them by the Lutherans, 1735. B. Are falſly accuſed of deſigning to introduce an equality of Conditions, 2817. A. ad med. Why all attemps for uniting the Calviniſts and Lutherans have been hitherto is unſucceſsful, and why 'tis probable they ever will. 1755. a.

Calviniſm, look'd on as a Kingdom of Antichriſt, no leſs than Popery, by Matthias Hoe, a famous Lutheran Divine and Interpreter of the Revelations, 1685. Whether the Doctrines of Calviniſm tend to Indulge our Luſts and Paſſions, 1143. b. 1145. b. The Judgment which ſome Lutherans make of Calviniſme, to wit, that it's an Antichriſt as bad as the Popiſh Antichriſt, 1685.

Calvino, Turciſmus cited in relation to Beza, 616. a.

Calvinus Judaizans, The Hiſtory of this Book, 1731. I.

Calumniators, are treated with too much Indulgence, 267. b. There is no ſhameful Artifice that they are not capable of, 306. 307. K. The beſt way to be reveng'd of them, is ſometimes not to Anſwer them, 647. a. Politicians find it the Intereſt of the Publick not to Diſcourage them too much, 1103. b. A good ſaying of Simonides concerning Calumniators, 1146. I. ad fin. How treated in the Days of Gregory the Great, 1463. a. b. 1464. a. A way to ſtop the Mouths of your ſly Inuendo Calumniators, 2090. b. They have nothing to fear when they are Powerful, 2327. a. When Hereſie is the Point they ſeldom or never meet with the Puniſhment they deſerve, 1997. b.

Calumnies, Conditions requiſite to make 'em Succeed, 561. a. The ſuppoſed Occaſion of Apelles his Drawing his fine Picture of Calumny, 287. a. b. In what Caſes we ought to deſpiſe Calumny, 382. G. Thoſe which are eaſily Diſprov'd, do a Service to thoſe who are Defamed, 587. a. Groſs and Diabolical Calumnies, which have prov'd of Advantage to their Authors, 1350. G. ad Fin. The uſefulneſs of Calumny in Religious Diſputes, 1157. a. What the conſideration of ſome Calumnies forc'd from St. Baſil, 2702. a. The credulity of the People, with regard to it, 2703. b.

Camden, his lodging the MSS. of the ſecond Part of his Annals in the Hands of Du Puy, a Printer at Paris, ſome ground to ſuſpect that the firſt Part was curtail'd by James I. 830. b. The Noſe of his Statue pull'd off for having performed the part of a Faithful Hiſtorian, 283. a. Why he would not have his Annals Tranſlated into Engliſh, ibid. Some ground for thinking he had no other hand in the Annals, which go under his Name, than barely the tranſlating them into Latin, 832. b. Preſumptions for the Truth of his Account of Mary Queen of Scots, in oppoſition to that of Bucanan, 830. b. His Teſtimony concerning Bucanan's Repentance thought to be not the moſt ſolid, 745. F. How a part of the Memoirs which he made uſe of came to be loſt, 832. M.

Cambrai; a powerful League made there againſt the Venetians, 2017. D.

Cambreſis (Chateau in) its Treaty, how ſhameful and diſadvantageous to France, 1614.

Cambridge (Univerſity of) taught Bodin's Republick in the Schools, at the time that Bodin was in England with the Duke of Alançon, 653. a.

Camels; in great Veneration among the Turks, 2104. C C. According to them there ſhall be a Reſurrection of Camels, ibid.

Cameron (John) what he could ſay of King James, 833. a. Dyes a Martyr for Paſſive Obedience, 833. b. Had favourable Thoughts of the Church of England, 835. a. His Conference with Tilenus, 833. A. Is like to be Murthered for Preaching Paſſive Obedience, ibid. C. Believed that the Reformation wanted Reforming, ibid. H.

Camillus (Julius) his bold Undertaking to teach Francis I. Greek and Latin to perfection in a Month, 1356.

Camillus (Marcus Furius) the moſt Heroick of all his Actions, 836. a. The Continency of the Ladies of his Family from Generation to Generation, 837. b.

Campian the Jeſuit, his Diſpute with Whitaker, 2035. b.

Camus (Mr. le) Biſhop of Bellai; his impertinent manner of retorting the Devotions paid to the Bleſſed Virgin, in his Diſputes with the Proteſtants, 1345. a.

Cana (the Marriage of) who were the Bridegrooms and Bride, 1754. E. Whether they ever Conſummated the Marriage, ibid.

Canathus, a Fountain near Nauplia, its Vertue, 1815. a.

Canonizations; the Expences of them condemned by Hadrian VI. 1564. The Expence of it on one Occaſion, 1357. b.

Canons (Evangelical) to whom ought they to be aſcribed, 210. b. The difference between them and the Harmony of Ammonius, 211. a.

Canticles; two Canticles made by Adam in the Library of the Eſcurial; one when he firſt ſaw Eve, the other after the Fall, 81. b.

Canticles (the Book of) the Judgment of Caſtalio on this Book, 888. a.

Canus Julius; his Anſwer to one who ask'd him what he thought of the Soul, juſt as he was going to be Executed, 668. b.

Capilupi (Lelio) his Cento Virgilianus commended, and ſome Lines of it quoted, Diſſert. 3117.

Capilupus (Camillus) extremely admired for his applying Virgil's Words to repreſent things Foreign to that Poet's Thought, 842. a. His Cento againſt the Monks inimitable, ibid.

Capiſtran (John) the Power of his Eloquence, 843. a. and of his Prayers, ibid.

Capiſtran, a Cordelier, obliged the Jews to wear the Letter Tau, as a Badge to be known by, 2328. b.

Capitol; the Dogs which watched the Capitol did not Bark by Day at thoſe who came into the Temple to offer up their Devotions, 595. C. ad med. An application of this to the myſtical Dogs, ibid.

Cappadocia; its Horſes appropriated to the uſe of the Roman Emperors, and interdicted the very Conſuls, 845. The low Price of Slaves and Oxen there, 845. b. When it became a Province of the Roman Empire, 328. Its great Riches at that time, 329. a.

Captains; what Qualities are neceſſary for great Captains, in order to their ſucceeding in their Enterprizes, 918. C. Several great Captains have dreaded the Sovereign Judge of the World, upon thinking of the Blood they had ſpilt even in Wars which they thought juſt, ibid. ad fin. Some Captains have loved their Pleaſure, but loved their Glory more, 1587. b.

Capuchins; when the Order commenced, 2287. b. 'Tis not true that Bernardine Ochinus was Founder of it, ibid. The Indignation of Pope Paul III. againſt the whole Order, and the occaſion of it, ibid. G. The Capuchins of Paris unfortunate in a Piece of Forgery, 1927. b.

Caracalla; the Saying of a Veſtal whom he put to Death for Impudicity, 1798. a. He is the true Son, and not Son in-Law of Julia, whom he Married, 1798. Kills his Brother Geta in his Mother's Arms, 1797. When Proclaimed an Aſſociate in the Empire, and by whoſe means, 1800. a. Why he Perſecuted the Peripateticks, and wou'd have burnt Ariſtotle's Books. Puts four Veſtals to Death, one of which he had enjoyed, 1798. a. When, and on what occaſion proclaimed Emperor by the Army, 1799. b.

Caraccioli; his Averſion for Mice made a means by Joan of Naples, of diſcovering her Love for him, 851. a. gave his Queen a Box on the Ear for refuſing him the Principality of Salerno, 851.

Cardan; his falſe Prediction about Henry IId. of France, 1618. b. Deplores his being Impotent from 21 to 31. What he attributes it to, 852. a. Was rather a Superſtitious Man, than an Eſprit fort, 852. D. b. Refuſed Five hundred Crowns to give Edward VI. the Titles the Pope refuſed him, ibid. Was rather a Fanatick than an Atheiſt, 853. a. Would fain have been thought the firſt that calculated the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt, when there had been four before him Guilty of the ſame Impiety, 855. b.

Cardinals; a Cardinal of Quality a competent Judge of Beauty, 310. B. When they firſt began to keep Hounds and Horſes, and affect Luxury in their Furniture, 1618. b. The reaſon why they are not Holy according to Bellarmin is, becauſe they aſpire to be moſt Holy, 565. P.

Carians; the firſt who wore Creſts upon their Helmets, 2713. b.

Carmel; an Oracle delivered to Veſpaſian on Mount Carmel, and mentioned by Tacitus and Suetonius, maintained by the Carmelites to have been delivered by the true God, 2960. a. The Authors who have oppoſed this Notion of theirs, ibid.

Carmelites; their pretended Antiquity built upon what, 2960.

Carneades inſults over Chryſippus his Antagoniſt, 974. b. His Argument, proving the Notion of Juſtice to be a falſe Notion, 862. b. Deny'd the certainty of Humane Knowledge, even in regard to firſt Principles, 860. b. one particular Inſtance, in which he departed from this Doctrine, 864. b. Cato propoſed the remanding Carneades ſent on an Embaſſy from Athens to Rome, becauſe his Eloquence deſtroyed the differences of Good and Evil, 862. a. Gives ſome Modification to the Incomprehenſibility taught by Arceſilaus, 317. b. Had Doctrines for his Friends, and others for his Scholars, 839. a. No one could tell what appeared to him moſt probable, ibid. 'Twas ſaid, that the Sun was obſcured at his Death, 866. P. ad fin. How he explain'd the Liberty of Man, 1199. T. Refuted Juſtice, 861. F.

2681. H. The ground of Cato's Anger to Carneades, 2681. H.

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1551. Vol. IV. 1439.

Caroli, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, and one of the firſt Reformers; his Accuſations of Calvin and Farel gave ill impreſſions of 'em at the beginning, 1286. b.

Carpocratians; condemned for placing Ariſtotle's Image next to that of Jeſus Chriſt, and adoring it, 366. b.

Carranza, Archbiſhop of Toledo, his being ſuſpected of Hereſy; the ground of ſuſpecting Charles V. 857. a. A Reflection on the Juſtice done his Memory by the People of Rome, 859. b.

Carrouzels; a Law obſerved in them, 1744. B. ΔΔΔΔ.

Carteſians; a Carteſian treated in the Style of Learned, for ſaying that this Propoſition, two and two make four, has no difficulty, 909. B. The ableſt of them are fond of middle Intelligences, 794. b. An explication of a Doctrine of ſome Carteſians, touching the Formation of Bodies, ibid. Their Argument to prove the Immortality of the Soul is not evident to all the World, 2537. a. What perplexes them moſt in the Doctrine of Beaſts being Automatons, 2709.

Carteſians; begin to doubt the Sufficiency of their Principles for producing all the variety of natural Effects, 808. b. their Categories, ibid. n.

Carteſianiſme; what Mr. Bourignon thought of it, 701. a.

Carthagena (John) a Jeſuit, his Poſition that a Pope may make uſe of the Arms of Infidels to defend the Liberties of the Church, 869. that Eccleſiaſticks are obliged to kill and deſtroy the Enemies of the State, ibid. That Subjects are not obliged to enquire into the Merits of their Sovereign's Cauſe, ibid.

Caſaubon (Iſaac) a conſiderable omiſſion of his, 406. a. His Submiſſion to the great Julius Cæſar Scaliger, 1479. b. His Opinion of the four Verſes aſcribed to Nero is ſurprizing, 2557. a. He is cruelly treated in a Satyr, 2775. b. He inſinuates that Cambden had no further Hand in the Annals which go under his Name, than barely tranſlating them into Latin, 832. L. His Obſervation on Homer, with regard to the Good and Evil which is in Nature, 3050. b. Wherein does he conſider Euripides as an inſpired Writer, ibid.

Caſa (John de la) Remarks on the Deſign and Matter of his extravagant Book, Entituled, Capitolo del forno, 2932. a. b. Why the Proteſtants cry'd out ſo much againſt his Works, 2601. b. He writes againſt Vergerio, and why, 2331. b. Several have condemned his abominable Book, Capitolo del forno, without reading it, 2933. a. b. A Poem addreſs'd by him to the Germans, 2961. b.

Caſe (Privileged) the difference between it and a common Offence, 147. a. n.

Caſſander; his Conſultation, 539. a. From whom did he take the Spirit of a Pacificator, 333. b.

Caſſandra; how her Prophecies were rendred uſeleſs, 870. a.

Caſſin (Monks of Mount) Benedictins, their Forgery, 1379. a.

Caſſius (Caius) call'd the laſt of the Romans, 876. Harangues his Soldiers in the Style of Religion, tho' himſelf a rank Epicurean, 878. b. why he wiſh'd there were Genii, tho' he did not believe there were, ibid. a.

Caſſius (Lucius) his Tribunal call'd the Shelve of the accuſed, 874. b. his Maxim in Criminal Tryals, Cui bono, 875. b. his Word equal to the publick Faith of Rome, ibid.

Caſſius (Severus) a pleaſant Saying of his, upon the Burning a Libel of Labienus, by a Vote of the Senate, 882. b. his incorrigible ill Nature and Proneneſs to accuſe, 883. b.

Caſtalio. Judgments on his Tranſlations of the Bible into Latin and French, 887. a. b. his own wicked Judgment on the Song of Songs, 888. a. the Names that Calvin calls him in two Leaves of one of his Books, 889. a. His Apology and Recrimination of Calvin and Beza, ibid. b. a horrid Blaſphemous Ceremony ſaid to be uſed by him in Drinking, 890. a. Teſtimony of his good Morals, ibid. how he came to take the Name of Caſtalio, 892. a. Whether he be the Author of a Book againſt the Power given to Magiſtrates of putting Hereticks to Death, 2776. b. a.

Caſtellan (Dr.) his honeſty in expoſing the Impudence of Aſtrologers before Francis I. 1618. b.

Caſtellanus (Peter) Biſhop of Macon, and Great Almoner of France; his bold Cenſure of St. Auguſtin, 436. b. his Anſwer to Francis I. who ask'd him whether he was a Gentleman, 892. b. What he thought of the Religion of the Court of Rome, 894. b. his hard Fate to be equally Cenſured, whether he Protected or Perſecuted the Lutherans, 896. a. the Power of his Eloquence, 892. b. piqu'd in honour to Study hard by Eraſmus's Rallying the French on their want of learned Men, 893. his Charity, with regard to Women of ill Life, 896. a.

Caſtelvetro, what he cry'd out when his Houſe was on Fire, 899. got a Gentleman Murder'd for Contradicting him, ibid. b. why he would not allow Virgil, Heſiod, &c. to be Poets, ibid.

Caſtile, when the Publick Acts began to be firſt drawn up in the vulgar Tongue in this Kingdom, 901. Diſorders occaſion'd in Caſtile by the Dream of a Woman, 1439. A.

Caſtor, whether he, who is the Author of ſeveral Books, be the ſame with the Son-in-law of Deiotarus, 1074. a. Three Reaſons for the Negative, ibid. There was another Caſtor that was an excellent Botaniſt, ibid.

Caſtration, whether it impairs the Natural Courage, or other great Qualities of the Mind, 1631. a. What Malefactors were Puniſh'd with Caſtration, 1338. b.

Caſuiſts, a Doubt propos'd to 'em upon reading Anatomical Lectures, 86. a. How ſmall a Nicety makes a Mortal Sin according to a certain Caſuiſt, 886. Some Caſuiſts will damn the Women for their Dreſs, for a Ribbon or Jewel, and at the ſame time preach the Men into Rebellion, 1036. why they may write on Obſcene Subjects, 1476. Whether they may treat of Caſes extreamly Obſcene and Filthy, with a pure and undefiled Mind, 2668. a. Their Books, properly ſpeaking, teach only the Art of Cavilling with God, 1975. S. Nothing eſcapes their Curioſity in Matrimonial Caſes, 2715. b. Looſe Caſuiſts make their Advantage of the Conduct of Abraham with regard to Sarah, 2675. b.

Catalogue of the Witneſſes of Truth, by whom compiled, 135. a. The occaſion of this Book, 1750. a.

Catechiſm, A Catechiſm given in the Method of Ariſtotle's Categories, 375. a.

Cataldus (Saint) a Native of Ireland, according to Uſher, and Biſhop of Taranto in Italy, 170. made the Stalking Horſe to a remarkable Fraud, 906. b. 907. a. b. his Prediction againſt Apocalyptick Babylon, a ſecond Fraud built upon the firſt, 908. a.

Catechiſm, Ariſtotle's Categories given for a Catechiſm, by whom, 366. a.

Catherine de Medicis, what Book ſhe made her principal Study, and recommended to her Children, 1082. b. Made Machiavel's Prince, her chief Study, 2082. L. Strange Fables vented in her Funeral Oration, 2666. F. Her inſenſibility to Slander and Satyr, Diſſert. xxiv. xv. a. A Maxim aſcribed to her, Diſſert. xvi. a.

Catharine de Navarre, Siſter to Henry the Great, refuſes to Marry upon the Condition of going to Maſs, 2346. N. Finds no great Comforts in Marriage, ibid. Stands firm in her Religion, ibid. O.

Catholicks (Roman) the plunge they are at in commending the Vertuous Deeds of any particular Pope, 1565. a. Several Catholicks have made Profeſſion all their Life time of the Doctrines of the Church of Rome, tho' at the ſame time they wiſh'd for a Reformation, 507. 508. The making the ſign of the Croſs upon themſelves, what it ſerves for, 1063. B. The Reaſon of Ringing a Bell at Noon, as is uſual in Catholick Countries, 1113. C. They have the free Exerciſe of their Religion in Holland, 1818. b.

Catholicon, who was the firſt that made uſe of this Title at the head of a Dictionary, 478. b.

Catholicon, a Paſſage of this Book, touching a Proceſſion of the League, 2215. b.

Catiline, how his Deſigns began to be Diſcovered, 1349. b. How he might paſs for one of the Husbands of Fulvia, ibid.

Cato, (Uticenſis) lends his Wife to Hortenſius to get him Children after ſhe had ſupply'd himſelf, and receives her again after Hortenſius's Death, 1697. a. Part of his Hiſtory, 2682. B. 2683. K. L. M. His ſurprize upon the reading of a Letter ſent to Cæſar in the Senate, 2719. b.

Cato (Marcus) an inſtance of the Reverence the Roman People had for him, 1318. b. his Character to be preferr'd to Cæſar's, 933. a.

Cato the Cenſor, his Maxim concerning Wives, 1160. b. 'Twas ſaid of him, that no Man dare make an unjuſt Requeſt to him, 645. b. The Reverence which the People had for him, a rare Inſtance of it, 1317. B. Lends out his Wife Murcia, and takes her home again after the Death of him to whom he had lent her, 1675. b. Harangues vehemently againſt the Liberty that Women took to meet in great Bodies, 2697. B. ad fin. His Averſion for all the Greek Literature, 2681. H.

Cattho (Angelo) Archbiſhop of Vienne in France, ſurprizing Inſtances of his Gift of Propheſy, 911. b.

Cauſe, the beſt ſtands in need of Moral Means to ſupport it, 73. a. Some Cauſes are capable of being well Defended, tho' they be ſomewhat wrong, 313. b. The beſt may be loſt in ſome Circumſtances, 1609. a. A good Anſwer of a famous Advocate, who was ask'd why he would plead bad Cauſes, 185.

Cauſe (Firſt) what ſome Philoſophers taught upon this Subject, 1103. a. b. 1104. a.

Cauſes (Occaſional) Reflections on this Hypotheſis, 807. D. ad med. No Hypotheſis more capable of giving the reaſon of Events than this, 1723. a. May be of ſome uſe towards Explaining Dreams, 1132. D. This Syſtem does not make the Action of God intervene in a way of Miracle, 2614. L. ad in. Whether they may be of any uſe towards reſolving the Difficulties touching Providence, 1907. b.

Cauſſin (Pere) Cenſured on his adding ſeveral Circumſtances to an ancient Hiſtorical Fact, without the leaſt Authority, 1290. a. the Splendor of his Countenance, and his wonderful Sympathy with the Sun, 919. a. Henry IV's Prognoſtick of him, ibid. b. Condemns a Cenſure made by Longinus, 1879. b.

Celeſtin III. a Ceremony uſed by him at the Crowning the Emperor Henry VI. King of Naples and Sicily, 1612. a. What he did to ſhew he could give the Imperial Crown to whom he pleaſed, 1612. A.

Celibacy, a Circumſtance ſhewing that it was not obliging on Eccleſiaſticks in the 12th Century, 1602. b. the ſpecious Reaſons, why the great Men of the Primitive Church recommended it to the Clergy, 1285. b. The Vow of Celibacy as eaſily kept as the Conjugal Vow, 1935. b. This no ſmall Advantage to the Patrons of Monaſtical Vows, ibid. Vows of Celibacy, by whom condemn'd in St. Jerom's Days, 2963. Law of Celibacy, an inexhauſtible Source of Impurities, 1023. A. 1046. B. 1248. I. ad fin. The number of Eccleſiaſticks, who find this Vow inſupportable, 1475. b. Whether the Philoſophers ought to prefer it to Marriage, 1587. b. Whether it be poſſible to keep this Vow, 1721. Its Suppreſſion became a great Expence to the chief Houſes of the Proteſtants in Germany, 1827. a. Injoin'd ſtrictly by Gregory the Great, notwithſtanding what the Centuriators of Magdeburg would make believe to the contrary, 1466. b.

Celſus, endeavours, in Oppoſition to Chriſtians, to ſhew that Brute Beaſts are not leſs excellent than Man, and even ſurpaſſes him, 2612. K. ad in.

Cenſoriouſneſs, no Condition, nor Age, nor Affinity, can ſecure the Converſation of Perſons of different Sexes from it, 1179. P.

Cenſure, the Tragical Effects of ſome Mens Cenſures, 1675. b.

Cenſures of Books, The unreaſonableneſs of thoſe Cenſures which ſtrike at a parcel of Propoſitions in a general manner, without qualifying each Propoſition in particular, 264. E. ad in. 487. G. ad in.

Centuriatours of Magdeburg, what they ſay touching Gregory the Great, ought to be rejected, 1466. Z. ad med. The Treatment that they met with, 1738. b. Some Faults relating to their Work, 1750. H. ad in. Their Work Dedicated to Queen Elizabeth, ibid. ad med.

Cerda (John de la) the Cauſe and extraordinary Manner of his Wife's Death, from Mariana, 1024. a.

Ceres, the ridiculous Object of the Grecian Womens Worſhip in one of her Feaſts, called Theſmephoria, 2870. b. The comical contrivance of an old Beldam to make Ceres laugh, taken from Arnobius, 2871. a.

Ceſalpinus, ſaid to be the firſt and the laſt of the Moderns that took Ariſtotle's Mind aright, 926. a. he underſtood the Circulation of the Blood long before Harvey, 927. a.

Cæſar (Julius) an Inſtance of his great Moderation, 913. His Actions ſaid to have made the natural Ramparts of Italy uſeleſs, 929. a. The numbers of the Slain, and of the Priſoners taken by him in all his Foreign Wars, 929. b. He was not always ſatisfied with verbal Promiſes from Perſons to ſupport his Intereſt, but exacted them under their Hands, 930. a. His Sentiments of Providence and Religion conſider'd, 930. b. 931. a. b. Had a Form of Prayer, which he repeated thrice when he went into his Coach, 932. a. Had thoughts of killing himſelf in his laſt and moſt doubtful Battel of Munda, 936. b. Whether Pride, a Looſeneſs, or the fear of a Fit of his Falling-Sickneſs, were the cauſes of his ſitting when the Senate came in a Body to wait on him, 933. b. 934. a. His being cut out of his Mother's Womb an Error, 935. b. That Fact concerns Scipio Africanus, ibid. a. n. Some Facts concerning his Commentaries, 936. a. b. Thoughts upon Salluſt's Parallel between Cato and Cæſar, and an enumeration of both their Virtues, 933. a. Was a Poet betimes, 47. b. Deſerv'd Death, though it did not belong to three or four private Perſons to attempt his Life, 935. D. X. What Arms his Aſſaſſins made uſe of to kill him, and afterwards to kill themſelves, 881. D. E. No Author but Valerius Maximus ſpeaks of his appearing to Caſſius, ibid. Whether he ever return'd into Gaul after his Paſſage over the Rubicon, 895. b. 914. a. His Moderation, ibid. Divers Judgments on his Commentaries, 730. G. Some Facts concerning them, ibid. S. Who firſt publiſh'd his Commentaries in Greek, 1801. Does not vouchſafe to riſe to the Senate, 1915. B. What Friends he made choice of according to Cicero, 1111. C. ad Fin. n. Poſſeſſes himſelf of the Treaſure that was laid up in the Temple of Saturn, 2107. b. Wiſh'd for a ſudden Death, 2047. a. His Sword ſhew'd at Auvergne, 930. H. ad Fin.

Ceſarius (a Monk) St. Chryſoſtom's Letter to him, expreſs againſt Tranſubſtantiation, 623. b.

Cethegus (Cornelius) the firſt who was famous in Rome for his Oratory and Eloquence, 936. b. The Family of the Cethegi would never change the Faſhion of their Clothes, 938. b.

Ceylan; the Opinion of its Inhabitants about the Salt Lake upon Mount Colombo, 17. a.

Chabot (Jane) Abbeſs of the Paraclet in France, profeſs'd the Proteſtant Religion without ever quitting the Habit of a Nun, 2454.

Chaize (Pere la) his Reputation vindicated in a conſiderable Point, 268. a.

Cham, by whom called Zoroaſter, 939. b. The Story of Jupiter's Caſtrating his Father, an Alluſion to Cham's Adventure with Noah, according to ſome Jewiſh Rabbins, 940. a.

Chamier (Daniel) a Hugonot Divine, ſaid to have taken up three Months time in drawing the Edict of Nants, 941. b. His Ill-breeding in a Conference between ſome of the Heads of the Proteſtants and the Commiſſioners of the Court, ibid. Falſly ſaid to be Head of a Sect call'd Metaphoriſts, 942. b. Dyes Sword in hand like Zuinglius, and other fiery Controvertiſts, 940. A. ad fin. His Character very well deſcribed, ibid.

Chanters; their Inſtitution and godly Education, 1465. O. Why the Heathens called them Bean-eaters, ibid.

Chaos; which of the Philoſophers was the firſt who ſaid it was clear'd by an intelligent Being, 226. a. 227. a. 233. b. Divers Significations of this Word, 2869. b. What it is according to Plato, 3101. b.

Chapter of Paris, its Tyranny towards ſome Boors their Tenants criticiz'd, 901. F. This the firſt occaſion of Affranchizing the Peaſantry of France, ibid.

Charenton, its national Synod, 1703. In what caſes they preached there in the Court of the Temple, as the French Authors call it, 1123. H.

Charity of the Faithful for the maintenance of Eccleſiaſticks reſumed without hazard, when they ſcandalize the Publick, 23. b.

Charlemagne; his Life aſcribed to Plutarch by Wicelius, 45. How he came to diſcover an Intrigue between his Secretary and his Daughter, and how he behaved himſelf upon the Diſcovery, 1164. B. ad Med. Whether he created the Peers of France, 1570. G. Sees his Daughter Imma carrying off her Lover by Night upon her Back, for fear the print of his Feet ſhould be diſcovered in the Snow, 1161. b. His Conduct thereupon, 1162. a.

Charles V. The Sorrow he expreſs'd in publick at his not having learn'd Latin, 1559. a. Strengthned his Forgeries by publick Authority, 1251. b. Slip'd his Opportunity of making a Conqueſt of France, 1241. b. Whether he made uſe of the Counſels of Cornelius Agrippa, 121. a. A good Saying of his, 453. b. n. What Grounds there are for believing that he dyed with favourable Thoughts of Luther's Doctrine, 867. a. The Ground of his Preference to the Imperial Crown before Francis I. 943. a. His Eſteem for the French Language, ibid. b. His ridiculous Speech, and as ridiculous Command to Paulus Jovius, 944. a. His Saying of Fortune, and deep Diſſimulation when he had the Pope Priſoner, 949. Deſigned to get himſelf choſen Pope, and make the Papacy Hereditary in the Houſe of Auſtria, ibid. a. His Advice to Philip II. his Son, 950.

Accuſes Henry II. of France before the Princes and States of the Empire, of entring into a League with Soliman, 315. Prepares, in Conjunction with the Pope, to accuſe him in full Council, ibid. B. An excellent Saying of that Prince, 468. b. The Ground of the Report that he died with Sentiments of the Lutheran Religion, 946. R. 867. C. Challenges Francis I. to a Duel, 944. E. Who aſſiſted him in his laſt Hours, 887. B. In what Sentiments he died, ibid. Facts concerning his Confeſſor, ibid. By what Conſideration did he carry his Point againſt his Competitor for the Empire, 933.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 1939.

933. b. Brought the Court of France into a ſtrange perplexity, 1249. a. A Lord of the Low Countries burnt up the Houſe in which he had treated this Emperor, 2109. ad med. A generous Action of this Prince, 1959. b. Seizes himſelf of the Milaneſe, 2714. b.

Charles VII. King of France; a formal Sentence of Baniſhment and Excluſion paſs'd againſt him, 766. b. His unparallell'd mean Submiſſion to the Duke of Burgundy, 788. a.

Charles VIII. of France; given out that he was Suppoſititious. 1571. H. The Pox firſt known in France in his Time, 2535. A Chirurgeon prays before his Statue, and why, ibid.

Charles IX. of France, his Exploits in the Maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's Day, 2454. b. Shot with his own Hands at the Hugonots as they were flying from the Maſſacre, and cry'd Kill, kill, ibid.

Charles I. King of England; his Death imputed to the Presbyterians, is the cauſe of a thouſand odious Reproaches and Trembles to the Proteſtants of France, 206. F. In a Book dedicated to his Son Charles II. he is ſuppoſed to have died a Member of the Roman Catholick Church, 2048. a. Was not the Author of a Book that goes under his Name, 2053. b. His Prayer in time of Adverſity taken out of Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, 2054. b.

Charron; ranked by Garaſſe among the Atheiſts under the Character of Melancholy, 955. a. Why ſome have thought him more dangerous than Montaigne, 958. a. Preferr'd to Socrates, ibid. b. His Advice to Criticks to beware of ſeven Miſtakes in reading his Book, of general uſe with regard to other Books, 957. a.

Chaſtity; the ſublimeſt Degree of it that a Woman deſires, 699. a. A Parallel betwixt the Chaſtity of Nuns and martyr'd Virgins, and that of Heroins in a Romance, 1245. b. How hard to be preſerv'd in the Month of May, 2747. a. A rare Example of this Virtue, 279. B. The moſt ardent Love of this Virtue does not neceſſarily exclude the machinal Diſpoſitions to Incontinence, 1017. b. Is not inconſiſtent with Bravery, 1605. b. Accompanied with an incredible Circumſtance, 1430. A. The Ideas of Honour in ſome Countries with regard to this Virtue, 1723. a. See Continency.

Chatel (John) his Apology, 689. a.

Chatellard, a French Gentleman beheaded in Scotland, for having attempted the Queen's Honour, 2599.

Chavagnac; Obſervations upon his Memoirs, 297. b.

Chedhorles, a Saint among the Turks, 963. They take him to be the ſame as St. George among the Chriſtians, and that he was one of Alexander's Captains, and that he and his Horſe are ſtill alive, ibid.

Cheeſe; who was the Inventor of making it, 352. b.

Chelonis, her wonderful Conduct between her Husband and her Father, implacable Enemies, 964.

Chemnitius, ſtiled a formidable Adverſary by Don Nicolas Antonio, 263. b.

Chereſtrata, Mother of Epicurus; why this Woman could not fail to bring forth a Philoſopher, 1185. B. b.

Cheriſs; in ſuch Veneration among the Turks, that none but they can wear the green Turbant, 2104. CC. ad fin.

Chevreau, an inexcuſable Blunder in his Hiſtory, 880. a.

Chicanry; Inſtances of its Power and Malignity, 1393. a.

Chigi (Auguſtinus) his exceſſive Prodigality in an Entertainment made for Pope Julius the 11th, 965. a.

Chigi (Fabio) Nuncio at the Treaty of Munſter, and afterwards Alexander the 8th, refuſed any Communication with the Proteſtant Miniſters, proteſting againſt the Peace, ſhaking the Duſt off his Feet, 969. a. n. 971. a.

Childerick, his Viſions, 515. b. Expelled on account of his Lewdneſs, 514. His debauching the Wife of his Protector, worſe than the Sin of Paris, 515.

Childhood; an Ambition which diſcovers it ſelf in one's Childhood, is to be dreaded, 1136. B.

Children of this World not wiſer in their Generation, than the Children of Light, how applied, 702. a. The frighting of Children, an ancient and univerſal Cuſtom. 'Twas anciently believed that their Nouriſhment made a part of their Education, 899. C. ad fin. Whether it be better to make them ſtudy at home, than ſend them to Univerſities, 1886. A.

China; The difference between the Chineſe outward and publickly preached Divinity, and their inward Doctrines, which are never imparted to the vulgar, 2784. a. The Men of Letters there are at bottom Atheiſts, 1738. L. ad fin. Whether they act prudently there in granting Toleration to Roman Catholicks, 2056. a. How many Characters the Chineſe make uſe of in writing, 1417. I. The greateſt part of them hold a Metempſychoſis, 1547. a. The Theology of a Sect among them, 2782.

Chinchina; its Operation ſaid to be Magical, and by Compact with the Devil, 691. a.

Chios; an Anſwer of Cicero to the Inhabitants of this Iſle, 1899. a.

Chiron; ſome Leſſons of his to Apollo about the manner of making Love, 351. a.

Chiron and Phenix could not both be Preceptors to Achilles, 60. b.

Choler would ſuffocate ſome Perſons, if not diſcharged upon Paper, 32.

Chorus; the Tragical Occaſion of augmenting the number of the Chorus to 15, in the ancient Plays, 1227. a.

Chriſt; whether he ought to be manifeſted after the Courſe of ſix thouſand Years, 138. C.

Chriſtian, the 4th King of Denmark, deſigning to divorce his Queen, the Judges gave Sentence againſt him, 1685. 1685. His Amours, his Marriage, and his Divorce from Chriſtina of the ancient Houſe of Monch, 1986. B.

Chriſtina, Queen of Sweden, writes to the General of the Jeſuites for two religious of his Company, 2072. Y. She never paſſed a day without reading ſome Pages in Tacitus, 1828. F. ad fin.

Chriſtianity; its Advantage over the falſe Religions, in ſtrictly joining the Idea of Purity to that of Beatification, 2683. b. Compared to an old Palace that's ſupported on all ſides with Props and Buttreſſes, 72. B. What Averroes ſaid of it when he reflected on the Practice of the Church of Rome, 430. H. ad fin. The Scandal of the Diviſions of Chriſtianity, 959. b. Differs from it ſelf, if we have regard to the ſeveral Ages of it, 7141. E. ad fin. Is animated by a Spirit of Perſecution, ibid. Its Eſtabliſhment alone a ſufficient Proof of its Divinity, 1971. N. ad med. Has eſtabliſhed it ſelf in theſe laſt Ages after a very different manner from that by which it was eſtabliſhed in the firſt Ages, 2017. b. Its Truth but ill proved from its Extent, 2097. P. Or from its Proſperity, ibid. Several Abuſes have crept into it, not unlike the Corruptions of Paganiſm, 2545. B. Why there have often been more impudent Sects in Chriſtianity than in Paganiſm, 1927. Y.

Chriſtians more cruel againſt thoſe who are not of their Religion, than the Mahometans, 2485. a. Their Morals compared with thoſe of the Mahometans, 2098. a. Who was the firſt Roman Senator, or great Lord that openly turn'd Chriſtian, 266. b. A great Defeat of the Chriſtians by the Saracens, 10. a. Their Duty when perſecuted, 206. P. They have no Right to reproach the Heathen Philoſophers, with the Violation of Faith and Allegiance to Sovereigns, 297. a. How long ſince bid adieu to Patience and Submiſſion to Powers, ibid. Their Device, 2745. A Country of Chriſtians, who do not underſtand one Word of their own Religion, 1110. A. Who is the Author of a bloody Invective againſt them, mentioned by Minutius Felix, 1364. F. Some Chriſtians in the Days of Gregory the Great, doubted the Immortality of the Soul, and the Reſurrection of the Body, 1435. a. A Chriſtian who is worthy of his Name, is the rareſt thing in the World, 1398. Whether one may be a Chriſtian without embracing any particular Communion, 1486. b. 2055. a. b. Quadratus and Ariſtides preſent Apologies for the Chriſtians, 1562. P. The Chriſtians of the fourth Century frequently made mention of the Nobility of their Birth, 1599. E. The Prejudices of the different Communions of Chriſtians one againſt another, 1649. a. It's ſtrange that Chriſtians having ſo pure a Syſtem of Religion, ſhould notwithſtanding live ſo inordinately, 1798. b. The Chriſtians can never pretend to reproach the Pagans on the Article of Life and Manners, 2077. They have been infinitely more cruel than the Followers of Mahomet, 2485. a. Have been accuſed in the firſt Centuries of being the Cauſe of the publick Calamities, 2949. E. ad med. And in their turn accuſed their Adverſaries of the ſame thing, ibid.

Chronology very ill obſerved by the Greek and Latin Hiſtorians, 850. b. That which claſhes with Appearances never to be admitted without an extream Neceſſity, 745. b. There's little Chronology in the moſt part of the Greek and Latin Hiſtorians, 848. K. ad fin.

Chronologers; ſome of them not exact in Hiſtories of their own writing, 309. b.

Chryſippus is accuſed by Plutarch of making God the Author of Sin, 977. a. There never was a greater Diſturber in the Commonwealth of Philoſophy, 981. b. Advances a ſmall Maxim, and contradicts himſelf, 975. a. b. Collects ſo many Reaſons for Uncertainty, that he can't afterwards refute them, 974. b. His Compariſon of God with King Dejotarus, 1071. E. ad med. Is too ſolicitous to eſtabliſh that which the Antients call'd Fate, 1319. b. Amuſes himſelf too much with explaining the Poetical Traditions, 1824. C. ad fin.

C H.

Chryſippus, an Undermatch for himſelf, when he would anſwer the Difficulties which he ſtarts, 974. writ 705 Books out of an Emulation to Epicurus, 974. a. His repreſenting his Adverſary's Objections in their full force, the Ground for ſaying he contradicted his own Principles, 975. a. Happier in oppoſing than defending his own Doctrines, 975. a. His Indiſcretion as great as his Diſhoneſty, 976. a. His Method of anſwering impertinent Logicians, called the quiet Method, 980. a. He compoſed Songs for Nurſes, 981. b. On what Principle he killed himſelf, 982. Other Accounts of his Death, ibid. Makes the Heart the Seat of the rational Soul, 1815. a. Approved not the turning Men from Sin by a dread of the Juſtice of God, and why, 50.

Chryſoſtom (St.) his Sermon upon Abraham's diſſembling that Sarah was his Siſter, would not be born in theſe Times. St. Paul dictated ſeveral things to him, 457. a. Miſtaken in the Cauſe which he aſſigns of the Death of St. Babylas, 457. a. Condemns the Philoſophers on their renouncing Riches, and why, 225. a. He's miſtaken about the Death of Babylas, 456. C. ad fin. It's evident that he did not conſult Hiſtory in this Point, ibid. He advances ſeveral Falſities from an honeſt Intention, ibid. The general Ground of ſome of his Miſtakes, ibid. D. He's ill treated by Eraſmus, 1224. a. Why he did not appear at the Synod of Theophilus, 2360. b.

Churches not dedicated to God or the holy Ghoſt, 2453. What they who ſeparate from a Church are obliged to do in their Juſtification, 2383. a. b. 2384. a. A Queſtion, whether there be two Heads of the Church, St. Peter and St. Paul, or only St. Peter, ſtarted in Innocent X's Pontificate, 2156. a. Its preſent deplorable State, 1418. b. A bountiful Mother to thoſe who ſerve her, 821. b. Abuſes in it better tolerated according to the Opinion of many, than Remedies applied, which may endanger its Conſtitution, 897. a. An Apologue made uſe of in the 14th Century, to ſhew that the Princes who enriched the Church, might ſtrip her too, 2602. b. All Churches, falſe or true, uſe the ſame Topicks for and againſt Toleration, 2760.

Chymiſtry; the Study of it very much decry'd by the Phyſicians of Paris, about the latter end of the 16th Century, 2120.

Chymiſts; An Order obtained againſt them by the Sorbonne from the Parliament of Paris in 1629, as claſhing with the Principles of Ariſtotle, and conſequently with the Scholaſtick Theology, 364. a.

Cicero, how he clears himſelf of the Contradictions which he is charged with, 292. b. What he ſays of the Letters of his Friend Atticus, 420. K. In his Letters to Atticus, we have a juſt Hiſtory of the Times, and a Prophecy of what came to paſs after his Death, 420. K. His Eloquence was not reliſhed by all the World, 735. F. Differs very much from Plutarch in his Judgment and Taſte for the Writings of ſome Authors, 1885. b. Approves Mental Reſervation in Swearing, 1268. a. his Thought about the Nature of Brutes very different from that of Deſcartes, 2519. a. Miſtaken in the chief Circumſtances of a very memorable Donation of the Roman Senate, 2525. a. Thoſe Works of his which are loſt reputed the fineſt he Wrote, 2485. a. The Fragments of them, by whom Collected, ibid. The Reſpect which Alphonſo I. of Naples paid to the Ruins of a Villa, which according to Tradition had belonged to Cicero, 2330. a. Was reading Euripides's Medea when overtaken and Murthered by the Aſſaſſins, 1268. a. His Opinion of thoſe who deſpiſe their own Tongue, and the Authors of their own Nation, 47. b. A Thought of his concerning the Dogs which watched the Roman Capitol, applied to the Guardians of Truth, 595. b. His Thought that we came into the World to expiate our Crimes, borrowed from Crantor the Philoſopher and Poet, 1028. b. Thought it a Reproach to the whole Family of Junia, to have had one Orator of it that became a common Informer, 883. b. Unable to defend the Notion of Natural Right againſt the Academicks, 863. a. Apprehended no Danger from Cethegus, becauſe he was over-furious, 938. a. Reproached for ſpeaking in Greek before a Greek Senate, 995. a. A Reflection on his ſetting a value on the Godſhip of Romulus, becauſe eſtabliſhed in a clear-ſighted Age, 2684. a. Criticiz'd for his Improprieties and Barbariſms, 2695. a. b. Accus'd of Inceſt with his Daughter Tullia by ſome of his Enemies, 1924. b. That Verſe in the ſixth Æneid, Hic Thalamum invaſit natæ, &c. ſuppoſed by an Antient Writer to point at Cicero, ibid.

C I.

There are ſome Facts with regard to which his Authority is not deciſive, 873. a. Laughs at the Stories of Hell, 873. a. 1897. b. Took a great many things out of a Book of Crantor's about Conſolation, when he compoſed a Book on the ſame Subject, 1028. b. Diſplays all his Eloquence on occaſion of the Sale of the Pontificate of Peſſinunte, 1093. a. His Wife ſignifies to him on the part of the Veſtals, to execute his Deſigns for the good of his Country, 1162. C. To perfect himſelf in Action, he put himſelf under the Inſtruction of two famous Comedians, 1237. A baſe and brutal Revenge taken of him, 1375. Reproaches the Philoſophers with introducing Deities deſtitute of Life and Knowledge, 1813. His Principle, that a Doctrine which grows old is true, 1897. b. 1898. a. His contradicting himſelf with regard to Lucilius, 2042. I. The wrong his Freedman did him, in Publiſhing a Collection of his Railleries after his Death, 2609. M. ad med. A Paſſage of his preſerved to us by St. Auſtin, 1443. a. Had nothing to anſwer Cotta upon the Queſtion, whether the Faculty of reaſoning in Man be a Preſent from the Gods, 1488. b. According to him Providence toyls for the Pleaſures of Man, 2548. a. Whether he taught that Beaſts were Automatons, 2530. b. He is charged with Incongruity and Barbariſms, 2695. a. Had more Religion in his Heart than in his Head, 2789. H. ad fin. Who helped him to put his Library in order, 2902. G. Divorces his Wife Terentia ſeveral Years before he died, ibid. Z. Offers to go to Syria in Quality of Lieutenant to Dolabella, who had been his Son in Law, 1923. L. ad fin. He opens loudly againſt him after the Death of Trebonius, ibid. M. He is inconſolable upon the Death of his Daughter, ibid. O. He is charg'd with a Criminal Love for her, ibid. O. ad fin. His reaſon of our coming into this World, ibid. R. The Pagan Prieſts applied to have ſome of his Books interdicted by the Authority of the Senate, 2292. a. His Thought on the ancient Greek Comedy, Diſſert. xiii.

Ciceronians; why ſo called, 1210. I. ad in. The Poſitiveneſs and Superſtition of this Sect, 1130. D. ad med.

Cimbalum Mundi; Extracts from this Book, 2545. B. ad in. An account of this deteſtable Book, ibid.

Cinqmars; the Source of his Averſion for Cardinal Richlieu, 2007. b. His Execution, 1189. A. art. iv. ad med.

Cinyras; ſome will have him to have been the ſame with Noah, 1015. b.

Ciphers; are very convenient and very inconvenient, 207. a.

Circle; People who pretended to have found out the ſquaring of the Circle, 1982. d. According to the Mathematicians it can only exiſt in the Idea, 3709. b. 3080. a.

Circumciſion; forbidden upon the Penalties eſtabliſhed againſt Caſtration, 498. b.

Citations; citing the ancient Authors, from whom a Writer borrows Paſſages, not cuſtomary in the XVIth Century, 2874. a. Rules to be obſerved in Citations, 2697. b. It's dangerous truſting to them, without conſulting the Originals, 2822, 2823. A. ad fin. One ought to keep religiouſly to the Terms of Authors cited, 278. a. The injuſtice of not citing ones Author, 387. b. The folly of thoſe who cite their Plato's and their Ariſtotle's to prove a common Thought, 227. a. Advice to thoſe who cite Authors, 2058. a. A bad way of citing Authors, 2867. D.

Cities; ſome founded under a malignant Conſtellation, 2458.

Clara (St.) her deſire to dine with St. Francis granted, 1343. a. The firſt Courſe, and the Miracles which attended it, ibid.

Clarence (George, Duke of) his being drowned in a Veſſel of Malmſey, as a mitigation of Puniſhment, ſhocks Humanity more than the cruelleſt execution, 1157. a. The manner of his Death, 1156. G.

Claude (Mr.) his Diſpute with Monſieur Arnauld, 384. a. Accuſes St. Auſtin of changing from black to white on the Article of perſecuting Hereticks, 437. H. His Opinion in this point might have expoſed him to Cenſure, ibid.

Claude (Mr.) his Advice to a learned Man about his Studies, 1332. b. Had been under a Publick Cenſure, had he lived three or four Years longer, 437. The circumſtances conſpiring to raiſe the Reputation of his Books very judiciouſly remark'd, 997. b. His perſonal Diſpute with the Biſhop of Meaux, at the requeſt of Madamoiſelle de Duras, 998. a.

Claudian; ſome Reflections on his Doubts about Providence, being clear'd by the Fall of Rufinus, 1628. b.

C L.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 2159.

Claudius the Emperor would ſuffer no one to bear Office in Rome, who did not ſpeak the Latin Tongue, 995. a. Saluted Emperor in the Camp of the Pretorian Cohorts, 897. a. The Senate obliged to approve the Election whether they will or no, ibid. How his Mother uſed to treat him, 295. a. Was the laſt Man in Rome, who knew the infamous Proſtitutions of his Wife Meſſalina, 1601. G.

Clearchus; what he relates touching Ariſtotle's Converſation with a Jew, 360. b. Whether he deſerves to be believed, 367. a.

Clemency, often exercis'd out of Seaſon, 1003. E.

Clemens Alexandrinus, what he thought of Diagoras and ſome others who have paſſed for Atheiſts, 1093. M.

Clement VII. his Impatience to ſee the Marriage of the Dauphin, afterwards Henry II. conſummated with his Niece, 1051. a.

Clement VIII. offers Liberty of Conſcience to Scipio Gentilis, an Italian Proteſtant, if he would come and teach at Bologna, 1402. a.

Clement IX. diſguſted at the pretended Privileges of Papal Ground, 1056. a. b.

Clement (James) by whom moſt incited to Aſſaſſinate Henry III. 1623. a. An Extract of the Memorial preſented to the Pope by the Ambaſſadors of the League, in Juſtification of him, 1628. b. Aſſaſſinates Henry III. of France upon a Viſion, approved by a Monk, 1785. C. There's ſome appearance that the Preachers of the League had ſome knowledge of this Deſign, 695. B △ △. Some have preſumed to advance, that he did not kill Hen. III. 1628. Q. ad in. Is praiſed by the Jeſuits, 1179. F.

Clementia Iſaura, why ſo much honoured in Thoulouſe, 651. b. n.

Cleopatra, outdone in Luxury by the Son of a Roman Stage-Player, 1228. b. Wherein conſiſted the Force of her Charms, 1074. 1705. A. ad fin. 1597. x. ad in.

Cleopatra, Siſter of Alexander the Great, her Credit with him, and with their Mother Olympias, 1108. A.

Cleoſtratus, a Correction of his Cycle, 1580.

Clerc (Le) a piece of his Letter to Mr. Jurieu, in defence of Epiſcopius, 1203. H. Reflections on his Letter, and on the Conſequences of it, ibid.

Clergy; the Dangers of attempting the Reformation of the Concubinary Clergy, 1564. a. Great Flatterers of Princes, 185. b. Their Tyranny and Cruelty in France in the Days of St. Lewis, 904. Had power of Life and Death over their Vaſſals, ibid. Their Debaucheries agreeable to the Court, 23. a. They are a true Imperium in Imperio, 725. d. Their Concubinage, 1017. G. Their wicked Lives, 1563. 1564. G. African Clergy ſollicit the ſecular Arm againſt the Followers of Pelagius, 198. b. Clergy of France, their Propoſal to the Court for the Extirpation of Hereticks, 2539. C. An ill-grounded Complaint of theirs againſt the Proteſtants, 2461. a.

Clio the Muſe, her being got with Child a Leſſon to moſt Prudes, 1160. a.

Clodia. Miſtreſs to Catullus, under the Name of Lesbia, 2038. A. She was Sirnamed Quadrantaria, and turn'd common Strumpet, ibid. She's deſcribed by Cicero in his Oration pro Cœlio, who was accuſed of ſeveral Crimes, and particularly of attempting to poiſon Clodia, to be freed of a Debt he owed her, ibid.

Clovis, the ancient Writers contradict themſelves in placing him among the Legitimate, 516. All that is ſaid of the Kings of France before him is little better than Fable, 2989. a. n.

Cloyſters, are the ſame to Miſers as Leghorn was formerly to Bankrupts, 185. What Eraſmus thought of them, 212. A. Have given riſe to a Proverb, 2654. b.

Cochleus; what ſort of Machine he employed, but in vain, againſt the Lutherans, 1292. A. ad med. His Accuſations againſt Luther, 2611. N △ △. ad in.

Cock, the Jews offer a Cock for their Sins on the Feaſt of Reconciliation, 1377. Art. 3. The Ceremony uſed at this Oblation, ibid.

Cocles (Publius Horatius) a remarkable Variation in ancient Hiſtory, in a Circumſtance of his memorable Action, 1691. b.

Coeffetau, makes but a poor Anſwer to du Pleſſis, on occaſion of the Praiſes which Carigius gave Luther, 1881. C.

Cœlius, defended by Cicero againſt the Accuſations of Clodia, 2039. A.

Coglione, (Bartolomeo) raiſed from the loweſt Condition to the Embraces of Joan of Naples, for his pitching a Bar well, 2329. a.

Colbert (Mr.) his noble Contempt of a furious Lampoon, 1611. a. Hinders the Printing of ſeveral Books againſt the Houſe of Auſtria, 1901. N. ad in.

Coligni (Admiral de) Illuſions of the Author who wrote his Hiſtory, 2472. a. How killed, 574. 575.

C O.

Collections for the Church of Germany, particularly that of the Palatinate, by whom made, 190.

Colomies (Paul) a Refugee French Miniſter; his Theologorum Presbyterianorum Icon, againſt the Presbyterians in England, expoſed him to ſome Vexations, 1003.

Colonna (Cardinal) held eleven Biſhopricks, 1005. b.

Coloſſus of Rhodes; Scaliger's Blunder in computing the weight of it, 910. a.

Colours are not in the Bodies, 2618. B. ad med.

Column of Marble raiſed to Julius Cæſar, received Divine Honours, 1112. D. What Columns the Romans call'd Roſtratæ, 1147.

Com, a City of Perſia; what Saint is worſhipped there by the Turks, 1287. b. They call the Bleſſed Virgin there by the name of Lela, ibid.

Combabus, his privilege of Acceſs at all times to the King of Syria, not excepting the Critical Minute, 1009. a. The occaſion of it, 1008. His Friends gelded themſelves in complaiſance to him, 1009. b.

Comedy, the beſt Mint for Words, 2674. b.

Comedies, on what ſort of Perſons they make the beſt Impreſſions, 15. a. When were Love-Adventures firſt brought into Comedies, 245. A Play favour'd with a Prodigy, 2320. Z. n. Wherein conſiſts the difference between the Ancients and Moderns with regard to Comedy, 2673. B. Comedies made uſe of to repreſent the Abuſes of Popery, 2690. a.

Comedians may be buried in holy Ground, 256. B. Have furniſh'd a Martyr, 2467. a. b.

Comenius; his Character reſembles that of moſt other Phanaticks, 1007. a. He is divided between a fear of diſobeying God, and expoſing himſelf to be laugh'd at; how he got out of this ſtrait, 1119. 1120. 1121.

Comes (Antonius Maria) his Reaſons for changing his Name for that of Mark Anthony Majoragius, 2130. b. A Proceſs made out againſt him for this Change, ibid.

Comets, are always conſidered as Preſages of Evil, 718. b. Their Cauſe, and Reaſon of Calamities following them, according to Bodin, 657. a.

Comforters; a Rule for their Conduct with Perſons in Affliction recommended from Ovid, 1030. a.

Comines (Philip de) the Judgment that du Haillan makes of him, 1570. F. His Teſtimony of the Truth of Angelo Cattho, Archbiſhop of Vienne's Predictions, 911. b. He wrote his Hiſtory at his Sollicitation, ibid. The corrupting his Memoirs falſly imputed to John de Selve, firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Paris, 2709. a.

Commentaries, and marginal Notes, highly neceſſary for underſtanding Satyr, 27. a.

Commentators, what is the end which they propoſe to themſelves, 1312. C.

Commodus the Emperor, expoſes a Man to the wild Beaſts for reading the Life of Caligula, 2832. a.

Communions, the effect of Civil Wars raiſed in a Communion, 203. b. 'Tis not for their temporal Intereſt, that all its Members ſhould be reaſonable, 1133. Q.

Communion (Occaſional) how it may be lawful, 511. a.

Company; the ill Effects and Conſequence of bad Company, 218. a.

Compariſons; a compariſon of Wits to Apples, 48. K. A Remark concerning the Deſign of Compariſons, 2886. a. b. Examples ſhewing Juſtneſs and Propriety of Compariſons in Diſcourſe or Writing, ibid.

Compilers; reduced to two great Claſſes, 2188. D. Their want of Exactneſs, and Reaſon of it, 47. G. A Compiler who ſhould not be eſteem'd at all in our Days, might be valued a thouſand Years hence, 445. b. An Example of the Alterations which Compilers make in Matters which paſs through their Hands, 1208. D. Do a great deal of wrong to Illuſtrious Men, by compiling all they have ſaid without the leaſt diſcernment, 2027. a.

Conception (Immaculate) the ſeveral degrees of the certainty of the Faith of this Article, 2377. b. The Faculty of Divinity at Paris make their Members ſwear to believe it as an Article of Faith, 2137. a. Are Excommunicated for this by the Biſhop of Paris, ibid.

Conclave; nothing ſo hard as to be aſſured of an Election to the Papacy, before entring the Conclave, 1723. a. How the Intrigues are perplexed in it, 282. F. ad fin. The Spring of Providence not more particularly diſcoverable in them, than in the Councils of Princes, 282. b.

Concord. By what Emblem the Ancients us'd to Repreſent the Power of Concord, 2058. 2059. ad fin.

Concordat, paſs'd between Francis I. and Leo X. and the Abuſes which it occaſion'd, 2692. 2693.

Concubine. A Lecture on the Conduct of Husbands, whoſe Wives are Concubines to Great Princes, 124. Eleven thouſand Prieſts allow'd Concubines in one Dioceſs at a Crown a-piece per annum to the Biſhop, 124. b.

C O.

A Reflection on thoſe that Marry them at the point of Death, 356. a.

Condé (Lewis I. Prince of) Condemn'd to loſe his Head, 1517. b. n.

Condé (Lewis II. Prince of) The Declaration which he made of his Orthodoxy at the point of Death, 1480. E. ad fin. Sends for Spinoſa, and Diſcourſes with him, 2787. F.

Condition, none ſo Deplorable as that of not being able to die when one wiſhes for Death, 1563. a. Thoſe Conditions are generally the happieſt which make the leaſt ſhew, 253. a.

Confeſſion, by Letters maintain'd by Suarez, and Condemn'd by Clement VIII. 509. b.

Confidents, Reaſons for removing them from Young Princeſſes and Ladies, 2551. b. What makes the Confidence and Intimacy between Ladies and their Servants, ibid.

Confucius, as blind as other Learned Men of China, with regard to the true God, 1140. b.

Congreſs, in Tryals of Impotency, how Perform'd, and with what Ceremonies, 2527 b. upon what occaſion introduc'd into France, 2523. a. A Juſtification of what has been ſaid in this Dictionary, in relation to the Form uſed in the Congreſs, 2528. a. A Story out of the Menagiana, of a Miller and his Wiſe put to the Congreſs, 2529. b.

Conicks, who was the firſt Author that wrote on them, 195. 196. a.

Conjectures, one may be happier in Conjectures than another, and not be a Man of more Skill, 347. b.

Conjunctions, how many great ones of the Planets ſince the Creation, 131. a.

Conjurations, The form of Conjuring the Titular Gods of Cities Beſieged by the Romans.

Connecte (Thomas) a Carmelite of the xvth Century, his great and repured Sanctity, 1016. b. What courſe he took to beat the Women out of conceit with their high Head-dreſſes, ibid. Reckon'd by the Proteſtants in the Liſt of thoſe, who at ſeveral times have deſired the Reformation of the Church, 1017. Repreſented as a Hypocrite by others, ibid. b.

Conon, His Advice to the King of Perſia, how to get rid of Ageſilaus, 1019. a.

Conquerours, Reaſon would have them ſtop, and would not have them ſtop, 9. b.

Conqueſts, The firſt Conqueſts of Rome, compar'd with its after Conqueſts, 129. b.

Conſcience, a Doubt upon a Caſe of Conſcience, 89. a. One is always oblig'd to follow its Motions, 132. I. They who are moſt oblig'd in point of Intereſt to defend this Maxim, have had the folly to Attack it of late days, ibid. A Body cannot be too reſerv'd as to the charging Men with Sins againſt their Conſcience, 907. b. Whether Conſcience may be conſtrain'd to embrace the true Religion, 1461. E. 2d. Par. The Contradictions which they fall into, who aſſert this, ibid. They, who are Directors of Conſcience, ſhould have but very ſhort Converſations with their Devotes, 1471. G. ad fin. Its Liberty, 1847. H. ibid. K. A Compariſon of its force with that of the point of Honour towards keeping Women Virtuous, 2415. C. 3. Par. A delicate Conſcience afflicts it ſelf for Faults that are purely material, 2633. D.

Conſcience (An erroneous) its Rights, 132. I. Nothing can be more Juſt, than that which Archelaus has ſaid concerning it, 323. B. ad med.

Conſcience, an extraordinary Caſe of it propoſed by Agnes, Widow of Henry II. to Petrus Damianus, 1341. a.

Conſcience, its Inſtincts, how much weaker than thoſe of worldly Reputation and Honour, 2477. a.

Conſcientiarians, A Sect of Atheiſts, 1844.

Conſiſtory, (of Geneva) a fair Victory got by them over the Senate, 602. a.

Conſolation, a common Place of Conſolation examined, 218. K. A pernicious Maxim of Conſolation, 332. N. A common Place of Conſolation, 537. B. ad med. Another common Place, 1028. D. Another common Place, 1335. F.

Conſolation, moſt of its Topicks are Faulty and Defective, 1335. a. Reflections on the common Places, 1335. a.

Conſolatory Arguments, for the moſt part improper towards obtaining their end, 218. b.

Conſtantia, Wife to the Emperor Henry VI. brought to Bed publickly in the Meadows of Palermo, to prevent Suſpicion, 1612. a.

Conſtantine, The inconſiſtency of his Edicts relating to Arius, 386. A. His Donation, 1051. I. His Cruelties, 1281. A. What the Pagans aſcribed his Converſion to, ibid. B.

Conſtantine, the Reaſons of his Converſion to the Chriſtian Religion, according to the Heatheniſh Authors, 1290. b. The variations in ancient Hiſtory, about the Cauſe of putting his Son Criſpus to Death, 1289. a. his Donation, a Tale, and an Abſurdity, 1053. b. his Decree, Condemning thoſe to Death, who ſhould keep any of Arius's Books, ſaid to be a ſtrange Extravagance, 368. b.

Conſul, A Roman Conſul turn'd out of his Office for not reſpecting a Letter from the Senate, 837. E.

Conſulate, Who was the firſt Stranger that enjoy'd this Office at Rome, 471. D. ad fin.

Conſuls, Two Brothers Conſuls together, an. 595. the firſt time that this happened, 266.

Continence, Treated by the firſt Reformers in their Diſputes about Celibacy as an extraordinary Gift, 2348. b. Continence of the Ladies of one particular Family in Rome, 837. b. ſevere between a Man and a Woman, who have otherwiſe all things in common, 26. what the Roman Catholicks ſay to thoſe, who charge them with their falſe Pretenſions to it, 574. b. A rare Example of this Virtue, 10. b. Another Example, 279. B. It's ſometimes a Prejudice to the Health of the fair Sex, 304. G. How they ought to govern themſelves, who make Vows of Continency, 1327. L.

Contradictions, Religious Controvertiſts and Barriſters are very ſubject to them, 299. a. Theſe own the Charge fairly, thoſe always deny it, ibid.

Controverſies, a Method for the right handling them, 553. a. b. Who brought Religious Controverſie into the beſt Form, in the Judgment of Biſhop Mountague, 667. a. There is no Compoſing them by General, Equivocal, or obſcure Formularies, 2105. G.

Controverſy, 'twere to be wiſh'd that Criticks would Collect the ſcatter'd pieces of Eccleſiaſtical Controverſy, compare the Replies and Rejoinders of the Parties, that the Strength and Weakneſs, the Honeſty and Diſingenuity might appear at one View, 2166. b. the moſt difficult Religious Controverſies ariſe upon different Explications of Scripture Paſſages, 473. a.

Controvertiſts, Examples which perplex thoſe of the Church of Rome, 143. C. The Controvertiſts, who kept in their Writings any Meaſures as Men of Probity, were never odious to the Roman Catholicks, 1123. E. The weight of a Controvertiſt's Teſtimony when he would blacken his Adverſaries, 1878. b. One muſt have a care of being ſurprized by their Air of Triumph, 2098. b.

Contzen, (a Jeſuite) gives a relation of Violences exercis'd by the Lutherans on the Calviniſts, 1730. C.

Convents, Their Juſtification attributed to the Devil, 235. a. The ſtrange corruption of them in the XVth Century, 829. a.

Converſation, a Saying of ſome Ladies upon a Languiſhing Converſation, 537, a. 539. a. Who are the moſt agreeable Converſation, 2552. H. The Slavery of being eſteem'd Excellent Converſation, 2573. a.

Converts, obliged to ſpeak ill of their old Religion, 710. b. Are almoſt always obliged to ſpeak ill of that ſide which they have quitted, 759. a.

Copronymus (Conſtantine) the occaſion of his odious Nick-name, 934. a.

Copulation, which have moſt Pleaſure, the Males or the Females in the act of Copulation, 2895. a. b.

Coquetts, how they may be known, 2645. A.

Coras (John) A Counſellor of the Parliament of Tholouſe hang'd in his Robes for the Proteſtant Religion, 1767. a.

Cordelier, how Sacrificed, and to whom, 687. b. their Alcoran, when, and by whom written, 1344. a.

Cordemoi, An Examination of what he ſaies of Eudes, and Charles Martel, 10. b. His Judgment on the hardineſs of Modern Authors, 13. a.

Cordus Cremutius, put to Death for praiſing Brutus, and ſaying Caſſius was the laſt of the Romans, 883. a.

Coreiſchites, a Tribe from whence Mahomet is ſaid to be Deſcended, 2091. b.

Corneille, a Complaint of the exceſs of the Paſſions in his Andromache, by an Actor, who Dy'd in Acting them, 260. a.

Cornelia, Her tenderneſs for Pompey, the Cauſe of his ruin, 2273. a.

Cornelius a Lapide, aſcribes his own Thoughts to the Jews, 48. b.

Cornuelle (Mademoiſelle) a pleaſant Paſſage of her from the Menagiana, 1009. a.

Corunna, in Spain, the Reaſon of this Name, according to a Tradition embraced by Paul Jovius, 1647. b.

Corynth, the Women of Corynth Aſſembled in the Temple of Juno, where they were ſtripp'd, and their Clothes burn'd, 2528. D.

Coſmeticks, how Ancient, and how far honeſt and allowable, 1037. b.

C R.

Vol. II. 808. Cyran (Father) inſiſted on a Charge of Incontinence, 1063. a. Diſcover'd by the ſmell thoſe who had violated the Laws of Chaſtity, 1177. C. ad med.

Vol. III 1551. Cotta (Pontifex Maximus) the only Reaſon why he thought it Dangerous, not to believe there was a God, 1809. D. ad. med.

Vol. IV. 1459. Cotys, a Barbarian Prince, whom Ovid compliments highly in his Exile, adde quod ingenuus, &c. and whoſe Protection he deſires, 1026. b. His Caprice and Cruelty not to be conceiv'd without conſidering the Tendency of the infamous Theology of the Pagans, 1025. a.

Covetouſneſs, how it ſometimes opens the Eyes to ſee a falſe Worſhip, 119. a.

Councils (Eccleſiaſtical) the neceſſity of the holy Spirit's preſiding in them, 236. a. The precipitate proceeding of the Council of Epheſus, in the Condemnation of Neſtorius, 1360. b. His ſevere Invective againſt 'em, 465. b.

Council of Baſil; all the Relicks in Baſil placed one day along the Seats where the Biſhops were to ſit, 142, 143. The Deſign of this, ibid.

Council of Conſtance; the Project of a Reformation preſented in it, 171. b.

Council of Trent; what the Abbé St. Cyran ſaid of it, 28. a. The Spirit of this Council, 540. F. Who was called the right Arm of this Council, 1208. D. Reaſons why Vergerius was not admitted to the Council, 2950. F. Who are the propereſt people to draw up the Deciſions of Councils, 540. F. Why it is neceſſary that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould preſide in them, 2360. B. Their oppreſſing of Hereticks by the Imperial Authority, 2362. E. Have only ſerved to render them more obſtinate, ibid. Whether Councils lawfully Aſſembled may err in point of Faith, 1779. A.

Court; a Deſcription of Court-Attendance and Dependance, 2446. a. No Guard againſt the Attempt of a Queen's impoſing a falſe Child, 1349. a. When the Ladies coming to Court began firſt in France, 1353. a. The ill Effects of this Cuſtom, 1356. b. The great Model of moſt Religions, 2311. b. A Deſcription of the various Parts people act who ſollicit at Court, 2375. a. How difficult they are at Court in the Choice of Perſons, 2930. C. ad fin.

Court of Rome; its Corruption, 894. H. Had a hand in the Aſſaſſination of James Clement, 1628. Q. ad fin. An inſtance of its Tyranny, 2346. o.

Courtiers ought not to imitate the Huguenots, who invoke only God alone, 1056. E. ad med. Compared to the Euripus, 1775. C. ad fin. Are generally given rather to Ambition than Jealouſie, 2059. b. What Talents do they ſtand in need of moſt, 1395. B.

Courtezans; Cities anciently fam'd for fair Courtezans, a ſure ſign of their Opulency and great Reſort, 2357. Books of the Courtezans of famous Towns are of ancient Date, 208. b. They raiſe Men of Merit and no Merit, 937. a. Will be a Cauſe of Complaint as long as this World laſts, ibid. b.

Courtezans are, and ever have been, the way to Preferment, 937. b. And to the gaining a Proceſs at Law, 989. a Have a Power over Mens Hearts, even when they are grown old, 2650. B. Courtezans conſcientious, 2545. Q.

Crantor; his Opinion that an Exemption from Paſſions would coſt too dear, and transform into Stones or Savages, 1028. His Book of Conſolation, 1058. b.

Crater; what properly was the uſe of it among the Ancients, 1594. b.

Cratippus; his diſcreet Behaviour in a Diſpute with Pompey about Providence after his Defeat at Pharſalia, 1030. a. His Notion of the Soul of Man to ſupport his Opinion of the Truth of Divination by Dreams, 1031. a.

Crates (the Cynick) the Proof of Hipparchia's Paſſion for him, 1669. Where he conſummated his Marriage with her, ibid. b.

Creation; all Philoſophers are forced to admit it, 231. G. Art. VI. They who deny it are of Neceſſity obliged to allow Genii or Angels, ſome Beneficent, and other maliciouſly diſpoſed; the Importance of this Doctrine, 1238. a.

Creation not underſtood by the firſt, who invented it to be the producing out of nothing, 2184. a. Of what value the Author of the Book of it is among the Jews, 138. a.

Credulity, as it is the Ground of multiplying Miracles to Exceſs, proves often its own Cure, 67. a. Stifled by its own Fecundity, 67. H. Is the Source of the Multiplication of Miracles, ibid. Is blameable in the Orthodox as well as in Hereticks, 179. a. A Reflection on the Diſpoſition of the People to Credulity, 1229. 1230. C. ad fin.

C Y.

Cremonius (Cæſar) his Epitaph, ſhewing he did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, 1031. b.

Crequi (Marſhal) his Judgment of a Book-learn'd Frier after fifteen day's Converſation.

Creſpi (Treaty of) made by Francis the Iſt. proteſted againſt by the Dauphin and ſeveral of the Nobility of France, 1355. a.

Cretes, who were the firſt that wore Creſts on their Helmets, 2715. b.

Crime (State) Zealots mix Accuſations of State-crimes with thoſe of falſe Doctrine, 23.

Crimes are maintained by Crimes, 2077. b. The Crime of Nonconformity, who the Invention of it is aſcribed to, 1886. P.

Critias, his unnatural Deſign of depopulating his native Country of Attica, 1033. b. His Character of Learning, preciſely that of all Atheiſts, 1035. a. His account of the Origin of Religion, ibid. b.

Criticks; an inſtance of their differing about the Style of Authors, 1771. a. None ſo ſevere as thoſe who have never known the Labour of writing, 1571. a. A Rule for thoſe who impute certain Things to Authors, 502. a. Adviſed to beware of falling into ſeven Miſtakes upon reading of certain Books, 957. a. Remarkable Inſtances of great Criticks miſtaking modern Compoſition for Fragments of the Ancients, 2914. a. b. 2915. a. Inſtances of the Confuſions which they ſometimes occaſion in the Republick of Letters, 420. A. They are rarely agreed about the reading of Manuſcripts, ibid. They ſometimes change the Readings to ſerve a turn, or when they don't underſtand them, ibid. It is ſurpriſing, that two of the moſt excellent Men among them ſhould have been ignorant of a Fact, that there are few Men of Letters but know, ibid. Criticks on Mens Writings ought not to be confounded with Writers of Satyr and Libels, 909 D. The Reaſon why, ibid. The ableſt are ſubject to give us falſe Corrections, 1076. A. Their Illuſions, ibid. B. ad med. Their Taſtes extreamly different, 1739. a.

Critical Learning; the Study of it fallen, 175. b.

Criticiſm; this Study is quite gone to decay, 175. a. A Fatality inſeparable from it, 1183. B. ad fin.

Crito, Socrates's Diſciple, one of the firſt that wrote a Treatiſe of Coſmeticks, or beautifying Waſhes, 1037. b.

Croniades, a Diſciple of Epicurus, kept a Journal of his amorous Affairs and good Meals, 1192. a.

Croſs; an account of the Tree from which the Wood of the Croſs was taken, 36. a. Images of the Croſs condemned anciently, by whom, 2485. a. The Inſcription of the Croſs ſaid to be found in Rome in the Pontificate of Innocent VIII. 1755.

Cruelty; The Enormity of the Cruelties committed in ſome Parts of Europe, between the Years 1345 and 1390. not to be parallel'd in the preſent Age, 2325. a. Cruelty of Princes covered by Liberality, and a Care in puniſhing Miſdemeanors, 443. Reaſons for tranſmitting to Poſterity the Cruelties which Religion has occaſioned between Parties, 2084. b.

Cruſades, why they never ſucceeded, 696. E.

Cuckoldom; The Cuſtom of typifying Cuckoldom by Horns how ancient, 1811. a. & ſeq. One of the Puniſhments imprecated of old in ſolemn Treaties of Peace on the Violators, according to Homer, 1159. b. n. A Curſe of great Antiquity, 805. Wherein it reſembles Death, 537. b. The ſame common Places of Conſolation for both, ibid.

Curſes uſed by the Lacedemonians, Cuckoldom, the Itch of Building, and Love of Horſes, 1159. b.

Curtius (Quintus) a large Gap in him between the 1ſt and 2d Chapters of the 10th Book, 1581. a.

Cuſtom; its Authority, 346. a. Renders that innocent in one Country, which is againſt all Decency and good Manners in another, 2654. M. 4. Par. ad med.

Cydias, a Painter, how much his Argonatus ſold for, 1695. G.

Cynicks, a Set of Philoſophers, who was their Founder, A. 1100. 1101. Why they were called by this Name, 1670. D. ad fin. Their Sophiſms in Defence of their Bruitiſh Actions, ibid. Their Diſtinction of Beings and half Beings, 2514. b. The Reaſon of their Name, according to Lactantius and others, 1670. b.

Cyniras, King of Cyprus, Difficulties to puzzle thoſe who take him to be the Noah of the Bible, 990. a. Founder of the Worſhip of the Goddeſs Venus, who had been his Whore, ibid. Inventer of the Hammer, Anvil, &c. ibid.

Cypreſs; the Reaſon of its being uſed among the Ancients at Funerals, 1335. a. n. Why called the Virgins, 167. b.

Cypſelus, the firſt Founder of Tyrannical Government, according to Herodotus, 2557. a.

Cyran (Abbe de St.) his Criticiſms on Garaſſe the Jeſuite's Works, one of the beſt of its kind, and the moſt uſeful, 1384. a. His Compliment to the Jeſuites, ibid. C.

Cyrenaicks, a Sect of Philoſophers, 1641. F. Wherein they differed from the Cynicks, ibid.

Cyril (St.) reproached on the Score of his precipitate Condemnation of Neſtorius, 2360. N. Depoſed by the Eaſtern Biſhops in the Council of Epheſus, 2361. a. The Reaſons of a Proteſtant Miniſter for maintaining the Reputation of Neſtorius againſt St. Cyril, 2363. b. Cenſured by the Emperor, 2360. a. His irregular way of proceeding with regard to Neſtorius, ibid.

Cyrillee Lucar, Patriarch of Conſtantinople; his Confeſſion of Faith conformable to that of Geneva, 398.

Cyrus the younger, his Manifeſto when he was going to depoſe his Brother, 995. a. The modern Form upon ſuch Occaſions, ibid. Why he fell in Love with Aſpaſia, 993. C. ad in. Why he thought himſelf more deſerving than his elder Brother, 1054. C.

D A.

DAcier ſhews his good Taſte in declaring for Horace againſt Quintilian with regard to Lucilius, 2042. a.

Dædalus, his extraordinary way of fortifying Agrigentum in Sicily, 1404. b.

Daillé (Mr.) his Book de uſu Patrum admired by the Presbyterians, and diſreliſhed by the Epiſcopal Party in England, 1041. a. His Cenſure of the Fathers, particularly St. Auſtin, 85. a. 86. a. What he ſaies of Tertullian, 2733. b. With what deſign did he read the Relations of Travellers, 2936. I. ad in.

Damage; Whether one is always obliged to repair a Damage done, by Reſtitution or otherwiſe, 9. a.

Damaſcen (John) the firſt of the Scholaſtick Divines, 1045. The Rule of the Faith of the Greeks about the Euchariſt, ibid. b. Many Catholicks don't believe the Miracle about his hand 1044. b.

Damned; what Prudentius thought of their State, and their number, 2711. B. ad in.

Dancing; diſapproving Dances, very prejudicial to the growth of the Reformation, 2654. b.

Danes driven out of Scotland by the Bravery of a Peaſant, 1566.

Dante; the Names of his Miſtreſſes preſerved, but not of his Wives, 1049. a. Furniſhes Arguments to thoſe who affirm he was a good Catholick, and to thoſe who deny it, 1052. a. His ſharp Anſwer to his Patron the Prince of Verona, ibid. b. Guilty of a ridiculous Lie, in making Hugh Capet the Son of a Butcher, 840. His Comedy of Hell, of Purgatory, and of Paradiſe, 1044.

Darius; the concern he was in while his Queen was in Alexander's hands, 2074. b. His Eſteem for Alexander, when aſſured he had offered her no incivility, ibid.

Daſſoucy (Monſieur) why called by the Women of Montpellier a Heretick in Love, 1056. b. In danger of being torn in pieces by the Women of Montpellier, 1622. C.

David; whether two Families of his Race paſſed into Spain after the Deſtruction of the firſt Temple, 31. B.

Davila; the Editions of Davila printed in the Netherlands varied from the Italian Editions, in complaiſance to ſome illuſtrious Families, 250. a. He and Maimbourg entirely oppoſite in their relation with regard to the Duke of Guiſe, 1517. B.

Dauphin; the Dauphin of France makes a ſolemn Proteſtation againſt the Peace concluded by his Father Francis the Iſt at Creſpy, 1355. a.

Dauphin of France has the Letters of Bongars given him to read, 621. a.

Dead (The) praying for the Dead, by whom condemned in the Vth Century, 2963.

Death, why preferable to Poverty, 630. a. Diſcourſes of it even from the Pulpit, ungrateful to a certain Prince, 2337. a. A fine thought of the Philoſopher Arceſilaus on Death, 320. In what caſes a Man's killing himſelf may be the ſign of a great Mind, 359. b. No Death nor Generation, properly ſpeaking, in Nature, 2611. a. Sudden Death reckoned a Bleſſing, and one of the Prerogatives of the golden Age, 2947. a.

Debellare; the difference between it and vincere, in point of Glory among the Romans, 927. b.

Decalogue; impracticable in the preſent State of humane Nature, 668. D. ad fin.

Decemvirs abrogated, and why, 279. 280.

Decrees, Academical, Synodical, &c. the manner how they are ſometimes extorted, 109. C. 110. D.

Dedications; Epiſtles Dedicatory when they ceas'd being profitable to Authors, 1287. a.

Defects; ſome Defects have given Names to illuſtrious Families, 470. A. A Reflection on ſecret Defects, 478. H.

Deiſts; At what time did they firſt begin to be known by this Name, in oppoſition to Atheiſts, 1973. b.

Deity; an Argument to prove the Exiſtence of a Deity, 369. B. The moſt profligate Perſons mentioned in Hiſtory have acknowledged a Deity, 812. M. The Pagans imagined that there were Deities which were jealous and envious of the Proſperity of Mankind, 836. A. An Heroick Prayer on this occaſion, ibid. Whether the Exiſtence of a Deity being effac'd, Men might retain the Ideas of Honeſty, 1815. a. There are certain Nations which have no Knowledge of a Deity, 1803. b. The Deities of the ſecond Rank were mortal, according to ſome of the Pagans, 1537. b. The Pagans repreſented the Deity under the Idea of a Being, which puniſhed Sinners by plunging them into new Sins, 2255. a. Numa would not ſuffer the Deity to be repreſented by Images, 2636. N. ad med. Three Means of reſembling the Deity, 2545. b. The Tutelar Deities were evoked out of the Places that were beſieged, when there was a likelihood of taking them, 2768. a. See God, Divinity.

Delators, a Character of them, 598. E. A wiſe and innocent Perſon ſhould deſire no other Victory over them, than a Deliverance from them, ibid. Are compared to Dogs, which are ſuffered to bark at good and bad alike, 905. a. See Accuſers.

Delos, its Inhabitants the firſt who cramm'd and fatted Fowls, 1278. C. 2. Par.

Delphos, its Temple pillaged, 2597. A. Its vaſt Riches, ibid.

Delphians puniſhed with Peſtilence and Famine for the Murder of Æſop, 1139. E. What they did to deliver themſelves from theſe Judgments, ibid.

Deluge; it's impoſſible to know any thing before it, but by the help of Moſes, 1253. D. ad fin. The Conſternation that People were in upon a Parſon's preaching a ſudden univerſal Deluge, 2813. B.

Demagogues kept the Republick of Athens in a real Slavery, 2543. O. ad fin.

Democritus judged worthy of divine Honours on the Score of ſome of his Predictions; laughed at all humane Life, 1081. What we ought to judge of his Opinion concerning Nature, which he called God, ibid. O. Whether he be much different from Pere Malebranche, ibid. His Syſtem not ſo abſurd as that of Spinoza, 1084. Q. Suppoſed a Soul in each Atom, 1924. E. ad in.

Demons; ſeveral have been of Opinion that Demons ingender, 702. R.

Demonſtration; Arguments which are ſtrictly demonſtrative, when long, and deduced from ſeveral Premiſes, are believed only upon the Credit of a few, 295. b.

Demonſtration (Moral) its true Nature, 543. b.

Demoſthenes; His Artifice to avoid haranguing the Athenians after he had touched a Bribe, 1582. a. His pathetick Apoſtrophe to Minerva, and Invective againſt the People of Athens, when he was going to be baniſhed, 2544. b. The longer his Orations are, the finer they are, 369. a.

Dennis (Abby of St.) its Monks, why encouraged in their Diſſoluteneſs by the Court of France, 23. a.

Deſcartes, his Obſervation about the origin of Philoſophical Errors holds good as to Errors in Criticiſm, 879. a. The difference between his Opinion about the Nature of Brutes, and that of Cicero and the Stoicks, 2519. a. His Judgment of Hobbs's Book de Cive, 1679. a. Praiſed in a publick Oration at Utrecht in his Life-time, by a poſitive Order from the Magiſtrate, 1179. a. Brings an Action againſt Martin Schoockius, a Profeſſor at Groningen, for calling him an Atheiſt, and obtains Judgment againſt him, 256. a. His Opinion which makes Brutes meer Machines, highly favourable to the Doctrines of the Chriſtian Religion, 2604. b. The Antiquity of his Opinion about the Souls of Brutes, 2516. a. His Epitaph, 236. N. A Reflection on the Doubts which he exacts the better to arrive at the Truth, 1145. L. Owns that this Maxim, viz. God can neither deceive nor be deceived, admits of many Exceptions, 2635. a.

Deſpreaux (Mr.) the Reaſon he alledges for not ſinging the King of France's Victories in 1672. 2886. I. ad med. His Satyrs have need of a Commentary already, 1055. One cannot be of his Opinion touching the four Verſes which he aſcribes to Nero, 2556. D. ad med. An Obſervation in his Art of Poetry examined, 2675. I.

Deſtiny. See Fate.

Devil (The) his baſhful and weak Voice, 490. a. Can make uſe of a Wand as an occaſional Cauſe, 2. a. Apes the Works of God, ibid. Whether they who think there is a Devil, muſt neceſſarily believe the Exiſtence of a God, 2633. b. Compact with the Devil, 801. C. ad med. I. ad med. The Origin of Devils according to the Rabins, 1254. The Doctrine of the Pagans concerning Devils, 3045. I. ad. med. 'Tis very ſtrange, that Chriſtian Judges ſhould receive their Teſtimony as

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 1459.

true, and reject as null the Evidence brought againſt them, 1454. G. The Devil oppoſes all Truths, which God thinks fit to declare to Men, 1109. H. H. How it comes to paſs that he has oppoſed the Eſtabliſhment of Mahometiſm, ibid.

Devotion; Books of Devotion by Perſons of a looſe Life, a Scandal to good Minds, 341. a. The Writing Books of Devotion conſiſtent even with Atheiſm, and a contempt for all Religion. 346. b. The Scandal given by Nocturnal Devotions in the Primitive Church, the cauſe of aboliſhing them. 2871. b.

Diagoras, ſurnamed the Atheiſt, what drew him into his Impiety, 1091. C. He Publiſhed the Reaſons of his turning Atheiſt. ibid. C.

Dialogue; what are the Laws of it. 1214. Q.

Diana, an admirable Statue of this Goddeſs, 759. in Text. The Thought of an Hiſtorian on her Suffering her Temple of Epheſus to be burnt, 1121. C.

Dictionaries, nothing ſhould be ſuppreſs'd in them, 61 F. A Dictionary of the Bible, a Remark on one of its Articles, 1061. L. It ſhould not be thought ſtrange, if ſometimes in this Dictionary it be made appear, that Reaſon ſets us with regard to the Myſteries of the Goſpel, 3081. F Δ. ad fin.

Differences in Religion magnified by the Parties or Promoters, and always ſuppoſed of very great Conſequence, 1811. a.

Digeſts, when firſt began to be read in the Schools, 1777. in Text.

Dignities; in what caſe an honeſt Man ought to refuſe them. 419. F.

Dinant (Town of) treated with extreme Rigour, 761. C.

Diocles; his Surprize upon ſeeing Epicurus upon his Knees in a Temple, 1194. M.

Diodorus Siculus; the firſt of the Greek Hiſtorians who left off Fabling, 681. a. What he ſays of the Faults of Hiſtorians, 2884. C. ad med.

Diogenes; of Opinion that Beaſts had no Feeling nor Paſſion, 2515. a. The ground of this Opinion, ibid. He is the Inventer of voluntary Poverty, Faſting and Aſceticks, ibid. A ſuppoſed Diſpute between him and a civiliz'd Perſon about the Lawfulneſs of lying with one's Wife in Publick, 1670. b. His Anſwer to Antiſthenes, who took up a Cudgel to drub him out of Doors, 1100. 1101. A. His anſwer to Alexander, ibid. F. ad fin. Whether he was an Atheiſt, ibid. N. Is taken by a Pirate, and draws an Argument againſt Providence from it, 1581. I. His Opinion touching the Souls of Beaſts, 2514. C. ad med. He laboured to render himſelf inſenſible, ibid. Is not ſo far from Platoniſm as is commonly believed, ibid.

Diogenes Laertius; his Brevity ſometimes inſufferable, 358. a.

Diogenes of Apollonia; what he ſaid of the firſt Cauſe, 1105. B. ad in ad med. His Syſtem differed hardly any thing at all from Spinoſizme, ibid. How he Philoſophized about the Production of the World, ibid.

Dion, he and Tacitus differ about the reaſon which induced Auguſtus to make a Law againſt Libels, 882. G. ad med. He aſcribes to Cicero a Harangue which he himſelf has forged, 1368. F. ad fin. He falſifies two things in it, which ought to give his Reader a miſtruſt of ſeveral others, ibid.

Dionyſius, Biſhop of Alexandria, thought that the Revelations were written by Cerinthus, and St. John's Name put to 'em by that Heretick, 9921. b.

Dionyſius the Tyrant, how he expreſs'd himſelf, when he would ſay, that a Man ought never to demiſe the Tyrannick Power, 2528. F. ad fin.

Dionyſius (Halicarnaſſenſis) his good Taſte for Hiſtory, 1077. C.

Diſeaſes; Cabages ſaid to be a Sovereign Remedy for all Diſeaſes, 973. a.

Diſpenſations; A Diſpenſation for three young Widows to have a Man upon occaſion, ask'd of Clement VII. 2748. b.

Diſputes (Religious) the danger of entring into 'em with Perſons of greater or meaner parts than our ſelves almoſt equal, 435. b. Their Original and fatal Effects, according to the Targum, 18. a. In the heat of Religious Diſputes Men may let fall ſome Expreſſions of Hereſy, who at bottom are Orthodox, 69. a. What the heat of a Diſpute produces, 69. A. One is generally ſtronger on the Offenſive than on the Defenſive in it, 461. B. A Diſpute of twenty ſeven Years between two Divines, 1953. C. The Laws of Diſputation, 2628. C. ad med. Nothing is more uſeful toward getting clear of a Diſpute than a witty Jeſt, 2518. b. What was the Diſpute between Cain and Abel, according to the Targum, 18. b. When Diſputes degenerate into Perſonal Reflections, they never fail to injure the Reputation of the Diſputants, 1043. b. They are in this caſe the worſt Snare that their Deſtiny can lay for them, ibid. The miſchief in Diſputes of Religion is, that the ſame Perſons are Judges, and Parties, 1116. a. What abundance of Diſputes might ceaſe would People but underſtand one another, 1559. A.

Divination by Fire, by whom invented, 516. b. How Cratippus reaſoned on this Subject, 1031. d.

Divinities; believed to envy the Proſperity of Mankind, 836. a. A Divinity ſo much the more devoutly reverenced as it was not known at all, 930. H. ad in. There are two ſorts of Unbelievers, with regard to the Exiſtence, or the Non-exiſtence of the Divinity or Deity. Why better known, according to Lucan, in Greece, and in Italy, than at Marſeilles, 1110. A. ad med. The Pagans laid a great ſtreſs upon Tradition, to prove the Exiſtence of a Deity, 1368. Y Δ. ad fin.

Diviſibility, ad infinitum, deſtroys all Contiguity, 307. F. ad med. It ſuppoſes the Penetration and Dimenſions, ibid. Several difficulties againſt the Geometrical Demonſtrations of a Diviſibility ad infinitum, ibid.

Divorce; a Wife's demanding Conjugal Duty, ſo as to be overheard by the Neighbourhood, a ſufficient Cauſe of Divorce amongſt the Jews, 1257. b.

Doctors, happy for ſome of 'em that the People are not able to Catechize them, 436. b. The form of Doctor in Law; when it firſt commenced in Univerſities, and by whoſe means, 1778. One might be apt often to take them for meer Comedians, if it were lawful to judge of the Thoughts, 436. E. Some are very happy, in that the People will ſuffer themſelves to be led by the Noſe, according to their old wont, ibid. It's very rare to ſee Doctors exempt from all Ambition and Avarice, 1890. B. ad in.

Doctrine, inſiſting on the Ancient and common received Doctrine as the Proteſtants do, ſeems to ſuppoſe the Principle of the Authority of the Church, 190. b. The difference between rejecting the Reaſons alleged for the Doctrine, and rejecting the Doctrines themſelves, 2630. b. Some Doctors conſtrain'd to renounce a Theſis, in which they maintain'd, that Ego amat was as well as Ego amo, 2551. G. ad fin. There are a world of People, who are admirable at diſcovering the weak ſide of a Doctrine, and who yet can never find the ſtrong ſide of it, 406. b. No ſurer way of Attacking Doctrines than that of turning them into Ridicule, 2656, b. 2679. a. They who are fond of particular Doctrines, look upon all thoſe who oppoſe them as ſo many falſe Brothers, 575. b.

Doctrines very oppoſite to the true Faith, 728. B. What is neceſſary to be known, in order to the well Qualifying of a Doctrine, 2804. b.

Dogmaticks, The ordinary and inevitable Shelve on which they are loſt, 327. E. ad med. Do not propoſe the Arguments on both ſides, with the ſame force, 998. a.

Dogs, the true Reaſon of their never going into the Turkiſh Moſques, or the Greek Churches, 1647. a. A Thought of Cicero's, about the Dogs of the Capitol, 595. C. Dogs never go into Churches or Moſques of Miſitra, 1647. 1. The Reaſon of this, ibid. A Sermon on the different kinds of Dogs, 1126. a.

Dog's-ſtar, Its Worſhip, by whom Eſtabliſh'd, and the Nature of this Worſhip, 354. a. b.

Dolabella; his Manners, his Conduct, and the Troubles of which he was the Cauſe, 2922, F. G.

Dominicans always in War with the Franciſcans, 788. F. The Earneſtneſs of their Generals to get the Pugio Fidei publiſhed, 2010. A.

Dominick (St.) ſaid to be the firſt who had the knowledge of the Philoſopher's Stone, 147. b.

Domitian; what is told of Apollonius Tyanæus at the time of Domitian's Aſſaſſination, Diſſert. Numb. 1.

Domitius (L.) a young Gentleman of the firſt Quality in Rome, ſo modeſt he could not name the Name of the Courtezan Chelidonis, 964. b.

Donatiſts, their Error about Baptiſm condemned in a General Council, 1897. O.

Dorieus, Son of Diagoras, his Hiſtory, 1095. a.

Dorotheus; whether there was a Biſhop of Tyre of this Name who ſuffered Martyrdom, 1198. a.

Dort; its Synod would not admit the Remonſtrants as Members, but only as Perſons cited before them, 1200. 1201, 1202. See alſo 2995. I. & ſeq.

Drabitius made People believe that he ſhould baptize the Turk, 1118. b. Whether his Name was known in France, 1857. A. ad med. He ſays nothing of Tekeli, ibid. His Tragical End, ibid. D.

Draco, wrote his Laws in Blood, what the meaning of this is, 1938. Y.

Drelincourt (Charles) a handſom Anſwer of his to a French Biſhop, 364. A. An Extract of his Anſwer to Prince Erneſt, Landgrave of Heſſe. 2542. E.

Dreams; a Reflection on the pretended Preſages of Dreams, 2132. b. Can't always be thought the Effect of Chance, and confound Unbelievers more than they are willing to own, 2139. b. Alledg'd by Tertullian to prove the Excellency of our Souls, 347. b.

Drinking; hard Drinking ſuch an accompliſhment in Perſia, that Darius values himſelf on it in his Epitaph, 1053. a. The way of Drinking in Lacedæmon, 1037. b. What Demoſthenes ſaid to thoſe who gave Philip of Macedon the Praiſe of bearing a great deal of Drink, 1054. B.

Drunkenneſs; Prize of Drunkenneſs, and the Succeſs of the Combat, 3079. b. A Treatiſe of his own Drunkenneſs, publiſh'd by M. Anthony the Triumvir, 277. b. The exceſſive Drunkenneſs of ancient Rome, 2908. b.

Druſilla, Daughter of Agrippa; whether ſhe abjur'd the Jewiſh Religion, 1137. a.

Druſilla (Julia) her Inceſt with her Brother Caligula, 1138. b. Impieties committed after her Death to Honour her Memory, ibid.

Druſius; the Judgment which Father Simon makes of him, 1121. b.

Druſus (Marcus Livius) his fine Anſwer to an Architect, 1138. n.

Druſus, Brother of Tiberius, his Friendſhip for Germanicus, 1177. a.

Druſus, Son of Germanicus and Agrippina, a Fame ſpread among the People that he had made his Eſcape out of Priſon, 1178. b.

Dryades, the difference between them and the Hamadryads, according to Benſerade, 580. b. A Compariſon between the Drunkenneſs of the North, and the Laſciviouſneſs of the South Countries of Europe, 1223. a. b. 1224. a. b. How Infamous in Spain, 1225. b.

Duaren, ſaid to have been a Proteſtant, 1144. C. The Reaſon he gives why he felt his Paſſion for the Reformed Religion to diminiſh, ibid.

Duelling, the force of a Sermon againſt Duelling, 1288. b. A memorable Duel between twenty two Frenchmen and as many Flemmings, Febr. 5. 1600. 708.

Duels, the firſt time that Seconds fought Duels in France, 1688.

Duræus; the Difficulties he ſurmounted to ſee his Friend Paul Ferri, 1302. b. Not being able to unite the Lutherans and Calviniſts, he undertakes to reunite all the Chriſtian Sects, 1150. C. His Conference with Ferry and Ancillon, 1302. E. Becomes ſomewhat a Viſionary, ibid. An Error of Mr. Amyrault about the time of his Death, ibid. And of the Catalogue of Oxford, which confounds him with the Jeſuit Duræus, ibid.

Durazzo (Charles of) his cruel Treatment of Joan Queen of Naples, 2324. b. Afterwards has his own Head ſtruck off by the Queen of Hungary's command, as he is drinking a Glaſs of Wine, 2325. a. A Hiſtory of the Princes of this Name, 2265. a.

Dutch (The) what they owe their Liberty to, 454. a.

Dytenus; a generous Conteſt between him and his Brother, which ſhould ſuffer Death, decided by their Father and Mother, 1007. b.

E A.

EARS, a Catalogue of Men who had a faculty of moving their Ears, 1646. a.

Eating; the little time allow'd for Eating formerly in France, 2665. b.

Earth; who was the firſt that maintain'd the Motion of the Earth round the Sun, 348. a. Cleanthes of Opinion, that his Country ought to try Ariſtarchus for Irreligion on the ſcore of this Notion of his, ibid.

Eccleſiaſticks; their irregular Lives turn'd to Advantage by the Sovereigns, 23. F. ad fin. Love to change their Poſts, 45. a. Are inclin'd to Flatter the higher Powers, 195. b. Are much to be dreaded when they turn Accuſers, 362. G. There are few of the abler Sort but love to make a noiſe in the World, 587. b. The ſame Spirit which has procured them ſo many Honours and Eſtates, had reign'd before in Paganiſm, 1006. B. The Rigour of the ancient Canons with regard to them, 1462. F. They praiſe all thoſe who are liberal to the Church, ibid. I. Several of them will rather ſtand Excommunicated by the Pope than quit their Wives, 1470. C. Thoſe of the North more unwilling to ſubmit to the Law of Celibacy, than thoſe of the South, ibid. The number of thoſe who find the Yoke of Celibacy too heavy is innumerable, 1475. S. Their Vices incurable, 1563. Y. Who introduced the Cuſtom of depoſing thoſe who ſhould lye with their Wives after their Ordination to the Prieſthood, 1599. They ſhould not be ſuffer'd to keep young Servant Maids, when they are not married, 1781. b. 'Tis dangerous medling with them, 2942. D. ad in. See Clergy.

Eclipſes; who was the firſt among the Greeks that could foretel an Eclipſe, 1673. b. Which of the ancient Greeks after him firſt calculated the Proportions of the Intervals of Eclipſes, ibid. How terrible to People before the Days of Socrates and Anaxagoras, 325. a. When the Terror cauſed by the Eclipſes began to be cured in Athens, 1530. b.

Eſchines, an Orator, undergoes a thouſand ſharp Reproaches and why, 1209. a. A Story which he tells, 2684. b.

Eſop, ſaid to have riſen from the Dead, and fought with the Greeks at the Streights of Thermopylæ, 1236. b.

Eſop, a Roman Tragedian, his incredible Expence and Prodigality, 1228. b. Over acted a Part in his Tragick Fury, 1229. a.

Eſop, a Comedian in Rome, his Son drinks off a Pearl of great value, 1509. a.

Eſſex (Earl of) whether it be true that Queen Elizabeth ſhew'd his Head to Mareſchal Biron, 1424. C.

Eſte (Houſe of) a Blot in their Scutcheon remembred, 345.

Eſtrix, a Jeſuit, is Author of the Book de fraudibus Hæreticorum, 1653. b.

E'Tampes (Dutcheſs d') her Treachery like to have put an end to the French Monarchy, 1241. b. Her Virtue on a Suppoſition that Francis I. never lay with her, exceeded that of Heroins in Romance or martyr'd Virgins, 1245. b. She prevails with Francis I. to demand ſome Jewels of Madam de Chateau Briand, which he had preſented her, 1078. b. Reflections on her Calviniſm, and her Motives, according to Varillas, of embracing it, 1289. a. Her pretended Lutheraniſm, ibid. Her Husband has Inſpection made into her Conduct, 1291. a. She forms a Faction to oppoſe that of Diana of Poitiers, 1618. P.

Etaples (Faber d') ſnatch'd out of the Hands of the Inquiſitors by the Queen of Navarre, 830. a.

Eternity of the World, publickly taught in Alexandria by a Heathen Philoſopher in the 6th Century, 211. b. The Definition which Boethius gives of it, is as incomprehenſible as the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, 3065. H.

Eternity of Puniſhment, Reflections on this Doctrin, 2762. a.

Edinburgh, erected into a Biſhoprick in favour of William Forbes, 1332. b. When the Caſtle of Edinburgh was built, 1897. b.

Edict; Edict of Nants, by whom drawn, 939. C. Edicts often contain Civilities which muſt not be conſtrued in the Letter, 1197. K.

Editions; a wipe for thoſe who wait for ſecond Editions, 249. b. No Edition but one may make ſome Advantage of, 265. a. There are ſeveral Authors to whom a ſecond Edition coſts as much trouble as a firſt, 516. b.

Education ſinks under the weight of Nature, 63. a.

Edward I. King of England, makes an Irruption into Scotland, 1558. b.

Edward III. King of England, angry at an Inſcription in Windſor-Caſtle, 3030. A.

Edward IV. his Orders to his Men upon obtaining a Victory, 1159. a. Compar'd to Periander and Tarquin the Proud, ibid.

Edward VI. King of England, his Death cauſed a great deal of Joy in Rome, but the Reaſons of this Joy ſoon ceaſed, 1794. I. 'Twas taken ill at Rome that any one ſhould call him King, 1802.

Edward (St.) his Simplicity contributed much to the Sainting of him, 1179. A. Gives himſelf the Diſcipline, and why, ibid. C.

Effigy; a Saying of ſome who were burn'd in Effigy, that they never found themſelves colder in any Day of their Lives, 683. C.

Egypt, when Strangers were firſt permitted to come into Egypt, 2357. b. At whoſe Expence and Pleaſure was the famouſeſt Pyramid of Egypt built, 1319. D. When and on what occaſion did Strangers firſt ſet foot in Egypt, 2713. Which of their Kings drank Wine firſt, ibid. ad fin.

Eleonara, Heireſs of Guyenne, her Divorce from the King of France, and Marriage with the King of England, 2000. A. Her Galantries during the holy War with Saladine, ibid. Her Jealouſies, her Spirit of Revenge, and the Puniſhment of them, ibid. G. Her End, ibid. G. ad med. Has been put in the Catalogue of learned Women, ibid.

Elephant, an Expoſition of the Chapter of the Elephant in the Alcoran, according to the Turkiſh Commentators, 2017. c.

Elephants (white) in great Veneration among the Eaſtern People, 1719. a. When ſeen by the Romans for the firſt time, 2627. Their Chaſtity and Purity, 493. b.

Elephantis, a famous Courtezan that wrote Books full of Obſcenity, 1853. b.

Elian excuſes Anacreon, 235. a. Vents a Corrupt Maxim of Morality, 1092. H. His inexcuſable Partiality as an Hiſtorian, ibid.

Elias, whether his Complaint be that of an inſpired Perſon, 83. D.

Elis, its ſevere Law againſt the Women who ſhould preſume to ſee the Olympick Games, 599. a. This City made all Philoſophers free of it, 2622. ad fin.

Elizabeth (Queen) what point of her Conduct tends to juſtifie the Revolution againſt King James II. 1169. b. The difference between her Conduct and that of Agrippina, 1171.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 1439.

1171. b. Her great desire to see Henry II. of France. 1615. a. Bonfires made in Holland, and Ringing of Bells, for her Marriage with the Duke of Alençon, 2651. a. A Discourse which is ascribed to her on occasion of the Death of the Earl of Essex, 1417. C.

Eloquence; the different Characters of the four greatest Masters of ancient Rome, 1363. a. An Observation of the Jealousie and Emulation occasion'd by Eloquence, 248.

Embalming, a Precaution taken against the Embalmers of Womens Dead Bodies, according to Herodotus, 1969. b.

Embroidery, Gold Embroidery, by whom invented, 2526. N.

Enchanters, the difference between 'em and Sorcerers, 801.

Enemies, no greater Enemies than those who are too lavish of their Praises, 382. b. We ought to abate much of the force of Terms, when one Enemy speaks of another, 423. a. And condemn no body upon their Testimony, 301. Nothing is more Dangerous than despising Enemies in some times of Difficulty, 2658. b.

England, Wool grown dear in England by the Number of Hereticks burnt daily, 211. G. n. The Lutherans and Papists burnt there at the same time, 743. A. in Text. A Design of Reforming all the Schools in England, Travers'd by the Civil Wars, 1010. in Text. In what the Nobility there surpass'd those of other Countries, and still surpasses them, 1209. F. ad in. The Learned of England not so easily impos'd upon as those in France, on the Subject of Euripides, 1267. S. ad fin. Cruelties exercis'd there by turns, between the Romans and the Britons, 2815. b. An Elegy of its Universities, 1997. 2998. O. ad fin. The Character of its People, in Erasmus's Days, 1209. b. its Ministers and Favourites corrupted of old by Bribes and Pensions from France, 1157. b. Destitute of a Fleet and Shipping in Edward IV.th's Days, 159. b. said to have been drawn into a War against France, in favour of Julius II. by a large Present of good Wines, Cheeses, Sausiges, and Gammons, from that Pope, 1790. b. its Court addicted to Punning in Queen Elizabeth's Days, 655. b. it's a mistake to say, That the English formerly Conquer'd the greatest part of France, 961. a.

English, how Converted to Christianity, 1461. D. ad in. Taken for Gods by the Natives of New-England, and why, 2525. I. ad med. Whether the English did formerly in a manner Conquer France, 961. C. 2d Par. Whether they made it Tributary, 1157. H. ad in. The English Divines accused of leaning to Pelagianism and Socinianism, 505. A.

Ennius, what Quintilian thought of him, 2008. b.

Enoch, whether the Pagans made any Allusion to his History, 215. D.

Enocha, a Comparison of this City with that of Peneropolis, 806.

Εντελέχεια, a word Essential to Aristotle's Physicks, but scarce intelligible, 490. N.

Enthusiasms, whether consistent with the Opinion of those, who say the Soul is not distinct from the Body 1096.

Envy at one Man's Prosperity often the cause of another Man's Rise, 988. b. its Tortures, 1805. Z. ad fin.

Enzinas, Author of a Spanish Translation of the New Testament, 1118. b.

Eparchus, Bishop of Corfu. Collected a great many good Manuscripts with which the Library of Ausbourg was enrich'd, 1645. a.

Epernon (Duke d') the Present of the City of Roan to him, upon his being made Governor of Normandy, 1626. a. Maintains his haughty Spirit, even on his Death-bed, 1519. E. Boasted of his own good Fortune, 2893. Art. III.

Ephemerides, of Julius Cæsar, a Work wholly distinct from his Commentaries, 473. M.

Ephesians, one of their Laws, 248. B. ad fin.

Ephori, the Kings of Lacedemon how subject to their Caprice, 106. b. 112. a.

Ephorus, a celebrated Greek Historian in Alexander the Great's Days, knew so little of the Spaniards, that he took 'em for one City, 1183. a. would have said something of his own Country if he could, 1185. a. The Character of his Genius, 2868. E.

Epicarmus, a fine Thought and Expression of his word for word with the Scripture Sentence about Death, 215. C. n. an excellent Doctrine of his agreeable to the Scriptures, 216. a.

Epicles, what sort of Health he drank to Antocles, 2535. H.

Epictetus, what his Lamp was sold for, 2609. m. ad. fin.

Epicurus, Bred up while a Child to the Practice of Superstitious Rights, 1186. a. his Memory made infamous by the Bigotry and Malice of the Stoicks, 1192. a. his Passive Obedience, ibid. a supposed Dispute between him and a Pagan Priest, 1198. b. The difference between his Doctrine concerning a Deity, and that of the Modern Chinese and Siamese, 2765. a. Came nearer the Truth than any of the ancient Philosophers, 668. ad med. Had Scholars who were very orderly in their Life and Conversation, 898. b. What was the Pleasure which he recommended, 908. N. the Hypothesis of Fortune and Presages, is directly opposite to the System of this Philosopher, 930. H. ad fin. He did himself a Prejudice by not owning the Obligations he had to Democritus, 1083. N. His Courage and Gentleness, 1186. C. ad. in. What's the Ground of the ill Opinion People have of him and his Sect, ibid. H. A forg'd Dispute between him and a Platonist, ibid. C. 2d. Par. And between him and a Pagan Priest, ibid. ad. med. takes needless Precautions, ibid. T. ad in. He had acknowledged Spirits, if he had reason'd consequentially, 2055. F. 2d. Par. Whether he could have reconciled his System to the Publick Worship, and deceiv'd the Athenians, 2056. I. Is criticiz'd by Plutarch, ibid. M. ad in. And by Cicero, ibid. His Hypothesis concerning the Existence of the Gods is the weak part of his System, P. ad in. Whether he own'd a Providence, ibid. ad med. His Objections drawn from the Evil which happens in the World, ill refuted by Lactantius, 2484. E. 2. Par. ad fin. He rejected Geometry and other Parts of the Mathematicks, 3075. D. ad in.

Epicureans, would allow nothing Supernatural in Dreams, 68. b. Whether it was lawful for one Epicurean to rally another 908. B. ad fin. some of them more regular in their Manners than most Idolaters, 876, 877. in Text. ad in. Their strict Union, 1184. I. ad in.

Epidemical Distempers: The Mind no less subject to them than the Body, 14. a.

Epigones, how this Word ought to be Translated, 92. B.

Epigrams, pretended to be better written by the French, than by any of their Neighbours, 1423. a. the Qualities of a perfect Epigram, 2374. b. 2375. E. ad in.

Epilepsy, The Venereal Enjoyment called a short Epilepsy, by whom, 1341. b. 1057. R.

Epinac (Peter d') Archbishop of Lyons, a famous Antiroyalist at a Conference, 2667. a.

Epiphanius (Saint) mistaken, in saying that Marcian was never received into the Communion of the Church after his first Excommunication, 2162. b. does not say, that there were Impurities acted in the Assemblies of the Adamites, 87. C. Goes upon a false Tradition, about the Bellowing of the Golden Calf, 1165. A.

Epirotes, reduced almost to nothing by a Famine, and for what Cause, 2628, 2629. in Text. ad fin.

Episcopacy, the Jesuites discovered to be the Authors of Books written against it, 175. a. Fulminated by Theodore Beza, 1840. b.

Epistles (Dedicatory) The common Place of this sort of Epistles, 270. C. Are prepar'd for those, who are likely to Reward the Author best, 2639. a. It's a Fault not to Date them, 2825. C.

Epistolæ obscurorum virorum, an Effect of the reading them, 1217. z. Who is the Author of this Work, 1683, 1684. F. ad fin.

Epitaphs. When an Epitaph is cited, one ought not to change the least Letter, 1892. E. An Epitaph, full of Presumption and Orthodoxy, 2452. G. Are more to be rely'd on than History, as to the Day of a Person's Death, 1125. D.

Epocha, The Epocha of an Event wrong Mark'd by the General Term of this Year, 685. a.

Erasmus, his Prediction of Calvin, 821. b. what ground to suppose he made such a Prediction, 822. b. declin'd a Cardinal's Cap, 1213. b. troubled he should Die at Basil, tho' among his best Friends, 1210. a. his Answer to one who would excuse a Printer of Libels on his Poverty, 1216. a. what made old Age pleasant to him, 1218. a. why he dreaded Luther's downfal, 1215. b. his generous manner of rejecting Compliments made him on a Victory in a Controversy with one of his Friends, 1314. b. Censured on his maintaining, that Hereticks are to be proceeded against by Capital Punishments, 1395. b. his Explication of a Greek Adagy, destroys the Tradition of Hercules's Softness, 1645. b. his Censure of the Popish Custom, of Saluting the Virgin Mary in the Pulpit before Sermon, 1815. a. Criticiz'd upon Occasion of a Greek Proverb, and upon a Passage in Cicero, 13. b. what it was that disgusted him in the Protestant Religion, 111. b. his Advice to Andreas Ammonius, how to manage himself at the Court of Henry VIII. 212. a. lov'd his Bottle, ibid. b. accus'd on his giving the Title of King of France to Henry VIII. in a Dedication, 550. b. accus'd by a Cardinal as the Fomenter of the Boor's War in Germany, 172. his Strength did not lie in the Greek Tongue, 893. b. He cannot decide, whether he belong'd by his Birth to Gaul or to Germany, being Born at Rotterdam, 2622. b. 2623. a. His Statue placed in the Way, Presenting a Copy of Verses to Philip II. of Spain, when he made his Entry into Rotterdam, 2623. a. b. His Mistake in not finding more than three Women, call'd Anne, among the Ancients, 269. b.

Criticiſ'd on his tranſlating a Paſſage from Ælian about lexander and Apelles, 287. a. Miſtaken in his Senſe of the Proverb, Archilocum teris, 330. b. Looks upon Luther in the beginning of the Reformation, as a Deliverer, 119. L. Paſſes for a Favourer of the Lutherans, ibid. His Letters are often wrong dated and ill rang'd, 211. B. He cenſures the Poem of Andrelinus, 271. a. He uſes Alexander ſcurvily, 278. a. He cites a Paſſage from Ælian wrong, concerning Alexander, 302. b. His Conteſts with Beda, 550. A B. The wiſe Advice which he gave Berquin, 618. a. One of his Letters which had never been publiſh'd, 677. L. Could never have the favour of being cited by Budæus, 303. b. His Works corrected, by whom, 893. E. Allow'd too little time for the compoſing his Books, ibid. His Diſpute with Eppendorf, 1204. B. Why Old-age ſeem'd pleaſant to him, 1218. EE. His heroick Carriage toward an Enemy of his, 1314. D. Turns Politician with regard to the Court of Rome, 1395. F. Would not have Princes exhorted to deprive the Monks of the great Poſſeſſions which they had engroſs'd, ibid. His Printers play him an arch Trick, 1727. H. It's ſtrange that he never ſhould have read what Authors have ſaid of Jupiter's being chang'd into a Cuckoo to enjoy Juno, 1817. I. Writes a falſe Account of the too early Lying-in of Luther's Wife, 2616, U△. His Railleries open the way for the Reformation, 2620, 2621. in Tex. between GG, and HH. Underſtood a Paſſage in Ariſtophanes better than Valerius Maximus, 2541. K. The Magiſtrates of Baſil bid Mony for his Statue, 2623. B. ad fin. What he ſays of the Uſefulneſs of Hiſtory, 2831. E. ad in. Does a thing which ought to ſerve for a Model to all Authors, 2982. A.

Erfort, The diſſolution of its Univerſity, and the deſtruction of the Inſolent Scholars by the Burgers of the Town, 1220. a. The Confeſſion of Ausburg and Hebrew taught in its Univerſity by Conſent of the Profeſſors, tho' they were all Roman-Catholicks but One, 1123, 1124. in Tex. ad fin.

Eric, King of Sweden dethron'd by his Subjects, 1387, 1388. C. ad med.

Erpenius, The Preſent he made to the Emperor of Morocco, 11116. C.

Errors, Whether thoſe of the Ancients be more excuſable than thoſe of the Moderns, 403. a. A ſervile regard that People have for ſome Errors, 728. b. Popular Errors, whether One ought to regulate his Conduct by them, 523, 524. E. ad med. Errors in Religion by accident take deeper root when attack'd, 2366. L. ad fin.

Erudition, Whether it be in the decline at preſent, 175. D. The Picture of a Pretender to Erudition, 293. E. France ſeems too much diſguſted at whatever looks like Erudition, 2937. I. ad. fin.

Eryngium, (white) What's the Vertue of this Plant, 2585. B.

Eſchylus, The firſt who chang'd the Burleſque Language, and remov'd Objects of Horror from the Stage, 1226. b. What he ſaid when the People preferr'd the Tragedies of Sophocles to his, 1227. b. n. His Tragedies order'd to be Acted by a publick Decree of the Magiſtrates of Athens after the Author's Death, 1228. b. His Tomb in Sicily viſited by all Tragick Poets, ibid.

Eteſian, When the Eteſian-Winds began to blow, and upon what Occaſion, 354. b.

Ethelred, King of England, refuſes to hear the Pope's Miſſionary, except in open Field, and why. 1461. d. He's converted to Chriſtianity, and his Example follow'd by moſt of the Engliſh, ibid.

Ethiopia, The Country in which the Science of the Stars firſt began, 1407. in Tex. ad. fin.

Etreè, (Gabriela d') What ſhe ſaid upon ſeeing the Pictures of two Princeſſes, one of which was to marry Henry IV. 2923. b.

Etruria, The ancient Prieſts of this Country attributed two kinds of Thunder to Jupiter, 2468. a.

Eu (The Count d') His good and gallant Qualities, 1984. G. His Marriage, ibid.

Evagrius, What he tells of certain Monks, 88. E.

Evarige, King of the Goths, a Compariſon between one of his Counſellors and Apollonius, 299. K.

Eubates, his Wife erects a Statue to him as a recompenſe for his Fidelity, 1853. a.

Eubulides, An Inventor of killing Sophiſms in a ſtrict ſenſe, 1246. b. 1273. a.

Eucharist, Deſcartes' Opinion concerning the Accidents of the Eucharist, reconcil'd with the Definition of the Council of Conſtance, 151. a. The manner of the Preſence of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist has not been defin'd by the Church of England, 151. D. Beza Calumniated on this Head, 616. DD. Expreſſions of Calvin on this Point, which ſeem to admit of a Corporal Preſence, 1694. a. The Maintainers of Tranſubſtantiation abuſe the Words Change, Converſion, Tranſ-elementation, 2798. a.

Euclid, An Inſtance of his great Modeſty, 596. a. 346. a.

Eucrochia, got with Child by the Heretick Priſcillian, is puniſh'd with Death, 1705. B.

Eudes, (Duke of Aquitain) Whether the overthrow and expulſion of the Saracens out of the South Parts of France, belongs the moſt juſtly to him or to Charles Martel, 11. b.

Eudoxia, ſends privately to Ginſerick, conjuring him to come and revenge the Death of Valentinian, 1901. D.

Eve, What ſhe meant by giving the Name of Seth to one of her Sons, 18. C. A Reflection on the ſmall Reſiſtance made by her to the Temptation, 1251. B. What Place was the Garden of Eden to her, 1257. b.

Events, What they ought to do, who reckon up myſterious Events, 906. B. ad med. There are ſome Events of which People think much and ſay little, 887. b. The moſt conſiderable depend on a Trifle, 947. b. It's of the laſt Conſequence to find 'em juſtly rang'd in their Order, 1170. K. The principal difference between the Relations of Proteſtants and Catholicks conſiſts in the ranging the Events in their due order, ibid. The Antients had a Saying, That the Prudence of Man had a leſs ſhare in them, than his good or ill Fortune, 2905. a. We never judge of Things but by the Event, 2705. a.

Eugenius IV. his moving manner of bemoaning the Death of Ambroſius Cameldubenſis. 826. b. His Reflection on his Death-bed, 1259. a. An odd Anſwer of the Cardinal his Nephew to the Pope's Subjects, who had loſt all their Cattel by an Incurſion of Philip Duke of Milain, 1258, b.

Evidence, A Greek Soldier not permitted to be an Evidence in a Court at Rome in his own Mother-Tongue, 995. b. Whether it be the Rule and Meaſure of Truth, 2619 B. ad med.

Evils, Miſtakes which ariſe from Mens judging of combin'd Evils, 73. b. no ſolving the Origin of Evil by Reaſons apriori, 2486. a. No neceſſity that the Soul ſhould feel Evil to be able to perceive Good, ibid. b. All efforts to reconcile the permiſſion of Evil by reaſon terminate in a begging of the Queſtion, 2487. b. GOD's giving Man a Free-will, does not remove the Difficulty, 2488. b. How the ſeveral Sects of Chriſtians claſh upon this Point, 2490. a. b. What the Stoicks anſwer'd when preſs'd upon the Point of the Origin of Evil, 2491. b. The Pythagoreans, ſaid to be the firſt, who gave riſe to this difficult Queſtion, 2119. b.

Eumenes, (King of Pergamum) the happy Union between him and his Brothers, 2523. a. 2524, b.

Eumenius, A Rhetorician at Auton in the Days of Diocleſian, his vaſt Salary from that Emperor, 156. b. 163. a.

Eunuch, A Compariſon between an Ox and an Eunuch from St. Baſil, 1008. a. A Virgin Princeſs's Notion wherein conſiſts the Joy of this World, 2895. b. Whether the Women committed to their Care be in ſafety, 24. a. What St. Baſil thought of it, 1007. B. Two ſorts of Eunuchs, ibid. Compar'd to Beaſts which have their Horns ſaw'd off, and yet do not forbear to Puſh and Butt, 1603. a. Their impotence with regard to Women, is of no conſequence with regard to the other Qualities requiſite to make a great Man, 1615. a. May be very brave in their Perſons, 1627. a.

Eunus, A Heathen Fanatick, his Device to ſtir up the People to Rebellion, 499. a.

Euphorbia, It's Vertues, and by whom found out and nam'd, 1782. a.

Euphormio, (Barclay's) damn'd by the Criticks, 497. a. which yet did not hinder the Author's being well receiv'd at Rome, and having Benefits conferr'd on him for that very Book, ibid. N. O.

Euphorus, Whether there has been any Author of this Name, 1205. a.

Euphrates, When it ſerv'd as a Boundary to the Roman Empire, 1562. G.

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1111. Vol. IV. 1419.

Evremont, (Monſieur de St.) cenſur'd on his condemning the Method of the Schools, for the proving the Exiſtence of a GOD by Natural Reaſons, 2140. b.

Euripides, his Limitation of Juſtice, 103. b. a Favourer of Tyranny, 1036. a. how he might become ſo, ibid. Aſſiſted by Socrates in compoſing his Tragedies, 1363. b. The true reaſon of his being ſeldom or never mention'd by the Latin Poets, when much meaner Greek Poets are, 1363. b. Singing his Verſes ſav'd the remains of the Athenian Army after their Defeat in Sicily under Nicias, 1364. a. His Anſwer to One, who twitted him with his ſtinking Breath, 1365. b. The Athenians ſend an Ambaſſy into Macedon to recover his Bones; but are refus'd, 1366. b. His Friend Philemon's exceeding Love and Eſteem for him, 1367. a. An Action of Impiety brought againſt him, for teaching the Doctrine of Mental Reſervations in Oaths, 1368. a. The difference between his Characters and thoſe of Sophocles, 1365. a. The energy of one of his Sentences, 103. G. ad fin. ſaid, That GOD concern'd himſelf with great Affairs, but left ſmaller Matters to Fortune, 249. a. The argumentum ad hominem, which a Courtezan uſed to him, 1870. P.

Europe, The People of Europe very ſubject to Drunkenneſs and Debauchery, 1253. a.

Europeans, 'Twas only by way of Reprizal that they carry'd off the King of Tyre's Daughter, 1597. a.

Eurymedon, How puniſh'd by Jupiter, and Why, 1789. a.

Euſebius, Condemn'd of a baſe piece of Flattery by Baronius, 1290. b. His Anſwer to the Parallel of JESUS CHRIST and Apollonius, but a dry Work, 1658. b. Miſtaken in his Chronicle, in ſaying, That Caſſius plunder'd the Temple of Jeruſalem, 877. b. Hard to be reconcil'd with himſelf as to what he ſays of Apollonius Tyanæus, 298. b. What he ſays of Apollonius Tyanæus examin'd, 298. F. ad fin. He places a Paſſage from Porphiry wrong, which he has preſerv'd to us, 1205. a. How he refutes the Slanders of Hierocles againſt the Chriſtian Religion, 1660. A. What he cites from Phlegon, 2475. a.

Euthymius Zegabeus, Stories which he tells us of a Stone, 101. a.

Etropius, Not over-curious in his Style, 811. b. Whether a Paſſage of this Author has been well Tranſlated by the Abbé de Marolles, 825. b.

Eutichius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, of Opinion, That Cain and Abel fell out about a Miſtreſs, 81. a.

Example, They who give an ill Example ought to be ſeverely puniſh'd, 2034. a. The Contagion of ill Examples, Diſſert. xx. a.

Excommunication, a terrible Evil tho' not ſeconded by the Secular Power, 74. a. It's Effects deſcrib'd, ibid.

Excuſes, however good they be, 'tis ſtill better to have no occaſion for them, 1219. b.

Exorciſms, Exorciſing Sprights and Hobgoblins, of great Antiquity among the Heathens, 1186. a. A Form of Exorciſm, by whom compos'd, ibid. n.

Exorciſts, A mean and raſcally Imployment among the Pagans, 1185. B. ad fin. The manner of Exorciſing among them, ibid. What Queſtions the Exorciſts generally put to the Poſſeſs'd, 1456. M.

Expreſſions, An inſtance of the Illuſion of ſticking to the firſt Senſe which the Words of an Author convey, 1051. b. Some Expreſſions offend altho' they do not ſignify either more or leſs than others which do not offend, 621. a.

Extenſion, Whether we have any Idea of a Space extended and immaterial, 2735. a. It's compos'd of Parts, every one of which is a particular Subſtance, 2789. H. 2d Par. Art. 1. Objections againſt its exiſtence, 3077. F. Whether there be two ſorts of Extenſion, one Diviſible, Moveable and Impenetrable, the other Indiviſible, Penetrable and Imoveable, ibid. ad fin.

Extracts, The Art of making unfaithful Extracts from Books, 550. b.

Ezekiel, very near being rejected out of the Canonical Scriptures, 1230. b. What a certain Rabbin affirms of his Tomb, 3024. D. ad med.

FA.

Faber (Tanaquillus) criticiz'd on his Account of Anacreon, 111. b. Is miſtaken about Euripides's Voyage into Egypt, 1368. b. See Fevre.

Fables (Jewiſh) their Right to a Place in this Dictionary, 499. a. The Difference between a Fable and a fabulous Narration, 1331. b. Criticiſms, proving that the Fables which paſs under Æſop's Name, are none of his, 1236. a. Who is the Author and Compiler of them, ibid. How Seneca could ſay, That the Romans had never apply'd themſelves to compoſe Fables, 1236. b. Fables which flatter the Vanity of a Nation, not to be attack'd, 283. They who oppoſe them reputed Enemies of their Country, 734. a. Thoſe of the Ancients are very ill concerted, 61. E. None will be diſabus'd as to Fables which turn to their Advantage, 283. B. in Text. To whom may be aſcribed the inventing and perfecting of them, 1235. A. ad fin. Which are the moſt uſeful of all thoſe of Antiquity, ibid. H. ad fin. What Apology Strabo makes for Fables, ibid. ad fin. ibid I. How Seneca could ſay that the Romans never apply'd themſelves to the compoſing any Fables, ibid. M. They ſhould never be employ'd to the explaining Myſteries of Religion, 2599. M. ad fin. A Conjecture on the Origin of antient Fables, 2838. B. ad fin. Jewiſh Fables with Regard to a falſe Meſſiah, 499. D.

Fabritius (Caius) his Reaſon for chooſing Cornelius Rufinus General of the Roman Army, tho' a Man notoriouſly covetous and rapacious, 1276. b.

Facility, There is a real Facility, and a ſeeming Facility in Compoſing, 1497. G. ad fin. 1144. G. ad fin.

Facts, How ancient Facts came to be falſifyed, 149. a. Some of ſuch a Nature, that if they are related as doubtful, they may be pronounc'd falſe, 51. a. To be a credible Witneſs of the Truth of certain Facts, there needs no more than the Truth of the Relation, 56. A. ad med. One Cauſe of their Falſification, 148, 149. Whether it be ſufficient in ſome Caſes to deny a Fact where an Adverſary has not proved it, 159. A. How it comes to paſs that Facts are ſo variouſly related, 236. M. 2d Par. The Example of relating Facts is inſeperable from a great many fatiguing Circumſtances, 262. B. ad med. There are important Facts which we know only by one ſingle Teſtimony, 882. G. There are others, the publiſhing of which offends only becauſe they are true, 1396. I. There are others which put to ſilence all Philoſophy, 912. C. ad med. We ought in matter of Fact to follow the Advice which Deſcartes gives with regard to Philoſophical Speculations, 1447. F. ad fin. Some Facts are rendred Suſpicious only by a Wrong diſpoſing of the Circumſtances, however true they may be in themſelves, 1463, 1464. There is ſometimes a great Illuſion in proving Facts by the Reaſon of the Thing, 2644. E. ad fin.

Fæneſſe (Baron de) one of his Adventures pleaſantly related by D'Aubigne, 813. a.

Faerne, His Fables. 2590. D. ad fin.

Faith (Confeſſion of) an Inſtance of the Difficulty of finding Words for a Confeſſion that ſhall not be wreſted and accommodated by an adverſe Party, 1609. b. Bucer's Judgment on this Theſis, That we are juſtified by Faith alone, 740. C. What it is that makes it become an Act of ſound Religion, 1135. a.

Falcon-Stone, A Place in Scotland, why ſo called, 1566. b.

Falſhood, There are ſeveral Things, the Falſhood whereof is ſufficiently expoſed by barely relating them, 207. a. Whether it may appear under the ſame Idea as Truth, 336. b. Notorious Falſhoods publiſhed in all Times, 283. a.

Family, Men are fond of knowing the Family of Great Men, 104. b.

Families (Few) that are not to be reproach'd with ſome ſcurvy Adventure, 398. a. Fabulous Traditions in moſt Great Families, 1134. A. Fabulous Genealogies of ſeveral Families, 2961. G. ad fin. See Genealogies.

Fanaticks, who ran naked about the Streets of Amſterdam, 87, 88. in Tex. ad fin. The Danger of Fanaticks in a State, 499. E. Are of courſe Incendiaries and Boutefeus, 1009. G. ad fin. Their latter Projects are ever over-turning their firſt, ibid. ad fin. They are are touch'd to the Quick when reproach'd with this ſort of Contradictions, ibid. They are ever attentive to Events, in order to ſquare their Prophecies and Preachings to the News of the Gazettes, ibid. They do not loſe a Tittle of their Credit, by proving a thouſand Times abuſed the People, ibid. I. ad med. They are never found at a Plunge, 1150. F. Their Pertinaciouſneſs and Shifts to ſave their Credit, ibid. H. They will never want Partiſans, provided they have the Addreſs to hit the reigning Paſſion, ibid. in Text. By what Signs we may know when they are Fanaticks in reality, 1150. T. ad med. They cannot anſwer for their own Behaviour, and why, 1172. F. Are not embarraſs'd by the greateſt Difficulties, ibid. G. The XVIIth Century moſt fruitful in this ſort of People, 1090. C.

Fanaticiſm, One of it's principal Characters, 1169. b. A notable Inſtance of it's deſtroying natural Affection and Tenderneſs in the Soul, 240. b. It's prodigious Variety, 1860, 1861. in Tex. Its Contagion, ibid.

Fantoms; An Account of a Fantom that diſturb'd a Houſe, 179. G. ad fin. Whether it be not poſſible that they may produce themſelves before us, 1668. a. Stories concerning them, 2672. H. ad fin. Whether Spinoza had any Ground to deny their Exiſtence, 2796. M. See Spirits.

Fardella, His Logick, 3078. a.

Farel, An Inſtance of his wonderful Intrepidity, 1282. b. C. 2 par. He's ill us'd by Eraſmus, ibid. L. His Marriage, ibid. I. ad fin.

Farnabius criticiz'd on Occaſion of an Epigram of his upon Fulvia, 1417. a. His fiery Zeal, 1282. b. What way the Monks took to hinder the Effect of his Preaching, 1283. a. He is repreſented as an ill Man by Eraſmus, 1282. b. 1286. a.

Farrelists, A chimerical Sect, ibid. b.

Fatality, The Pagans annex'd it to certain inanimate Things, 829. a.

Fate, The Doctrine of the Stoicks touching Fate, which made God the Author of it, 972. B. ad med. & ad fin. How they endeavour'd to reconcile it with human Liberty, ibid. This Doctrine does not exclude Wiſhing, 2056. I. Invectives of the Pagans againſt Fate, 2536. A.

Fate, Suppos'd capable of being chang'd by a Word in a critical Time, 809. b.

Fathers; The Ancient Fathers made no Scruple of defending a good Cauſe by fallacious Arguments. 1319. b. Believ'd commonly that Adam dy'd in the Place where Jeruſalem was afterwards built and was buried in Golgotha, 81. a. An Inſtance of their Diſcretion and Regard to Circumſtances when ſpeaking of the Pagan Idolatries to the Heathen Emperors, 272. wrongfully tax'd with a blind Credulity, 367. a.

Fatima, Daughter of Mahomet, her Titles and the Prayers addreſs'd to her, 1288. a.

Faults (in Authors) thoſe to be moſt carefully obſerv'd which are likely to deceive moſt People.

Fannia; The Law Fannia when enacted in Rome.

Favour, What Regnier ſays of Favour, 2302. a. Favourites graſp at all Offices and Preferments, either for themſelves or their Friends, 2032. Q. Their Power over the Modes and Faſhions, 2695. F. The People take a Pleaſure in loading the Favourite with more Crimes than he is guilty of, 3015. a.

Favre (Anthony) his Judgment upon all the great Civilians of his time, 1447. a.

Fauſta, Her diſſoluteneſs and Impudence, 2207. a.

Faydit (Abbot) his manner of comforting a great and good Lady under the Calumny of lying with a Taylor, 2688. b. After what manner he ſpeaks of the Author of the Memoirs of M. L. C. D. R. 2628. A. ad med.

Fear of a Gibbet not ſo ſtrong as the Power of Shame, 2476. b.

Feaſts, The prodigious Sumptuouſneſs of a Feaſt made in Rome by one of the Commiſſioners of the Pope's Revenues, 967. A. Another of an extraordinary Expence, 1237. A. A Law for reſtraining the exceſſive Expences of Feaſts repealed by Duzorius, 291. a. Regulations for moderating the Expence of them 1348. C. The ancient Romans would not ſuffer Maidens to be preſent at them; and the ancient Greeks would not ſuffer even married Women to come to them, 1936. in Tex. ad med. 195. in Tex. ad fin.

Felix, Does not go into Judea till after the Condemnation of Cumanus, 1128. B. Had been the Husband of three Queens, ibid.

Ferdinand I. beſieges Buda, and his Army is cut in pieces by Soliman, 1729. in Tex. ad fin.

Ferdinand II. at his Acceſſion to the Empire, ſees himſelf ſtrip'd of two Kingdoms, 2025. F.

Feria (Duke of) dies of Grief upon ſome ill Conduct of Aldringer, 167. B.

Ferrand, To be pitied for engaging in an Apology for St. Francis, 1149. G.

Ferrier (du) endeavour'd with Chancellor de l'Hoſpital to have Charles IX declar'd Head of the Gallican Church, and the Church-Lands confiſcated 1306. a. What Book he us'd to read at Maſs, ibid. b.

Ferrier (Pere) Confeſſor to the King of France, is Author of a ſmall Book de l'opinion probable, 1107. b.

Ferrier (Arnoul) a famous Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Toulouſe, 1123. a.

Ferroniere, Miſtreſs to Francis I. pox'd by her Husband to ruine their Intrigue, 1349. D.

Feuardentius, Impertinencies of this Cordelier, 1165. B. ad fin. His Apology for the Worſhip of the Bleſſed Virgin, 1144. I. ad med. His Accuſations againſt Calvin, 2610. a.

Fevre (Madlle le) Underſtood a Paſſage of Plato concerning Prodicus, better than Creſolius, 2701. C. ad fin.

Fevre (Tanaquil le) Who are very proper Perſons to judge of his Works, 152. C. Cenſur'd on his citing Plato and Herodotus concerning Anacreon, 221, 222. B. ad fin. What he ſays to a Journaliſt, 371. b. Gives us a Fragment of Anecdotes, 553. a. A Common-place which he makes uſe of, 604. b. Criticiz'd by Mr. Dacier with little ſucceſs, 908. C. ad fin. Wherein he has very well ſhewn the Miſtakes of the Interpreters of Horace, with regard to Catius, ibid. ad med. He wrongfully pronounces a definitive Sentence upon a Paſſage of Plutarch concerning Critias and his Atheiſm, 1079. a. Cenſures St. Auguſtine unjuſtly concerning the Liberties which the Comick Poets gave themſelves, 2532. ad fin. He and Madamoiſelle, his Daughter, Criticiz'd on the Subject of Anacreon and his Contemporaries, 2672. a.

Ficinius (Marcilius) What we ought to underſtand by his Commentaries, 2646. E. ad fin.

Fictions, The Fictions of the Ancients would be more tolerable, if they did not give themſelves the trouble to contradict one another ſo often, 61. a.

Filleau, King's Advocate at Poitiers, a fierce Perſecuter of the Proteſtants, 2425. a. His ſtrange Relation of a Cabal or Conſpiracy of Deiſts at Bourg-fountain, 380. F. ad. in.

Finland, Who was the firſt that tranſlated the New-Teſtament into the Language of this Country, 118. a.

Fire, Divination by Fire, who invented it, 216. b. From Heaven, ſuppos'd the Mark whereby Cain and Abel came to know GOD's preference of the Oblations of and before thoſe of the other, 18. b. The Pagans boaſt of the ſame kind of Marks, ibid. a. Gift of walking on live Coals of Fire peculiar to a certain People of Italy, 1677. a. Anciently never kindled, but drawn down on the Altars by Prayer, 1162. b. Fire Ordeal, a Reflection on that way of Purgation, 1180. a. The Pillar of Fire which mov'd by Night before the Iſraelites, had nothing common with a Fire which Timoleon ſaw in a Dream, 2889. b. Who was the firſt Inventer of Divination by Fire, 228. b. Tryal by Fire, 333. a. A happy Preſage when it kindled of itſelf upon the Altars, 1163. C. ad med. Which yet was not always certain, ibid. Which are the rareſt Bonfires that can be made to pleaſe the People, 1554. H. A Hiſtory of a Perſon, who walked upon red-hot Iron without being burnt, 1679. A. Was the Principle of all Things according to Heraclitus, 2864. C. ad med.

Fire-arms, ſaid to be firſt put in practice by Berthold Schauartz, a German, 147. b.

Fitz-Simon, (Jeſuit) cited, 1169. I. Whether he ever diſputed with Uſher, 3009. C.

Flaccus, A Sir-name ſpread over ſeveral Cities of Italy, 2498. a.

Flames, Breathing forth real Flames, a Device of the dreadfulleſt Incendiaries, 499. a.

Flamminius, had like to have been refus'd a Triumph for not opening the Senate's Letter till after he had routed the Enemy, 837. E.

Flatterers, Charles V's Flatterers curtail and enlarge Prophecies to fit 'em to him, 950. a. Mind the reality and not an empty Title, 158. b. Their Reaſon for not conſulting the Sibilline Books, 442. b.

Flattery, puniſh'd with Death in the Perſon of an Hiſtorian, 2885. b.

Flattery, A ſingular Inſtance of the Flattery of a Roman

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III. 1551.
Vol. IV. 1439.

man Senator, 883. b. An excellent Means for the avoiding the ſuſpicion of it in Writing the Actions of great Men, 519. a. A remarkable Inſtance of it, 443. a.

Flechier, (Mr) his Deſcription of the Baptiſm of Rufinus, Favourite of the Emperor Theodoſius, reputed a Maſter-piece, 1638. a.

Fleece, (Order of the) by whom inſtituted, and when renew'd, 1369. a.

Flemmings, Whether their Hiſtorians are partial and prejudic'd, 344. H. What Comines ſaid of them, 2012. R. ad fin.

Fleſh and Blood, Each Sect's aſcribing the Objections made againſt itſelf to this Principle, the ſource of an everlaſting Diſpute, 544. b.

Fleſh, A Society founded by the Counteſs of Guaſtalla, for gaining the Victory againſt the Fleſh, 2956. a. The Means us'd by the Members of this Society, ibid.

Fleury, (Abbey of) Several good Manuſcripts found there when the Proteſtants ſack'd it, 705. a. Some ſold to the Queen of Sweden, and others purchas'd under-han for the Vatican, ibid.

Floral-Games, After what manner celebrated, 1118. B. What paſs'd one Day between the People of Rome and Cato in the celebrating of theſe Games, ibid. When and by whoſe Authority celebrated for the firſt time, ibid. E. Where they rais'd wherewith to defray the Expence of them, ibid. F.

Floron, (A Spirit of the Order of Cherubims) what he anſwer'd when ask'd, What the Spots in the Moon were? 984. X.

Florus, cenſur'd for a groſs Fault which is not obſerv'd in the Variorum of Holland, 736. A. Is miſtaken in his Geography with regard to the Town of Heraclea, 2562. a.

Foe, The Founder of a Sect among the Chineſe, 2784. a.

Fœtus, It's Formation is the moſt exquiſite Workmanſhip of an Intelligence, 247. b.

Foix, (Paul de) why he refus'd to ſee Francis Patricius of Ferrara, 388. a.

Foix, (Gaſton de) A true Thunder-bolt of VVar, 2005. a.

Folembrai, A Royal-Seat built by Francis I. of France, burnt by whom, and for what Reaſon, 1698. a.

Folly, There's a ſpice of Folly always enters into the Compoſition of great Wits, 856. T. ad fin. Its Elogy by Eraſmus, very well receiv'd by the Publick, and eſpecially by the People of Quality, 1215. K. It has been re-printed about an hundred times, ibid. It is the higheſt VViſdom ſometimes to counterfeit it, 2910. a.

Follies, The Hiſtory of Mens Follies and extravagant Cuſtoms and Uſages, not without its Benefit, 642. a.

Fondi, Beſieg'd and taken by Aſſault by Barbaroſſa King of Algiers, 1438. a.

Fontaine, (la) cited on the Jealouſy of Siſters, 1128. A. Makes a Sophiſm in defence of his VVorks, 1495. He is Criticiz'd on occaſion of the Life of Æſop given by Planudes, 1232. A. He has not concerted the Relations in his Hiſtorical VVork, ſo well as Madle Scuders has done in a Romance, ibid. C. He might have ſucceeded better in the Story which concerns the tranſlation which Socrates had given of Æſop's Fables, ibid. D. VVho they are whom he acknowledges to be his Maſters, 2004. L.

Fontevraud, The great Merits of an Abbeſs of this Abbey, 1330. M△.

Fools, How wiſe Men come to get Fools to their Children, 1341. a. Men often avoid being deceiv'd by being errand Fools, 102. a. People who often counterfeited the Fool, 328. K.

Forbes, 1920.

Forbes (William) his Expreſſion about Luther and Calvin, 1332. a. Alledg'd wrongfully by le Fevre in his Diſpute againſt Mr Arnaud, 1333. a.

Force, (James de la) How preſerv'd at the Maſſacre of St. Bartholomew, 1409. a.

Forgeries, Not enforc'd by publick Authority now, as in the Reign and by the Councils of Charles V. 1351.

Forms, (Subſtantial) A reflection on this Doctrine, 806. D. ad med. Inexplicable Difficulties in this Doctrine, 1437. a. Into how many Abſurdities it leads thoſe who maintain it, 2259. a. Pernicious Conſequences that may be drawn from it, 3061. a.

Formularies, A hard Matter to draw up a Formulary thac cuts off all grounds of Diſpute, 1514. a.

Fornication, rewarded inſtead of being puniſh'd, in ſome Towns of Germany, 147. a. The Command againſt it in the Decalogue, how expounded, 801. a. VVhether the Magiſtrate has a right to puniſh it, 176. A△△△. The toleration which this Vice meets with, ibid. ad med.

Fortune, One muſt not abuſe it's Favours, 56. b. People procure its Favours by unlawful Ways, oftner than by lawful, 178. C. Artifices to make a Fortune, 223. a. People are apt to run down the Birth of thoſe to the loweſt degree, whom ſhe raiſes to high Dignities, 297. a. People often complain wrongfully of what they call her Caprices, 578. b. The Syſtem of the Atheiſts is inconſiſtent with the Notion of ſuch a Being, 962. a. She reſembles Women in this, that ſhe loves the Young better than the Old, 973. a. Scioppius acts the Divine on this Point very ridiculouſly, ibid. Does not take it ill to have her Favours raviſh'd from her, 1203. a. Is never ſo much honour'd as when curs'd and reviled, 1675. a. She's a Goddeſs that has among her Worſhippers ſome elect and others reprobated, 2395. a. How a Body ought to carry himſelf to her, ibid. Complaints againſt her, 2460. C. The Sacrifice which the Roman Ladies made to her, 2725. a. What the Ancients ſaid of her Influence, 1892. K.

Whether ſhe favours ſome Perſons independently of their Imprudence, ibid. K. & ſeq. It's a hard matter to know what ſhe is, 2895. The Idea which the Pagans form'd of her, ibid. We often impute to her what we ought to impute to our meer Imprudence, ibid. The Man who is unfortunate through his Imprudence, has as much right to complain of Fortune, as an unfortunate Man who has done his Duty, 2896. a. b. Men often impute to Fortune what is wholly owing to their own Imprudence, 2895. b. Whether ſhe favours ſome Men independently of their Prudence, and perſecutes others independently of their Imprudence, 2893. a. b. 2894. a. b. 2895. a. b. What the Ancients have ſaid of her Influence, 2892. a. b. Acquitted from an unjuſt Imputation, and a true Reaſon aſſign'd of the depreſſing ſome Men of the brighteſt Parts A Goddeſs who has among her Worſhippers ſome elect and ſome reprobate, without owing any thing to their own Conduct, 2445. b. The Honours paid her as a Goddeſs, 1646. b.

Fortune-Tellers, The Prediction of a Fortune-Teller notably accompliſh'd 1426. b.

Forum; There was a time when Perſons could not have their Statues erected in the Forum, without a ſpecial Privilege, 836. D.

Foucher, A Canon of Dijon cited, 875. b.

Fountains, The Devotions paid to them, very ancient among the Heathens, and a healing Virtue aſcribed to them, 215. b. Of a ſingular Property, 1822. B B. 1828. L.

Fowls, Who were the firſt that fatted and cramm'd them, 1280. C. 2d Part.

France, A Miſtake to ſay that the Engliſh conquer'd the greateſt part of France, 961. a. Whether the Meeting of the States-General would be a real Advantage to France, 2190. a. The Aſcendant of the Genius of Spain over that of France in the Reigns of Lewis XII, and Alphonſo the I of Naples, 2329. a. Leagues againſt France hard to be diſſolv'd, 2329. b. States-General of France refuſe to conſent to an Alienation of any part of the Crown-Lands, at the Requeſt of Henry III, and why, 1625. b. Whether properly tributary to Edward IV. 1157. a. Accus'd by the Pope and by Charles V. of entring into an Alliance with the Turk againſt the Chriſtian Powers, 315. b. Its Prelates have not the Liberty of propoſing what they pleaſe in their Aſſemblies, 125. C. The Stock from whence the Kings of France are deſcended according to ſome 416. B. Has been plagu'd with ſeditious Preachers, 690, 691. in Tex. Its Conſtitution heretofore much reſembled that of Germany, 775, 776. B. ad fin. The Court of France ſends Diſpatches to the States-General, recommending to them the Intereſts of the Houſe of Orange, 726. E. Kings of France heretofore were not reputed at Age till full 21 Years, 902, 903. in Tex. ad in. France trick'd and ſhamefully betray'd in a Treaty of Peace, 942, 943. & ſeq. in Tex. ad fin. It's Monarchy within a hair's breadth of Ruine by the Houſe of Burgundy, 960. B. Reſpects and practiſes the old Maxim, Divide & Impera, 1439. a. It's Laws do not permit the King to marry a Baſtard, 1987. a. Makes a Peace rather advantageous than glorious with England, 1990. b. Was loaded with more Impoſts under Lewis XI. than ever it had been under any of his Predeceſſors, 1999. a. Why it's Subjects are more enſlav'd and more quiet at this time than ever heretofore, 2021. A. The Scandal it is to the Court

Court of France to ſtand in need of the Pope's Bull, for confirming of Biſhops, 2155. a. There is hardly a Word of Truth in what is ſaid of it's Kings before the Days of Clovis, 2981. A. ad fin in marg. Power of the Parliaments of France in rejecting the Edicts of their Kings, moſt pernicious to the State, 1714. a.

Francis (St.) his Wife and Family, 1340. b. Ferrand to be pitied for engaging in the Defence of St. Francis, 1349. G.

Francis I. His Royal Seat of Folembrai, by whom burnt, and for what Reaſon, 1698. a.

A Judgment on the Hiſtories which had been wrote upon him in his own Life, and in that of his Son, 1549. a. Grew ill-humour'd as he grew old, 1605. a. Was very unhappy in the Choice of his Miniſters, ibid. Reliſhes Marott's Pſalms, 2004. M. ad in. 1007. O. ad med. Invites Melancton into France, 2027. F. Leaves his Curſe to his Children in caſe they do not revenge him, 1349. R. The Calumnies deſign'd to blacken him, ibid. Is ill uſ'd by his Mother, 1549. F. The wiſe Counteſs that was given him before he came to be King, 1349. C. ad in. His Amours with the Counſels of Chateau Briand, 960. C. His Murmurs againſt Providence, 1349. E. He ſends to one of his Miſtreſſes for ſome Jewels he had preſented, and having received them, melted up in Barrs, he returns them to her, and applauds her Conduct, 1007. Meets with an ill Return for all his favouring the Amours of Harry VIII. 944. G. ad med. His Soul goes ſtraight to Hell without ſtopping at Purgatory, 896. His Indignation at the reading a Paſſage in Dante, 876. b. The Slight he made uſe of to gain the Friendſhip of the Proteſtants, 815. E. ad fin. He takes a Progreſs to the Coaſt of Normandy for freſh Air, 997. a. Harrangu'd off hand by Alciatus, 158. G. Whether he ever aſk'd what an Ariſtotelian Philoſopher meant, 624. B. His generous Conduct towards Charles V. 994. b. It's an Illuſion to think he deſerves Praiſe for not attempting againſt the Emperor's Liberty, ibid. Said he never knew any learned Man whoſe Learning he had not exhauſted in two Years, except Caſtellan, 879. Had like to ſend Ramus to the Gallies for his Inſolence to Ariſtotle, 624. a.

How light he made of Admiral Bonnivet his Favourite's attempting to raviſh his Siſter Margaret of Valois, 2339. a. Why the Spaniſh Hiſtorians affect to cry him up, 1347. b. By whoſe Advice he forbore lying with Mary of England, Queen, to his Uncle Lewis XII. 1348. a. b. Like to have been put by the Crown of France by the ſame Mary's impoſing a ſuppoſed Child, 1344. a. How pox'd by the Husband of one of his Miſtreſſes, 1349. a. His Murmurs againſt Providence, ibid. b. The horrid Calumnies againſt him, 1350. b. 1351. a. b. The Form of a moſt wicked Oath pretended to be ſworn by him to Solyman II. upon a Treaty of Alliance, 1351. b. The Curſe he gave his Children unleſs they were reveng'd on Charles V. 1355. b. His way of currying Favour with the Proteſtants of Germany, 815. a. His Indignation at the Poet Dante's making Hugh Capet the Son of a Butcher, 840. b.

Francis II. had abſolutely deſtroy'd the Reformation in France, if he had lived a little longer, 1617. N.

Franciſcans, At a hard plunge about the Book of Conformity of the Life of their St. Francis with that of J. Chriſt, 1344. b. Do not obſerve their Rules, 1346. a. Their extravagancies in their Sermons about their Founder, ibid. b.

Frangipani, an Italian Family, boaſts that the Houſe of Auſtria is deſcended from a younger Brother of theirs, 1358. b. When they ſettled in Hungary, 1359. a.

Fratricelli, Their nightly promiſcuous Embraces of Men and Women how detected, 1562. a.

Frauds (pious) 560. E. ad in. 599. I. 612. O. ibid. AA. 742. H.

Free-will, the Difficulties of reconciling it with Fate and Providence have their Key in another State, 165. The Characters of thoſe who are apt to doubt they have Free-will, 1596. a.

Fregoſa, Envoy of France murder'd, and falſe Inſtructions imputed to him, 1397. a.

French, are forced to capitulate at Leith, and for ever to depart out of Scotland, 722. ad fin. Render'd themſelves odious there, ibid. Are driven out of Italy, 1906. I. Keep a mighty ſtir about the part which they had in the Battle of Raab, 1927. B. ad fin. Their Folly in Oppoſition to the Wiſdom of the Venetians, 2020. N. They are very far from idolizing their Monarchs ſo much as People imagine, 2021. A.

Friends, a Reaſon for excuſing Faults in our Friends, 478. a.

Friendſhip, not proof againſt the Devil of Uncleanneſs, 865. a. A high Inſtance of it in Philemon the Friend of Euripides, 1367. a.

Friſchman (Mr.) his piece concerning Cavalier Borri, recommended to be read, 685. What is ſaid in it of Borri's Eſſay towards a Reſurrection by Fire, ibid. b.

Froila King of Aſturias, whether his VVife was Daughter to Eudes Duke of Aquitaine, 2274. b.

Frontevaux, Its Monks and Nuns have a VVoman for their Head and General, 1325. b. An Apology for it, 1326. a.

Fryars, An Apology for 'em by Cardinal D'ailly, call'd the Buckler of Poverty, 132. a. The good Offices they do one another, 1347. a.

Fumbling, Its Signification, 2445. b. VVhere and by whom, and upon whom moſt practis'd, 2446. b.

Future State (A) aſſerted by a Perſon's appearing after Death according to promiſe, 668. b.

G A B.

GAbalis (Comte de) Whether it be the Original of the Chiave del Gabinetto, or this the Original of that, 684. a.

Gabriela d'Eſtree, The Diſguiſe Hen. IV. made uſe of to ſpeak to her, 1632. a.

Galba, His way of honouring a Malefactor who pleaded the Rights of a Roman Citizen, 456. a.

Galeazo (John) Duke of Milan, the Wickedneſs and Cruelty of his Uncle Lewis Sforza to him, 312. b. 313. b. A moving Deſcription of an Interview between him and Lewis XII. when the latter invaded Italy, 313. b. ſaid to have died of over-careſſing his beautiful Dutcheſs, ibid.

Gallatius (Tarquin) the Character of his Eloquence from Balzac, 1379. b.

Galliots, By whom firſt uſed, 2658.

Gaming, A fearful Inſtance of its Witchcraft, 538. b.

Games (Olympick) VVomen forbid to ſee them on pain of preſent Death, the Reaſon, 586. b.

Gammut, A Term in Muſick, by whom firſt invented, 336.

Garaſſe (Pere) His charging Beza with an Attempt of ſubſtituting a Negative to the VVords of Conſecration at the Conference of Poiſſy, diſprov'd by Catholick Authors, 616. b. 617. a. b.

Gaſſendus, His juſt Character 910. a.

Gauls, Their greateſt Obſtacle to the embracing Chriſtianity, and how remov'd, 1684. b.

Gaza (Theodore) burns his Tranſlation of Ariſtotle's Phyſicks and Morals out of meer Generoſity, for fear it ſhould prejudice the Tranſlation of them by his Friend Argyropylus, 343.

Gazetts, The Catholick Princes ſhould not ſuffer the Devotions and Prayers for a happy Campaign, to be publiſh'd in their Gazetts, the Reaſon of this, 128. a. The Publick deceived by falſe News long before the Invention of the Gazette, 102.

Geloſi, A Company of Players in Italy about the Beginning of the XVII Century, who acquir'd a ſurpriſing Reputation, 257. a.

Genealogiſts, Their Impudence and bold Undertakings, 2961. a. b. An Inſtance of a Spaniſh Genealogiſt, ibid. Genealogiſts derive Cardinal Mazarin's Family from the ancient Roman Conſuls, T. Geganius Macerinus, Proculus Geganius Macerinus, &c. 2962. a.

Genealogies, The VVeakneſs of St. Jerom and other primitive Fathers of the Church with regard to Genealogies and Pedigrees, 2962. a. The Accounts of 'em render'd obſcure by Grammatical Faults, 712. b.

Generals, Moſt ſecure by ſpreading a ſincere report of their Deſign, 102. a. Generals of Armies love to protract a VVar, 927. b. The Romans chang'd their Generals almoſt every Year, ibid. The good Policy of this, ibid. Some great Generals have on their Deathbed dreaded the Juſtice of God, on Account of the Blood ſhed by them in religious VVars, which yet they had thought moſt juſt, 930.

Generation, Neither Generation nor Death, properly ſpeaking, in Nature, 2611. a.

Vol. II. 801 Geneva, (the Magiſtrates of) tax'd with Indiſcretion on their Silence, when John Calvin was accuſed of an execrable Crime, 801. Some Perſons who were Anabaptiſts, have found a place in the Martyrology of Geneva, 541 b. Divines of Geneva cenſur'd as if they had introduc'd the Fatality of the Stoicks, 2419 a.

Vol. III. 1141

Vol. IV. 2419

Genii, The Doctrine of the Heathens concerning them, 807. a. The Aſcendant which the Genius of Auguſtus had over Mark Anthony's, ibid. Every Man's Genius forms its own Body, a Doctrine of the Cainites reconcilable to that of the Platoniſts, 807. a.

Gennadius, firſt Patriarch of Conſtantinople after its Conqueſt by the Turks. The Ceremony of his Elevation and Inſtalment by Mahomet II. 1116. a.

Generoſity, All Thoughts of it deſtroy'd by Love, 865. a.

Genoa, Exorbitancy of the Nuns there, 692, a.

Geometry, Requir'd by an Inſcription on the Doors of ſome ancient Greek Schools, as a neceſſary Qualification for Admittance, 1259. b.

George (St) How painted by the Greeks, 963.

Gerard, The Example which encourag'd him to aſſaſſinate William Prince of Orange, 1785. a.

Germain, (St) a remarkable Trial of Skill between St. Martin and him, 843. b.

Germans, put the very Hour of a Perſon's Birth in their Elogies, 938. b. The hard Condition on which Julius II. allow'd 'em to eat Fleſh on St. Martin's Day, 1791. b.

Germany, The Occaſion of the VVar which laid it waſte from 1618, to the Peace of Munſter, 132. b. VVho was the ancienteſt Hiſtorian of this Nation, 1161. A good Jeſt of Julius II. upon the Germans, 1791. b.

Gift (New-Year's) of what kind made to the Footmen of a Great Miniſter, 1584. a.

Gifts, variouſly diſtributed, ſome fall to one Soul, and ſome to another, 2686. V. ad fin.

Girls, The Difference between Italian and Flemiſh Girls, 2524. a.

Glaſs, Inſtead of it they uſe a Stone as hard as Marble and tranſparent in Cappadocia, 845. b.

Glory, A refin'd Deſire of Glory the Principle of condemning Riches, 106. b.

Gluttony, A School of Gluttony kept at Rome, 289.

Gnoſticks, Charg'd with many things they never allowed as part of their Belief, 808. a. How they might be led into their Impieties, ibid.

Goa (Vice-Roy of) aſſiſts the Miſſionaries in their Converſion of the Brachmans, by decrees of Confiſcation, 2103. b.

Goats, The Reaſon of the Maſſacre of the Goats in ſome part of France, 520. b.

GOD, The Tetragrammaton-Name, 192, 193. G. Has the Idea's of infinite different VVorlds, but perfectly regular, 253. b. Not to know him is a leſs evil than to attribute to him what the Gentiles attributed to their Gods, 327. a. VVhether the Incomprehenſibility of his Nature ought to make People neglect his VVorſhip, 375. C. ad fin. His Preſcience far from deſtroying, eſtabliſhes the Liberty of the Creature, 509. A. ad fin. A bold blaſphemous Criticiſm of his VVorks, 901. H. How the Author of the Criticiſm was puniſh'd, ibid. One may believe in God, and yet be perſwaded that Shame is founded only upon poſitive Laws, 1105. N. ad in. The Objections made againſt his Exiſtence, are not able to perſwade that he does not exiſt, ibid. To what degree has his Glory been proſtituted by the Poets of Paganiſm, 1097. b. The perfect Love of God is that of loving him for his own ſake, 1217. a. In what Senſe it may be ſaid that he's ſubject to Laws 1649. b. They who deny his Exiſtence have leſs Right to reject Magick and Genii than others, 1681. N. ad in. The great Efficacy of his VVord, 1769. a. His Spirituality proved, 1924. E. ad fin. The Belief of his Exiſtence, without the Belief of his Providence, cannot be either a Motive to Virtue, or a Reſtraint from Vice, 2025. a. The Anſwer made to a Prince who ask'd a Definition of God, 2735. a. As ſoon as he declares a new Doctrine to Men, the Devil oppoſes it, 2109. HH. It has always been lawful, and even neceſſary to prove his Exiſtence, 1139. L. ad med. It's infinitely more advantagious to believe there is a God, than to believe there is not, 2471. ad med. The Deſire of diſculpating the Divinity, has obliged the Theologiſts to turn their Thoughts an hundred different ways, 2493. I. ad med. Whether the Doctrine which would make him the Author of Sin, would neceſſarily lead to Atheiſm, ibid. That Syſtem which places him in the higheſt degree of Elevation and Glory, ought to be preferred to all others, 2456. a. He makes himſelf known to Men by oppoſite Methods, 2458. a. An Examination of what is uſually ſaid, that we muſt not meaſure his Privileges and Obligations by the Line of ours, 2619. B. ad fin. VVhether it be as eaſie for him to create a new Soul every Moment, as to produce it, 2518. b. He alone is truly wiſe, 2636. N. It is not ſafe to diſcourſe his Nature in the Preſence of thoſe who want Underſtanding, ibid. How we may reſemble him, ibid. VVhether the Conſequence be juſt from the Exiſtence of God to that of Demons, 2639. a. A Reflexion on the Incomprehenſibility of his Nature, 2646. b. Facts ſhewing that it's lawful for the Orthodox to diſpute about Arguments for his Exiſtence, 3064. ad fin. Two things naturally oppoſite, the Power of doing much Miſchief, and the Exerciſe of it on one hand, and the doing of a great deal of good on the other, naturally lead Men to the ſame thought, to wit, the Acknowledgment of a God, 2535. I. ad med. A remarkable Inſtance of this in the Americans taking ſome the Spainards, and others the Engliſh for Gods, ibid. The Belief of God's Exiſtence without the Belief of a Providence is alledg'd by the Siameſe, as an Inſtance of an Inducement to Virtue, 2764. a. b. God not able to form the VVorld without the Concourſe of uncreated Matter, how confuted, and by whom, 1660. a.

God, An Univerſity in Germany, like to have been ſuppreſs'd by it's Founder, becauſe 'twas made a Problem in a Metaphyſical Lecture, Whether there was a God or no, 2140. a. The Belief of the Plurality of God's accounted for among the Heathens, 807. b. How the Greatneſs of God may be perceiv'd, 357. b. Des Cartes's fam'd Argument for the Exiſtence of a God, viz. That the Idea of the moſt perfect Being includes Exiſtence, ſhewn to have been St. Anſelm's thought in the 11th Century, 269. b. Confuted by Thomas Aquinas of old, 270. a. u. By which of the Heathen Philoſophers firſt acknowledg'd to be the Author of the Order and Symmetry of the Parts of the World, 229. b. Some believe the Exiſtence of Spirits and Immortality of the Soul without acknowledging a God. 2634. a.

Goddeſs, Men who happened to lie with a Goddeſs, liv'd but a ſhort time after, according to an ancient Heathen Tradition 246. a.

Gods, Their Loves, 352. A. (TΔ) ad. in. The Pagans accuſed them of leading them into the Commiſſion of Evil, 1595. Great Philoſophers have aſſign'd for Authors of their Being Things which are not God, 1826. G. Others have deprived them of Life and Knowledge, ibid. M. N.

Good, Whether it ſurpaſſes Evil in the Nature of things, 3049. b.

Golden Number by whom invented, 1580. b.

Goods, Whether a Community of Goods be better than Property, 1186. b.

Gooſe (A) paſſionately in love with a beautiful Youth, 220. b.

Gothick Characters, when chang'd in France for the Roman, 463. b.

Goths, The Hiſtory of the Goths by Leonard Aretin, is only a Tranſlation from the Greek of Procopius, 337.

Government, Mr. Paſchal's Notions about it, 2468. a.

Grace (Univerſal) The Doctrine of the greateſt reformed Divines of France, 104. b. How it diſcovers itſelf in great Wits, and how in ordinary Wits, 2466. b. The Doctrine of Grace a Sea without Bounds and Bottom, 1784. a. The Inamiſſibility of Grace a ſettled Doctrine of the Calviniſts, 1332, b.

Gratian (Balthaſar) his Works complain'd of by two ſorts of Readers very much to his Glory, 2443. a.

Grammar (Donatus's) on Vellum, and another Book call'd Confeſſorialia were the firſt Books printed by John Fauſt Citizen of Mentz, and Inventer of that Art, in the Year, 1456. 53. a. 53. b.

Grammarians, Poets and Rhetoricians invited by Corvinus King of Hungary to his Court, only to make them beg their Way home, 670. a.

Grammont (Mareſchal) loſt the Battle of Honnecour to favour Cardinal Richlieu's declining Affairs, 1323. b.

Grand Signior, In which of the Ottoman Race did this Title begin, 1113. a.

Gratitude, All Sentiments of it deſtroy'd by Love, 865. a.

Great Men, Nothing has been the Subject of more falſe Reports than the Sickneſs and Death of them, 68. a.

Great Ladies favour Muſicians more than all other Profeſſions of the ſame Rank put together, 1398. a.

Greece, infamous for falſe Witneſſes, a common Saying on that Occaſion, 845. b.

Græcum eſt non poteſt legi, the Original of it, 51. a.

Greek Tongue, thought to be in Danger of being ſoon loſt in the Days of Plutarch, 996. a. When the Latin Tongue began clearly to gain Ground of the Greek, 996. b.

Greeks, A Preſumption of their knowing but late what concern'd the Weſtern Nations, 1183. a.

Greek Philoſophers ſeeming ignorant of the Exiſtence of a God, very ingeniouſly accounted for, 231. a.

Greek Poets, Several of them buried and deſtroyed at the Inſtigation of the Primitive Chriſtian Clergy, 1359.

Greek Profeſſorſhip (Vacancy of the) at Venice, notify'd by Sound of Trumpet, 162. a.

Greek Prieſts, A Jeſt of the Romiſh Prieſts on them upon a pretended Anniverſary Miracle, 1162. b. a.

Greek Entertainments always ended with Hercules's Bowl, 1645. a.

Gregory IX. a Commentary on his Decretals, by John Andreas, entituled, Novella, 255.

Grinding, What it ſignifies in Scripture, 2666. b.

Grotius cenſur'd by a Calviniſt Miniſter, for not ſpeaking cautiouſly enough of the Right of Kings, nor carrying the Prerogative of Monarchy high enough, 2173. b. Said to have ſtolen his Treatiſe De veritate Chriſtianæ Religionis, and from whom, 1611. b.

Guicciardine, A Diſcourſe in him concerning the Manner how the Popes came to be Temporal Lords of Italy left out of his fourth Book, where now to be found, 1791. b. He is cenſur'd even by Montagne for attributing to ill Motives all the Actions related in his Hiſtory, 1679. a.

Guitmond, A Monk, the true Author of 3 Books, De veritate Corporis Chriſti in Euchariſtia, adverſus Berengarium, 336. a.

Guilt, Diſcovered by Silence, 603. b.

Guiſe (Duke de) his bold and vehement Remonſtrances to Henry II. againſt a Peace advantageous to France, 1613. b.

Guſtavus Adolphus, his Convention of the Lutherans and Calviniſts at Leipſick, in order to a Reunion, by whom fruſtrated, 1685. b. His Diverſions amongſt his Colonels and Captains, 714. a.

H A.

HABIT of Philoſophers when firſt left off in the Roman Empire, 1775. a.

Hadrian's Market, where and whence ſo called, 499. b. Equall'd to Nebuchadnezzar in a Hymn of the Jewiſh Ritual, and look'd upon as a greater Scourge than Veſpaſian or Titus, 500. b. The Names he gave the ſeveral Apartments of his fine Palace of Tibur, 1555. a. Severian's bitter Curſe accompliſh'd upon him, ibid. b. Why he got his Freed-man Phlegon to father the Hiſtory of his Life written by himſelf, 1556. a. His exceſſive Curioſity in prying into the Affairs of private Females, ibid. b. Travell'd always on Foot, and never cover'd his Head in any Weather, 1557. a. His unbridled Paſſion for Antinous, and extravagant Grief upon his Death, 575. a. b.

Hadrian IV, His Scrupulouſneſs with regard to Poetic Fictions ſo great, that he would not look at the fine Laocoon in Rome, 1558. b. Too much a Moraliſt to make a good Pope, 1562. a. Never chang'd his Opinion after his Elevation, That a Pope may err in Matters of Faith, 1563. a. The Cardinals like to be ſtoned for electing him, 1561. a. Suppreſſed the Penſions of learned Men from a ſordid Oeconomy, 1563. b.

Hair, The Loſs of it prejudicial to Beauty, 1579. b. A Man who had the Faculty of moving his Hair without moving his Hand or Head, 1646. a.

Hali, Eunuch and General of Solyman, his Behaviour to the Meſſenger, who in a mighty fright brought him the News of the Loſs of Gran, 1631. a. His ſtrange Figure from Thuanus, ibid. n.

Hands, The Cauſe of Man's Wiſdom, according to Anaxagoras, 230. b.

Hangings, When firſt made uſe of in ancient Rome, 2526. a. embroider'd Hangings, by whom invented, ibid. b.

Hannibal, deſpiſed the Painter who drew him with two Eyes, and rewarded him, who drew him in profil, 519. b. The excellent Moral of this, ibid. His Stratagem in a Sea-fight againſt Eumenes King of Pergamum, 2525. a.

Hanno, condemn'd by the Carthaginians as dangerous to the publick Liberty, becauſe he tam'd a Lyon, 1579. b.

Happineſs, Which is the higheſt pitch of it, 1927. a. In what Senſe is Pleaſure ſaid to be the ſummum bonum, or Happineſs of Man, 1190. b.

Hardingberg, The ridiculous manner of Electing its Burgomaſter, from Huetius, deſcrib'd in Latin Verſe, 642. b.

Harmony, The Syſtem of a pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony between the Soul and Body of Animals examin'd and diſcuſs'd, 2615. a. b.

Hatred, What kind of it the State requires from the People againſt its Enemies. 525. a. That of Siſters greater than that of Brothers, 591. b.

Hay, (Alexander) a Scotch Jeſuit, dy'd of eating peel'd Barly not well boyl'd, and for what Crime, 1567. b.

Hear-ſay, In what Caſes it is lawful for an Author to report a Hear-ſay, 475. a.

Heart, It is not lawful to examine the Heart, or dive into the Intention, where an Action is good in itſelf. The Heart turn'd againſt GOD and the Magiſtrate by Phanaticiſm, a remarkable Inſtance of it, 1552. a.

Heathens, Believe the Deities envious at the Proſperity of Mankind, 836. a. Their Sacrifices, when they ceas'd, and under what Emperor, 1775. a. They refus'd a Funeral-Pile to thoſe, who kill'd themſelves, 128. b. They had a Glimpſe of the Incarnation, 365. a. They had no Notion of Juſtice, 862. b.

Heavens, The number of them according to Abelard, 585. a. An Objection againſt their Motion, 640. b.

Hebrew, Where firſt Printed, and when, 666. The ſpace of time in which the Hebrew Text of the Bible was alter'd, 138. a. The reaſon of its alteration, ibid.

Heidelberg, Ruin'd for being againſt the Emperor, and for being faithful to him, 2458. a. Sack'd by Count Tilly in April 23. ad 1620. 2472. An Evangelical Jubilee celebrated in Heidelberg in 1617. for their Deliverance from Popery a Hundred Years before, 245. b.

Hell, The Eternity of Hell-Torments cloſes with Reaſon, and with the Ideas of Infinite Goodneſs, 2760. b.

Helena, (of Troy) a Spaniſh Monk, too particular in deſcribing her Beauty, 1587. a. A Secret about her Death, 1589. b. Her excuſe, that ſhe was Fated to love Paris, 1590. a. 1595. b. What diſarm'd her Husband juſt as he was going to kill her, 1589. b. Thought improbable by ſome, that ſhe ſhould ever be carry'd to Troy, 1591. a.

Helenion, An Herb, its Original and Vertues, 1589. a.

Hellebore,

Vol. II. [illegible]
Vol. III. [illegible]
Vol. IV. [illegible]

Hellebore, taken by the Antient Philoſophers to purge the Brain, and quicken the Wit, 863. a.

Heloiſa, chooſes to be Miſtreſs, rather than Wife of Peter Abelard, 1603. a. b. 1604. Her fine Deſcription in Latin of the obſtinacy of her Love for him, 1603. a.

Helvicus, In what Point his Chronological-Tables judg'd moſt defective, 1607. a.

Henry, II. of England, inſolently treated by Heraclius, Patriarch of Jeruſalem in an Aſſembly of the Engliſh Clergy, 1643. a. b.

Henry, II. of France, his Perfidiouſneſs in ſeizing Metz very proſperous, 951. a. Aſſumes the Title of Protector of the German Liberty, 1610. a. His Stratagem to get a young Italian Lady to his Bed, 1679. b. Condeſcends to be examin'd Judicially upon Interrogatories in a Law-ſuit between his Father's Concubine and her Husband.

By a Law of his, in what Caſe Mothers are reputed to Murder their own Children, 2478. b. The behaviour of a young Scotch Lady upon finding herſelf with Child by him, 1619. b. The inſolent Behaviour of the Duke of Nevers to him, from a regard to the Glory of France, 1615. b.

Henry, III. of France, his Indiſcretion in diſcovering ſome Imperfections of a certain Lady, did him much prejudice, 812. b. Turns Catechiſt to the wicked and rebellious Divines of Paris, 696. a. Underſtood not the Art of Reigning, ſo well as the Morality of the Goſpel, ibid. Repreſents to the States of Blois the neceſſity of alienating part of his Demeſnes, and the Propoſal rejected, 954. a. Bodin fancy'd the French Monarchy would end in him, becauſe he was the 63d and Climaterick King, 655. a. Puts a barbarous Affront upon his Siſter, the Queen of Navarre, 2353. a. How unlike himſelf before and after he was King 2184. b. Why hated by the Ladies, 1622. b. Would be only call'd Brother Henry, when he retir'd to certain Convents, 1626. b. His extraordinary Eloquence and Grace in Speaking, 1627. a. Myſterious Circumſtances obſerv'd in his Death, 1629. b. Facts concerning the Houſe in which he was Aſſaſſinated, ibid.

The cauſe of the Dutcheſs of Monpenſier*'s hatred to him*, 1623. a. The movements ſhe gave herſelf to be reveng'd of him, ibid. She uſed to ſhew with with pleaſure the Sciſſars, with which ſhe intended to clip Henry III. when the League deſign'd to thruſt him into a Monaſtery, 812. b. What provoked her, ibid. A bitter Satyr of Pope Sixtus V. on him, 1625. b.

Henry IV. of France, The Ceremony uſed at his Abſolution, 694. a. His ſhuffling between his Wife and his Miſtreſſes below any Tradeſman, 2352. a. His Notions about the Qualities of a proper Wife, 1633. a. b. The Ceremony of his Abſolution, 1624. b. His Defence of himſelf againſt thoſe who charg'd him with giving himſelf up to unbecoming Pleaſures, 1640. a. Whether he ever ſaid, That Kings were great Knaves, ibid. His Anſwer to du Haillon, a vain and arrogant Boaſter of his Hiſtory, 1573. b. What he ſaid when told, He expos'd his Perſon too much to reſcue Mareſchall Biron in an Ingagement, 1430. a. Whether Ravillac was mov'd to murder him by reading Mariana*'s Book about the lawfulneſs of murdering Tyrants*, 2180. b. 2183. a.

If he had made uſe of mild Intreaties the Edicts of Nantz had never been ratify'd by the Parliament of Paris, 1713. a.

By a Deſign concerted before-hand between Cardinal Perron, and a Hugonot Miniſter, who were to Diſpute before Henry IV. The Miniſter ſuffers himſelf to be worſted, 2620. b.

Du Vair*'s Anſwer to him, when ask'd his Opinion about legitimating the Duke of* Vendoſm, and ſettling the Crown of France on him, 1429. b.

Henry VIII. of England, The Title of Moſt Chriſtian, deſign'd by Pope Julius II. to be transferr'd to him, and taken from Lewis XII. 1790. b. The Sorbon charg'd with ſelling their Opinion in favour of Harry VIII*'s Divorce*, 119. b.

Heraclitus, conceals his Works in the Temple of Diana, in hopes that being found one Day, they might paſs for myſterious, 1262. b.

Hercules, Six Heroes of this Name according to Cicero, Forty according to Varro, 1644. a. His Bowl the laſt Round in the Greek Entertainments, 1645. a. His drowning himſelf at Fifty becauſe he had not ſtrength enough to bend his Bow, an Allegory, 1647. b. The ground of a Parallel between him and Moſes, 1648. The Lips of a beautiful Braſs Statue of him in Agrigentum, worn thin by the Kiſſes of Votaries, 1404. b.

His Picture taken from an Apparition of him, 1646. b.

Hereſy, Something ſuper-natural in the Birth of it, according to a Proteſtant Divine, 2127. a. Perſecuting them at Home, and careſſing them Abroad, an Article of the Religion of Sovereigns, 556. a. The number of the principal Hereſies, from the Days of the Apoſtles to Luther, 1751. b.

Hereſiarch, The Argument from a Phyſician, who gives his Patient Arſenick, to an Hereſiarch, who inſtills poyſonous Doctrine, wherein defective, 2627. a.

Hereticks, Abſurdities imputed by the Fathers to the antient Hereticks, which they never held, 808. a. Why their Books ſhould be ſuppreſs'd, when thoſe of the Orthodox, in which their Objections are propos'd are not ſuppreſs'd, 976. a. More heroical to grant Protection to perſecuted Wretches, whom we believe Hereticks, than if we believ'd them Orthodox, 2339. b.

Whether they had their Martyrs in the three firſt Centuries, 2163. a. & ſeq.

The pretence that the Orthodox had not Tribunals of their own in the three firſt Centuries, no Argument that the Hereticks might not boaſt of having Martyrs, 2166. a.

Are leſs rigorouſly uſed by the Turks, than by Chriſtians, 2362. a.

Hermolaus Barbarus, A very Learned Man; the great Generoſity of Lorenzo de Medicis to him, 490. b.

Hermorphradites, A Paſſage of an Hermophradite Monk, who got himſelf with Child, 1639. a.

The Poetical Origin of Hermophradites, 2660. a. The Platonick Origin of them, 2640, a. b.

Herodotus, thinks it probable, That Helena never was carry'd to Troy, 1591. a.

Heſhuhans, A Chimerical Sect of Hereticks, 1658. a.

Heſiod, The firſt that diſtinguiſh'd four kinds of Reaſonable Natures, 1577. b.

His Account of the Age of Man, 1578. a. The proportion he makes between it and ſeveral other Mortal Natures, ibid.

Which alnoe, affords the greateſt Objection to the Manicheans againſt the Unity of GOD, 2151. a.

Heteroclite, An Heteroclite Poet in France, his new Manner and Talents, 2369. b.

Hexameter-Verſe, the only Meaſure known among the Greeks for Six hundred Years, 332. b.

Who was the firſt Inventer of other Meaſures, ibid.

Hierachy, Books written againſt the Hierarchy in general, by the Jeſuits, 175. a.

Hipparchia, Wife of the Cynick Crates, her ſubtil Sophiſm to Theodorus the Atheiſt, and how retorted, 1671. b.

Hipparchus, The firſt who diſcover'd that the fix'd Stars had a motion from Weſt to Eaſt, 1673. a.

Hiſpanienſis, The difference between it and Hiſpanus, 471. b.

Hiſtorians, The neceſſity of confuting particular Paſſages in thoſe, whoſe Authority in the main is too low to do any miſchief, 822. b.

The dangers they run by being ſincere and honeſt, 832. a. The Candor of the Belgick and Germanick Hiſtorians a Chimera, 944. b.

Wherein the Moderns manifeſtly excel the Antient, 1021. a. The Sincerity of the French Hiſtorians in one Inſtance not to be parallel'd by thoſe of any other Nation, 1617.

What kind of Matter affects them moſt, 1649. b. The Cunning of the Spaniſh Hiſtorians, in magnifying Francis I. of France, 1347. b.

The Impertinence of the French Hiſtorians in ſpeaking of what paſs'd between Queen Elizabeth and Mareſchal Biron, 1427. a.

In what Caſes to be excuſed, and in what not;

not according to Diodorus Siculus, 2884. C. ad med.

Hiſtory, Better forbear writing them, if the Times will not bear Truth, than tell Lies, 519. b. The Reaſon of it, ibid. The Miſchief of Lying Hiſtories, that they ſpoil the Credit of the true, 557. a. The difficulty it lies under with regard to the Readers, 571. b.

Which corrupts Hiſtory moſt, Flattery, or Satyr? 2193. b. How a wiſe Man ſhould write Hiſtory the of his own time, 2183. b.

Its variations in the Circumſtances of Facts, no Argument againſt the Truth of Hiſtory in the main, 1551. a.

A Rule for avoiding Partiality in the writing of a Hiſtory, 1887. b.

Hobs, his Deſign in Tranſlating Thucidides, 1677. His Principles of Philoſophy not proper to deliver him from the fear of Evil Spirits, 1681. a.

Hookſtrat, (James) A Dominican of a very ill Character, was one of the firſt that wrote againſt Luther, and thereby did him no diſſervice, 1684. a.

Hoffman, (Daniel) A Lutheran Divine, Author of a troubleſome Diſpute in Germany, Whether what is true in Philoſophy, may be falſe in Divinity, 1687. a.

Hoffman, (Melchior) The Elias of the Anabaptiſts, 1689. A Prophecy that he ſhould preach the Goſpel over all the Earth, having with him the 144000 mark'd Perſons in the Revelations, ibid. a.

Holland, (Counteſs of) Her being deliver'd of 365 Children evinc'd by the beſt Hiſtorians to be a Falſity, 1413. a.

Homo, Its definition, 684. b.

Homer, Criticiz'd upon the Speech of Phænix, 59. b. Had no Idea of heroick Honour, 62. b. Struck blind by the glory of an Apparition of Achilles, as he was keeping Sheep near his Tomb, 66. a. Scarce an Art or Science, but is to be found in his Iliads or Odyſſeys, 899. b.

The Emperor Hadrian conſults the Oracle about his his Country and Family, 2512. a. The Anſwer of the Oracle, ibid.

His Poems by whom divided into Books according to the number of the Alphabet, 350. a. The Collecting his Works by Piſiſtratus, an antient vulgar Error, ibid. b.

A Sentence of his, That it might not misbecome the Gods to take on them the Nature of Man, in order to enlighten the World, approv'd of by Ariſtotle, and conſtru'd by ſome Divines as a Glimpſe of the future Incarnation of GOD, 365. a.

Ariſtotle and he parallel'd in their Deaths, 367, a. b.

A Judgment upon him, and which is the beſt Piece in his Iliads, 260. b. A ſmall Remark upon his making Andromache feed Hector's Horſes, ibid. Who was the firſt that took the deſign of his Works right for the explanation of Juſtice and Vertue by Allegorical Narrations, 234. Recourſe had in Antient Times to Magick for the finding out Homer's Country, 928. a. Contradicts himſelf about Augury, in two places of the Odyſſes and Iliads compar'd with other places of each, 275. a. Why he gives two Names to the ſame thing, 2682. b.

The Author of this Dictionary admires thoſe who ſtill admire Homer's Iliads, 61. a.

Mezerai, Anſwers his own Objection about the Praiſes Homer beſtows on Penelope, very ill, 2512. a.

Homæomeriæ (the Doctrine of the) confuted at large by Arguments of the Author, without the aſſiſtance of Ariſtotle, 231. b.

Honey, Who firſt found out the Secret of drawing Honey, 352. b. 354. b. And the firſt that mix'd Honey with Wine, ibid.

Honnecour, (Battle of) loſt by Mareſchal Grammont, to favour Cardinal Richlieu's declining Affairs, 1323. b.

Honour of being a Citizen of Lacedæmon, and ſpeaking Greek according to the Poet Alcmæon, 163. a.

Hopital, (Michael del) Chanceller of France, how Painted in the Icones of Theodore Beza, 1710. b. The Author of ſeveral excellent Laws in France, 1711. a. Humbles the Power of the Parliaments, a. ibid. His Indulgence to his Servants, a great diſhonour to him, 1741. a. Said to have reſembled Ariſtotle, Cato and St Jerome, ibid.

Horns, Their Antiquity as Emblems of Cuckoldom, 1811.

Horſe, The Horſe of Sejanus, a Fatality attend'd him, 877. a. Brazen-Horſe which inſpired Love, Diſſert. 3112.

Horſe (Commiſſary General of the) when firſt created, and by whom, 578. b.

Hortenſius Hortalus, comes into the Senate-Houſe with his four Sons, deſcended from Conſuls and Dictators, to beg Bread for them, 1698. b.

Hoſpital, (Chancellor del') his Opinion of the Contracts of Sovereigns, 555. b.

Hotman (Francis) convicted of great unfairneſs in citing a Catholick Hiſtorian on the Article of Pope Julius II. 1788. b.

Hottinger, his Project of ſending proper Perſons into Æthiopia to enquire into the true State of Chriſtianity there, 1723. b. Is viſited by the Deputy of the Janſenites, ibid. a.

Houlieres, (Madamoiſelle) her great Character of Wit and good Senſe, 1611. a.

Hubert, (St) whether John Calvin, ſent his Son to be cured at his Shrine of the bite of a mad Dog 818. b.

Huetius, his attempt to prove that des Cartes's Opinion about the Nature of Brutes, was borrow'd from Cicero. and other Authors ſhewn to be vain 2519. b.

Deſcribes in Latin Verſe the ridiculous manner of Electing a certain Burgomaſter, 642. b.

Hugonotiſm, ſaid to be favour'd by Alexander VII. 969. a. b.

Hugonots, Sixteen Methods of Converting them recommended by the Clergy of France to the Controverſial Writers 2126. b. Hugonots of France ow'd their firſt good Condition to the adherence of Anthony de Bourbon King of Navarre; and the decline of their Affairs, to his change, 2445. a. Their triumphant State and vaſt Aſſemblies in Paris, for ſome time, under the Reign of Charles IX. 1708. Succours ſolicited for 'em by the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors at the Engliſh Court, 1615. a.

Nick-nam'd Parpaillot in ſome Parts of France, 1056. a.

Hugonot Miniſters deny'd the Title of Paſtors 1394. a.

That of Divini verbi Miniſter in the Title-pages of their Works or under their Prints, ended in Paul Ferri, and was never allow'd any other Miniſter after him, 1305. a.

Several of 'em who receiv'd Penſions from the Court of France, vindicated as to their Honeſty, 1310. a. How they called the Lord's-Supper in the beginning, 9335. b.

Human Souls, How diſpos'd of after they leave their Bodies, according to the Cynicks, 2515. a.

Humoriſts (Academy of the) in Rome, celebrate the Obſequies of Mr. Peiereſc in forty ſeveral Languages, 2501. b.

Hungary, Who was the firſt Cauſe of its loſing its Liberties, and of its being chang'd from an Elective to an Hereditary Kingdom, 285 b.

Hus, (John) Cardinal d' Ailly's Advice to him before his Tryal 131. b. Condemn'd by the ſame Cardinal, ibid.

Husbands, Remarkable Inſtances of tender Husbands, 1606. a.

The Lacedemonians reputed the beſt Husbands in the World, 106. b.

The Way of chooſing Husbands in Lincopen, 641. b,

A Treatiſe to prove, that a Man may be a ſufficient Husband without any viſible Teſticles, highly commended for its Wit and Learning, 2530. to 2553, Hutten, (John] kill'd by the Duke of Wirtenberg 1733. a. His Body taken up four Years after was not corrupted but bled afreſh, ibid.

Hymen, A witty Thought upon Ovid's arraying Hymen in a Saffron Colour Robe, Croceo velatus amictu, 2935. a.

Hypocondriacks, An Inſtance of three notable Hypocondriacks all at the ſame time, 2695. b.

Hypotheſis, (An) does not afford a demonſtrative Proof when the Matter of Fact, which it explains, may be explain'd by a different Hypotheſis, 669. a.

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1551. Vol. IV. 1439.

An Hypotheſis, ſhewing how certain Miracles may be in Vogue in one Age, and not in another, 1980. b.

J A. J E.

JAMES I. Suppos'd to have curtail'd Cambden's Works, 830. b.

Orders David Pareu's Commentary on the Epiſtle to the Romans, to be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman, 1456. b.

Iambicks, By whom invented, 332. a.

Janos (Kamini) abdicated Prince of Tranſilvania, his unfortunate Death, 284. b.

Janſenius, His Doctrine exactly that of St. Auſtin 436. a.

Janſeniſts, Their Deputies in their Returns from, Rome through Zurich, make a Viſit to the Learned Proteſtant Miniſter, Hottingen, 1723. a. Diſtinguiſh'd in their Books by the Particle ON, 2471. b. Expoſe themſelves to Cenſure by criticizing on Odericus Raynaldus, 143. a. Call'd Engliſh Dogs why and by whom, 2126. a.

Their ſhort way of anſwering the Accuſations of the Jeſuites, 2091. a. By whom firſt invented, ibid. b. The vaſt Expence they were at in defending their Cauſe at Rome, 1338. a.

Idea's of Vertue, preferr'd by the Pagans before the ill Example of their Gods, 1825. b.

Jealouſie, An Example of the Force of it, 826. a. A remarkable Inſtance of it in a learned modern Roman, 1652. a. An extravagant Inſtance of it, 2689. b. Various Reflections on it and Love, 2708. a. b.

Jealouſie of Don John of Auſtria, the Loſs of the Netherlands to King Philip II. 454. a. Jealouſie which reigns between excellent Preachers, is equal to that of Poets, or celebrated Beauties, 1695. a.

Jerom (St.) How he calls the Female Sex, 693. b. Miſtaken in ſaying Arius the Arch-heretick made his Peace with the Council of Nice, 368. b. His Friendſhip for Paula, a Subject for Slanderers, 24. a. His Zeal for ſome Practices in the preſent Worſhip of the Church of Rome, and Indignation at the Prieſt Vigilantius, who condemn'd them, 2963. b. His Maxim with regard to the Confutation of Heatheniſm exploded, 1320. a. His Anſwer to thoſe who approved not retiring from the World, but encountring Vice, 1328. a.

His Zeal for Saints, and the Honour paid to them, and his Indignation and Invectives againſt Vigilantius on this ſcore, 2963. b.

Jeruſalem, Which Town of Europe was to be the New Jeruſalem, according to the Prophecies of the Anabaptiſts, 1689. b. The corrupt Lives of the Chriſtian Clergy there, after its Recovery from the Saracens, 1643. a.

Jeſt, A Mark of its being good to Perfection, 580. a. A remarkable Example if its Power over Cruelty 545. b.

Jeſting below the Character of a Monarch, 2962. a.

Jeſuitiſſes, A late Order of Religious Women in the Romiſh Church, when and by whoſe Means aboliſh'd, 2091. b.

Jeſuites, Their Judgment of St. Auſtin, 86. a. Their Method of preſerving themſelves Chaſte, 1745. b. The People of Landsberg forbid to buy their Beer, and why, 1746. a. Inſtances of the extraordinary Chaſtity of ſome of 'em, 2177. b. A perfidious Example of ſeducing Young Men into their Order, whoſe Education is committed to them, 134. The Advantage they reap by having Doctors of all Opinions within their own Society, 562. a. Their reporting that Beza recanted at his Death, a very unlucky Buſineſs for them, 612. a. What turn they gave it, ibid. b. Their ſly way of calumniating in indeterminate Expreſſions, 2090. b. How rebuked for it, and convicted by their Adverſaries, 2091. a. A Compariſon between their Learning Jeſuits in the XVI. Century, and that of the more modern 175. b.

Jews, Their Deſcendants not permitted to depart Portugal without the King's ſpecial Leave, though Chriſtians for ſome Generations, 72. b. The Reaſon of their abſtaining from Pork, 90. b. Three hundred thouſand forced to quit the Dominions of the Catholick King John II. in one Day, 32. a. The ſpace of Time in which they alter'd the Hebrew Text of the Bible, 138. a. The Reaſon of this Alteration, ibid.

Impleaded before Alexander the Great by the Cananites, for having taken away their Country, by the Iſmaelites, for their Part of Abraham's Succeſſion, and by the Egyptians for their Rings and Jewels, 2076. b.

More odious to the Turks than any other People in the World, 2014. a. Their Cuſtom of planting a Cedar at the Birth of a Son, and a Pine at the Birth of a Daughter, 498. b. Their Horror for the Fair of Terebinthus, whence it proceeds, 499. b. Expell'd Rome by Tiberius on a ſacrilegious Fraud of a Jew, 1373. b.

By what Mark diſtinguiſh'd from the Chriſtians formerly in Naples, through the Care of Capiſtan a Cordelier, 2328. b. They claim kindred with Ariſtotle, and pretend he was of the Seed of Iſrael, and of the Tribe of Benjamin, 361. b. Learn'd the Immortality of the Soul, and a State of future Rewards and Puniſhments from the Greeks, and not the Greeks from them, according to one Doctor's Opinion, 2641. b.

Fables of the Jews with regard to the falſe Meſſias, 499. d.

Jewiſh Penances extremely ſevere, 74. b. A good Noſe one Mark of the true Meſſias among them, 501.

Ignorance, An Enquiry into the Nature of that Ignorance, which excuſes, 2625. a. b. 2626. a. b.

Ignorance oftner the Ruin of Subjects than the Ingratitude of Princes, 1154. b.

Iliads (Homer's) they are to be admir'd at, who ſtill admire that Poem, 61. a.

Illuſion, Very great ſometimes in proving Facts by the Reaſon of the Things, 2644. E. ad fin.

Inſtances of the Illuſions of Proofs drawn from the Conformity of Styles, 1216. b.

Illyricus, (Flavius) a Lutheran Divine publiſh'd a Romiſh Miſſal which makes much againſt his own Sect, 1749. a. & ſeq.

Images, Uncarv'd tolerated by the Turks in the Greek Churches, 2126. b. An Inſtance of the fiery Zeal of the firſt reform'd Miniſters againſt 'em, 1282. b. The Writers for them have ſo corrupted their Hiſtories as to make the Truths which they relate ſuſpected. 1044. b.

Whether the pricking Wax Images in Witchcraft, or ſetting them before a Fire can have any Power over the Life or Health of the Perſons repreſented, 2632. b. The Antiquity of Images in Witchcraft, 2635. a.

Imagination, Whether it can be chaſte in Caſuiſts treating of obſcene Caſes, 2668. b.

Imma, Daughter of Charlemaine, a Relation of her extraordinary Adventure with Eguiard Chaplain and Secretary to her Father, 1161. b. It exceeds any Tale in Boccaccio, or in the Heptameron of the Queen of Navarre, 1162. a.

Immortality of the Soul, People's not appearing to their Friends after their Death upon a Promiſe made, no ground for denying the Immortality of the Soul, 669. a. Oppos'd in a Book expreſly written againſt it by Acoſta, 73.

Learnt by the Jews from the Greeks, and not the Greeks from them, according to one Doctor's Opinion, 2641. b.

Imperfections, Of the Soul of Man, what the Stoicks attributed them to, 978. b.

Impieties, Impieties touching the Miracles of Moſes, and generally touching the whole Scripture, 728. b. A great Impiety, and great Piety equally rare, 1004. b.

Impoſts,

Impoſts, Their Original in France, 1651. b.

Impoſtors, The Book de Tribus Impoſtoribus, a meer Chimera, 339. a. Falſly aſcrib'd to Peter Aretin, ibid. Aſcribed alſo (but falſly) to Bernardins Ochinus, 2392.

Impotency, a barbarous Curioſity of the Ladies in the Court of France, to examine about a Caſe of Impotency, 2464. a.

A Diſſertation about Women who bring an Action of Impotency againſt their Husbands, 2526. a. b. & ſeq.

A very ſingular Action of Impotency brought by a Wife againſt her Husband, 2530. b.

Imprecations, The ſingular Effect of an Imprecation, 433. O.

Improvement of the Mind, Cardinal Richlieu's indefatigable Application to it, 2158. b.

Impurities, The ancient Fathers did not ſtick at inſerting the groſſeſt Impurities in their Works upon ſome Occaſions, 81. a.

Impurities, The Cauſe of the Murder and Downfal of many Princes, 326. An Opinion touching the Impurities of the Stage, 2669. b. A lively Idea given in the modeſteſt Terms of the Impurities of the ancient Stage in Rome, 2669. b.

Incarnation, A Glimpſe of it among the Heathens, 365. a.

Inceſt, What kind of Inceſt prohibited by ancient Athens and Lacedemon, 1674. a.

Incontinence, An approv'd Remedy for it beſides Marriage, 1698. a.

Incubus's, The Opinion that certain Perſons of extraordinary Merit have been begotten by thoſe Spirits is very ancient 702. b.

Indexes, The Life and Soul of Books, 282. b. The proper Qualities for compoſing a good Index, 283. a.

Indifference in Religion, Why it offends more than a falſe Worſhip, 76. a.

Infallibility, Knights of the Infallibility of the Pope, by whom inſtituted, 2170. a.

Infallibility of the Pope ex Cathedra, compar'd to the Oracles of Jupiter, according to the Gallican Church: The Infallibility of a Council compar'd to the Oracle of Apollo, 105. a.

Infidels, Whether Chriſtian Princes may enter into Alliances with Infidels againſt any Chriſtian Powers, 316. a.

Information, Of the Penitentiaries of Paris, 2475. b.

Informers, See Accuſers.

Ingratitude, Of the Publick to Aldobrandus, 169. a. Moſt frequent from Sons towards their Fathers, 946.

Innocence, (State of) how long it laſted, 17. a. diſcovered by Silence, 603. b.

Innovations, In States and Synods very dangerous to the State, 190. b.

Inquiſition, forc'd to humour the Superſtitions of the Body of Catholicks, 110. b.

Defend the doubtfulleſt Traditions, if favouring the worſhipping of Saints, 110. Its Antiquity and firſt Inſtitution, according to Francis Macedo, a Cordelier, 2072. a. Expunges all Praiſes of Hereticks, even of Princes, out of all Books, 1654. a.

Inſcriptions, The Cuſtom of Funeral Inſcriptions in ſome Roman Catholick Countries, 339. b. The Difference between them and Epitaphs, ibid.

Inſtance of the Authority of Pamphlets, 948. a.

Intelligences, The Belief of mediate Intelligences as univerſal as the Belief of a God, 808. a.

Intereſt, Too powerful an Intereſt is often an Obſtacle to Preferment, 566. b.

Intricacies, (incompatible) who abounds with them, 1233. b.

Invention of Fables, To whom to be aſcrib'd, 1232. B. in Tex.

Invention of Divination by Fire, 228. b.

Joan, Queen of Navar, Her heroick Courage in Childbirth, 2340. b.

Her Marriage of Conſcience with a Gentleman of her Court by the Approbation of her Proteſtant Miniſters, to whom ſhe had confeſs'd ſhe cou'd not contain, ſhewn to be without any ground, 1348. a.

Invocation, of Saints, An odd Argument for it, 2385. a.

Condemn'd anciently by the Paulicians, 2485. a.

Joan II Queen of Naples, her refin'd Policy to cover a real Conſpiracy againſt her Husband's Life, 2326. a.

The barbarous Murder of her Husband Andrew, and the ſuppoſed Cauſe of it, 2321. a.

Informations exhibited againſt his Murderers, by Order of Clement VI. 2325.

An eaſie Apology for her Lewdneſs, by Brantome, 2327. b.

Mary Queen of Scots, compared to her in all her Deſtiny, 2323. a.

The way ſhe took to diſcover her Paſſion for Caraccioli Grand Seneſchal of her Kingdom, 851. a.

Joan (Pope) the Scandal taken at Blondel's Book proving her Hiſtory a Fable, 636. a.

Some Circumſtances concerning this Book, 637. b.

Said to be an Engliſh Woman, and call'd Johannes de Anglis, 1339. b.

John (King of France) his being taken Priſoner fairly propheſied, 2601. b.

John (Prophet) a French Popiſh Fanatick how he extricated himſelf from a conſiderable Difficulty alledg'd by the Queen of Poland againſt the Truth of his Propheſies, 2171. a.

John (St.) the Evangeliſt, why drawn by the Painters with a Cup in his Hand, 1764. b.

Jon (Denys du) Father of Francis Junius, his tragical End at Iſſodun in France, 1804. b.

Jordan (St.) chides a Monk for touching a Woman's Hand, and anſwers his Excuſe, 1328. a.

Joſeph, The Husband of the bleſſed Virgin, ſaid to have had the Gift of INFRIGIDATION, the meaning of this, 699. a.

Why reckon'd a Martyr by Carthagena a Cordelier, 896. b.

Joſephus, cenſured on his making the Invention of Weights, Meaſures and Landmarks, a Proof of a knaviſh Heart, 806. a.

Seems affectedly to vary from the Scripture Accounts, 29. b.

Wrongfully quoted by Photius, 273. b.

Oppoſes and contradicts Moſes, 30. a.

Cenſured on his abſurd Opinions about the Serpent that tempted Eve, 1250. b.

His Teſtimony concerning Antipater, Father of Herod preferr'd to that of Euſebius and Africanus, 273. b.

Falſly ſaid to repreſent the Sadducees as an immoral, wicked Generation, 2643. b.

Jovian, The Chriſtians and the Heathens ſtrive, the former to juſtify, the latter to run him down on occaſion of his diſhonourble Peace with the Perſians, 1775. b.

Would not accept the Empire till he had declar'd himſelf a Chriſtian, and the Soldiers had declar'd that they were Chriſtians, 1766. a.

Said to be the firſt who gave away an Inch of Ground from the Roman Empire, 1554. a.

Jovius (Paul) confuted as to what he delivers of Cornelius Agrippa's Magick 120. a.

His hint of a famous Paraſite, 965. a.

Iphicrates, The Reaſon his Son gave, why he lov'd his Mother better than his Father, 1025. b.

Irreligion, The Opinion of the Motion of the Earth round about the Sun, conſtrued Irreligion among the ancient Greeks, 348. b.

Vol. II. 801. Iſauricus (Leo) forges a Letter from John Damaſcen, and ſends it to the Caliph of Damaſcus with a Deſign to deſtroy him, 1044. a.

Vol. III 1551.

Vol. IV. 2439. Iſabella, Queen of Hungary, treated with great Reſpect, by Solyman the Magnificent, 1728. a. b.

Iſhmael, A Figure of Modern Controverſiſts, 97. b. A difficulty raiſed upon Hagar's carrying him away upon her Back, when turn'd away by Sarah, he being then 16 Years old, 98. a.

Iſland, When firſt inhabited, 1677. b. Shewn not to be the Thule of the Antients, ibid.

Iſraelites, Their going away with the Jewels and Rings of the Egyptians, how juſtifiable, 2077. a.

Iſrael, (Manaſſeh ben) his Curſe on Hadrian, 501. a.

Italian Muſick, A Diſcourſe on it written by Monſieur Maugars, 510. b. n.

Italians, What they meant by è motto canonicamente, 192. a. Some Learned Italians have a mighty averſion to ſpeaking of Latin, 2406. a.

Italy, The French are driven out of it, 1906. I.

Jubilee, An Evangelical Jubilee celebrated in Heidelburg in 1617. for the deliverance from Popery a Hundred Years before, 245. b.

Judea, Felix does not go into Judea till after Cumanus's Condemnation, 1128. B.

Judges, Severe Judges, why call'd Judices Caſſiani by the Roman Authors 876. a.

Judith's Example, an encouragement to Regicides, 1785. a.

Julia, Wife of the Emperor Severus, the Anſwer of a Britiſh Lady, when tax'd by her of lying with her Gallants without the leaſt precaution, 1796. b.

Julia, Wife of one Mark Antony, and Mother to another, who was Triumvir, her great Courage and Reſolution, 276. b.

Julius II. A bitter Enemy to France, 1790. a. Wherein he reſembled Julius Cæſar, and wherein St. Peter, 1792. a.

Jupiter, threatned with being ſent home to Greece, 811. b.
   Plutarch of Opinion, That Jupiter ſhould rather be defective in point of Power than of Goodneſs, 2491. b.
   His Oracle not ſo infallible, as that of Apollo, 105. a.

Jurieu, The Conſequences of his Poſition, That the Faithful diſcern the Truth, not from evident Proofs, but Proof of Sentiments; not by diſtinct Ideas, but a kind of Taſte, 2373. a. b.
   He overthrows all that Luther and Calvin had built, and makes the Proteſtant Churches ſchiſmatical, 2374. a. b.
   Severely chaſtiz'd for his Legendary Gloſſes to expoſe a Popiſh Legend, 2188. a.
   Cenſur'd on a Conceſſion that looks very odd from him, 1310. b.

Juſtice, The Rule and Meaſure of Juſtice in Lacedæmon, 103. a.

Juſtin, no exact Abridger, 57. a. Criticis'd on his mentioning a Tranſaction as happning in Cappadocia, which paſs'd in Iſaurus in Piſidia, 845. a. And on his Reaſonings upon the Motives of Laodice's Cruelty, the Wife of Ariathes King of Cappadocia, 849. b. Guilty of a great Error about the Affairs of Athens, 1019. b. His want of Exactneſs not to be excuſ'd by ſaying he only abridg'd another Hiſtory 1021. a.

Juſtinian, His Code when firſt read in the Schools, 1777, 1778. in Tex.

K E.

KEmpis (Thomas a) by whom tranſlated into Arabick, 1417. a.

Keys, St. Peter's Keys thrown into the Tyber, 1788. a.

Kiſſes, of Lovers diſtinguiſhable, tho' in diſguiſe, 621. a. n.
   Reflections on the Cuſtom of Kiſſing, when Perſons Salute, 2524. b.
   The raſhneſs of Kiſſing a fine Face, to what compared by Socrates, ibid.
   One Kiſs given by a Maid after Contract, entitles her to half her Joynture by the Law of Naples, if the Man dyes before conſummation, 2525. a.

Kircher, (Father) The ſame Invention owing juſtly to him and to Father Maignan at one and the ſame time, 2124. a.

Kings, The common Executioners in Sparta would not obey the Order of putting their Kings to Death, 213. b.
   The Meſſenians were not allow'd to ſay, that Ariſtodemus kill'd Theopompus, but only that he wounded him, ibid.
   Aſſerting Kings to be only Magiſtrates, tends to diſſolve the bonds of Civil Society, 187. a. The Judgment of ſome eminent Civilians in this Caſe, ibid.
   Aſſaſſines encouraged to attempt upon their Lives by the Example of Judith, 1785. a.
   Hugonot Miniſters Enemies to Kings, a Calumny, 689. a.
   Not Tyranny, ſo often as Gentleneſs drives 'em from their Crown, 694. b.
   More Kings depos'd for being too good, than too wicked, 213. b.
   The difference between their Reſentments and that of private Gentlemen, 1427. b.
   Almoſt always forced to cringe in their Differences with the Pope, 1788. b.
   More ruin'd by Condeſcenſion and Good-nature, than by Tyranny and Iniquity, 1156. a.
   The Power of the People in France over their Kings alternatively maintain'd both by the Proteſtants and Papiſts, 1719. a.
   The Services which are above their acknowledgment render them ungrateful, 1154. b.
   In good Policy no King ſhould favour the Rebellion of another King's Subjects, 886. a.
   No Converſation ſo dangerous to Men of Learning, as that of Kings that are given to Learning, 897. b.
   The Power of Kings irreſiſtible when joyned with that of an Eccleſiaſtical Party, 111. a.
   An ill Maxim among them, To reward Rebellious, and neglect their Faithful Subjects, 944. a
   Their Gentleneſs more prejudicial to the State, than Severity and Rigour, 1620. b.
   More at a loſs what to do with their Horns than meaner Folk, 2355. a.
   No Hiſtorian can be ſincere who writes of a King, during his own or his Son's Life-time, 2474. a.
   What the Religion of a King is, 103. a. 103. b.
   The difference between the Religion of a King as a private Man, and as a Prince, 946. b.
   Grotius cenſured by a Calviniſt Miniſter for not ſpeaking cautiouſly enough of the Right of Kings, nor carrying the Prerogative of the Monarchy high enough, 2173. b.

Knights, The Cuſtom of ſtriking Perſons gently when they are Knighted, probably comes from a Practice of the ancient Romans in the Enfranchiſing their Slaves, 694. a.
   The Order diſhonour'd in Rome two ways, 1892, 1893. F.

Knowledge, Human and Divine, when they may be ſaid to differ eſſentially, ibid.

L A.

LAbadie (Mr.) a Fanatick Anabaptiſt Miniſter, his Proof of the Spiritual Perfection of a young Laſs under his Direction, 2145. b.
Labadiſts, Three Preſages promiſing them a long and glorious Settlement, and yet they ſoon came to nothing, 956. b.
Labienus, The firſt Man in Rome, whoſe Satyrical Republican Pamphlets were burn'd, 883. a.
Lacedæmon, the Honour of being a Citizen of Lacedæmon, and of ſpeaking Greek according to the Poet Alcmæon, 163. a.
Lacedæmonians, reputed the beſt of Husbands, 106. b. Their Rule in Drinking, 1037. b.
Lactantius, perfectly a Maſter of Cicero, 177. a. A Correction in his Text by Thomaſius, proved to be a falſe and wrong Correction, ibid. His Arguments deſign'd to overthrow all Philoſophy, Examin'd and Anſwer'd, 319. a. b. Puts no difference between Men and Brutes, but the ſenſe of Religion, 1606. b. His Solution of the Origin of Evil not only Weak, but Erroneous and Heretical, 2486. a. Shews the Heathens had no Notion of Juſtice, and that Carneades might eaſily have refuted what they could offer in behalf of it, 862. b. His raillery on Jupiter's ceaſing to get Children, 1647. b. His miſtake, with regard to the Original of the Floral Games, 1319.
Ladies (French) a Satyrical Deſcription of their Naked Breaſts in the XVIth Century, 1050. a.
Ladies (Roman) what Sacrifices they made to Fortune, 1725. a. Privileges of Phyſicians with the Ladies, 311. b.
Laertius (Diogenes) miſtaken as to the firſt Introducer of the occaſion of Diſputing Pro and Con, 317. b.
Lais, a Paſſage between her and Apelles, 287. a.
Laius, The firſt that is ſaid to be guilty of Pederaſty, 972. b.
Lambert (Biſhop of Liege) Murder'd by Alpaide's inſtigation, Concubine to Pepin, 185. His brave Chriſtian indignation againſt her at Pepin's own Table, ibid. b.
Lami (Pere) his Judgment of Alſtedius's Encyclopædia, 186. a.
Lami (Sieur) a Sage Paſſage of his in a Lecture of Anatomy, 894. a.
Lampridius, what he ſays of Hardrian's Building Temples to Chriſt, rejected as a Fable, 1557. a.
Landsberg, why its Magiſtrates Prohibited the buying of Beer from the Jeſuites, 1746. a.
Language, whence proceeds the Obſcurity of the French Language, 713. b. The Care and Methods of the Romans to make their Language Univerſal, 995. b. 996. a. What Language our Bleſſed Saviour uſed ordinarily, 996. a. Various Characters of the Principal Living Languages of Europe, 943. b. Do not ſupply words enough to preſerve from Equivocation, or prevent Cavils, 1052. a. Language of Perſia, much improv'd by the Care of the King thereof, 1418. a. The difference between the Language of an Orator and that of an Hiſtorian, 1016. b.
Languiſhing Converſation, a knack of reviving it, 539. An inſtance of it, ibid.
Laſciviouſneſs, the Danger of only ſeeing Laſcivious Embraces exemplified in a Hermit, who let fall his Breviary out of his Hand at the ſudden Sight of the fond Brandimart and Fleurdelis, 1327. a.
Latin. The Averſeneſs of ſome Learned Italians to the ſpeaking of Latin, 2406. a. The Obſcurity of moſt Authors, who write in the Latin Tongue, 173. b. When Aboliſh'd in France in all publick Acts, 1356. b. When it began to gain ground clearly of the Greek, 996. a. An Attempt made by the Royal Profeſſors in the Univerſity of Paris, towards a Reform in the Pronunciation of Latin, 2551. G.
Laud, his Library at Lambeth plunder'd by Hugh Peters; who was ſuppos'd to have made away with Cambden's Papers, 832. b.
Law, a Law made for the reſtraining the exceſſive Expence of Feaſting, 261. a.
A Law in Athens, againſt the Study of Phyſick by Women or Slaves in Athens, 1665. a. A memorable Caſe occaſion'd by Repealing this Law, ibid. b.
Laws, compar'd to Bread and Eggs, 177. b. When and under what Emperor, put into the German Tongue, 1357. a.
Laws made againſt Polygamy, ſaid to hinder the Converſion of the Infidels, 2120. b.
Law of Athens, whereby Criminals were to execute themſelves by a Poiſon'd Draught, abrogated by Chriſtianity, 2180. a.
Law in Rome to Expel Rhetoricians, 1278.
Law (Civil) but three Schools allow'd for it in the whole Roman Empire, one at Rome, one at Conſtantinople, and one at Berytus in Phœnicia, and Eight Profeſſors, 594. b.
Law (Roman) when reſtor'd, and under what Emperor, after an intermiſſion of 500 Years, 1778. a. Doctors in Law, when firſt made, ibid. Civil or Roman Law when firſt Re-eſtabliſh'd and by whom, after the Incurſions of the Barbarians in Europe, 1777. 1778. A. and C.
Lawyers, Their Right, with regard to the Liberty of contradicting themſelves, according to Cicero, 277. b.
Leſpe, of Mornac and Mombriſſon, the meaning of it, 540. a. b.
Learned, a Reflection upon the Poſterity of Learned Men, 1401. B. Several Learned Men of Opinion that Minerals are produced by Intelligent and Spiritual Beings, 2714. b. Montagu's compaſſion for the hard Fate of Learned Men, 891. a. Oſtentation, how Indecent to Learned Men, 868. b. Learned Princes, their Converſation dangerous to Learned Men, 897. b.
Learning, no remedy againſt the Abſurdities in Religion, 2684. the true Picture of a Pretender to Learning, 193. b. A Reflection on the obſcure condition of the Deſcendants of the moſt famous Perſons in the Commonwealth of Learning, 1401. a. The Learning of Aſſyria miſtaken by Pliny, 460. a.
Lebniz (Mr.) His Hypotheſis, and that of other Moderns, That the Soul with the perfectly form'd Body of all Animals were created in the Beginning, and that Generation is only the extenſion of the Individuum occaſionally Explain'd, 2712. a. A Curious Fragment of his, concerning the Soul of Animals, and the Primitive Subject to which they are united, 2611. b. his Syſtem of the Pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony between the Soul and Body of Animals examin'd and diſcuſs'd, 2612. a. b.
Legate, The Blunder of a Legate at the Council of Soiſſons, 585. b.
Leith, The Scotch force the French to Capitulate at Leith, and for ever to quit it, 722. in Tex. ad fin.
Lela, a Name given to the Bleſſed Virgin, by the Turks, 1287. b.
Lemnos, Why the Women of Lemnos Maſſacred their Husbands, 1676. a.
Lent, does not begin at Milan 'till four Days after Aſhwedneſday, Diſſert. xxxvi. A Book concerning the Reaſons for Aboliſhing Lent: Written by the Duke of Alva's Orders, 1508.
Lent-Biſhops, who ſo Nick-nam'd, and why, 540. a.
Leo I. His extraordinary Vigilance and Care to extirpate the Manichæans, 2153. a.
Leo X. Calls the Bleſſed Virgin Goddeſs in one of his Epiſtles, 571. b.
Leo, an African, born at Granada in Spain; the Advantage he had by having a Claim to either Country, 560. a.
Leo X. the firſt Pope who threatned to Excommunicate thoſe who read Prohibited Books, 2081. a. Appear'd publickly at a Play after he was Pope, and Aſſiſted at the Conferences of the Poets of his time, 2078. b. When Cardinal de Medicis, he uſed to divert himſelf with the Quarrels and Jealouſies between the Learned, and took delight in Diſquieting one Rival by Protecting the other, 161. a. Was made a Cardinal at the Age of Fifteen, 692. a.
Leo, The Hebrew, his Syſtem of Maſculine and Feminine, compounding Parts in every Man and Woman, and his Allegoriſing the Sacred Text about Adam and Eve, 1255. a. b.
Leontium the Courtezan, her Complaints of Epicurus in his old Age, 1191. b. ſaid to be Suppoſititious, ibid.
Leproſy, how derived to the Children of Catharine de Medicis, 1295. b. n.
Leridano, a Nobleman of Venice, his Book of the Life of Adam, how Scandalous and Blaſphemous, 1256. b.
Lesbia, why ſo called by Catullus, 913. her true Name, ibid.
Letters of Compliment, not over-ſcrupulouſly bound to Hiſtorical Truth, 2117. a.
Letters (Provincial) of Mr. Paſcal, their Elogy, 2469. a. ſeveral Facts concerning them, 2470. a. b. Which are reputed the beſt Letters for the uſe of young Perſons of Quality, 621. a.
Lettice, an Enemy to conjugal Duty, 92. a.
Leviſton (Madam) a Scotch young Lady, her Behaviour upon finding her ſelf with Child by Henry II. of France, 1619. b.
Lewdneſs, the Lewdeſt Perſons have ſometimes a ſenſe of Modeſty in their moſt diſſolute Actions, 2404. b.
Lewis XI. The 50000 Crowns a Year which he paid to Edward IV. call'd by the French a Penſion, and by the Engliſh a Tribute, 1157. a. His Cowardice, and Dread of Edward, ibid. b.

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1551. Vol. IV. 1459.

Lewis XII. a generous Saying of his after he came to be King, 558. b. Gives the Place to Jaſon Mainus, a famous Profeſſor at Paris, 1158. b. Compar'd for it to Pompey the Great, ibid. ſuppoſed to have kill'd himſelf with the Embraces of his young Engliſh Queen, 1158. a. The ſame Queen attempted to have impoſed a Suppoſititious Child upon him, 1340. a.

Lewis XIII. Inſtances of his Love and Reſpect, and extravagant Jealouſie, with regard to the ſame Lady, 1589. b. What he ſaid to Cardinal Richlieu the Day that Mareſchal d'Ancre was Aſſaſſinated, 1015. b.

Lewis XIV. His Letter to the Conclave upon the Death of Innocent XI. 1758. His pretended Letter from the Camp before Ipres to Mr. Renaud, 1777. a. A Hint of his has more power over the Ladies than all the Sermons of his Clergy, 1017. a. A Prediction, by which he was to be General of the 144000 ſealed Perſons in the Revelations, 2169. b.

Leyden, a remarkable Judgment of the Divines of Leyden, upon the Difference between Altingius and Mareſius, 191.

Libels; the common and only Preſumption for the Truth of ancient Libels of no force, 268. b. Auguſtus was the firſt who ordered Perſons to be proſecuted for Libels upon the Law de Majeſtate, 881. b.

Liberality, called Squandring, by Plutarch, 177. b.

Liberty; a Queſtion about the Liberty of brute Beaſts, 1609. b. Puniſhing Malefactors an Argument for the Liberty of Man, ibid. The hanging Wolves from Gibbets, as they do in Germany, and crucifying Lions to deter others, as they do in Africa, an Argument for the Liberty of brute Beaſts, 1610. a. It is an inſupportable State to ſome Nations, 846. a.

Library. An Emulation between the Kings of Ægypt and Pergamum, which ſhould have the beſt furniſh'd Library, 1511. b. That of Alexandria ancienter than that of Pergamum, ibid. A Paſſage relating to the Hiſtory of Libraries, 671. b. A Library erected by Auguſtus's Order in one of the Temples of Rome, 1281. a. A great fault of Library-keepers, 1619. a. Which have been the moſt famous Libraries, 1521. a.

Life; the deſire of living in Perſons infirm and impotent, a Scandal on human Nature, 96. b. More ſhameful among the Romans than now, ibid. The ſolemn Profeſſion of an old Man, who in all outward appearance had been happy, that he would not, if in his power, live over his Life again, 2933. b. 2934. a. The Miſeries of human Life, an indiſpenſable Topick of Conſolation in certain Caſes, 1028. a. A Diſpute between two Beggars, wherein conſiſts the greateſt Pleaſure of Life, 2895. b.

Lilly, blows miraculouſly in Charles the Vth's Garden the Night he died, 950. b.

Limbo, an account of the ſeveral Limbo's, according to the Roman Catholicks, 1477. b.

Lincopen, the way of chuſing Huſbands there, 641. b.

Lipſius (Juſtus) his Attempt to clear Chryſippus from making God the Author of Sin is vain, 978. a. His Advice to young Men concerning a Stile in Writing, 48. a. his Elogies on a Book or Pleading of Sebaſtian Rouillard, a Lawyer, proving that a Man without any viſible Teſticles may be capable of Matrimonial Duty, 2530. b. He and Strada criticize Cornelius Tacitus, on a point of Roman Hiſtory, 837. a.

Livy; how much ſold for before the uſe of Printing, 2451. b. Contradicts himſelf in ſpeaking of Alexander the Great's coming into Italy, 2077. a. Gives a Character of the Populace, 1678. a.

Loadſtone; inſtances of ſeveral ancient Temples, in which Statues have been ſuſpended in the Air by Loadſtones, 2105. b.

Loans by Henry VIII. in Germany, at 12 per Cent. 1621. b. How miſchievous to France, ibid.

Logicians; very inaccurate in their Stile of old, 980. b. Compared to Penelope, 981. b.

Longinus, his Contempt of the Philoſophers of his Time, 198. A Criticiſm of his criticiz'd, 2836. a.

Looking-glaſſes; the making uſe of them a great Reproach, eſpecially upon Scholars and Philoſophers in the ſecond Century, 305. b.

Lorrain; Princes of the Houſe of Lorrain compared to Neapolitan Horſes, 850. b.

Lorrain (Cardinal of) would expoſe Popery to ſome hazards, rather than loſe the Opportunity of ſhewing his Eloquence, 96. a.

Lotos; the Lotos Flower, why called Antinoian, 272. a.

Love; whether Men or Women are fitteſt to make the Attack in Love, 2660. b. The Original of Love according to Plato, 80. a. Unnatural Love not Criminal among the Lacedæmonians, 106. b. The Knowledge of great Imperfections may hinder its growth, but the greateſt cannot ſmother it when it has taken ſtrength, 1009. b. Who was the firſt that introduced the Cuſtom of ſinging Love-Songs in Company, 165. Verbal Declaration of it to a Woman of Quality, 851. a. Deſtroys all Sentiments of Gratitude and Generoſity, 869. a. Love-Verſes not ſo prevalent now as in former times, 1601. b. They ſtifle the Sentiments of Conſcience ſoon, but rarely thoſe of Honour, 1602. b. An extraordinary Inſtance of the Power and Triumph of Love, 1413. a. Said to be a Plank after Shipwreck, 1296. b. An extraordinary Inſtance of its Power and phyſical Vertue, 1277. a.

Lovers, why they are forgiven falſe Oaths, according to Plato, 1341. b. Their Cuſtom of Biting frequently mention'd in the ancient Poets, 1320. b. The Hiſtory of a Huſband and Wife, who had been always called the two Lovers, 1605. b. 1606. a. Their Kiſſes diſtinguiſhable, though in a Diſguiſe, 631. a. n.

Low-Countries; reaſonable Offers made to them by Spain, 1374. a. Why rejected by the Prince of Orange, ibid.

Lucian, a groſs Error of his in relating the Occaſion of Apelles's fine Picture of Calumny, 287. a. No Conduct ſecure againſt his Banter, 713. a. Cenſur'd on his not believing Phædra and Sthenobœa capable of accuſing their beloved Bellerophon and Hippolitus, as the Story ſays, 1009. a.

Lucretius, his invoking Venus in the beginning of his Poem acknowledges a Providence, and overthrows the Doctrine of Epicurus about the unconcerned State of the Gods, 1192. b.

Luſtre, ſtifling the Luſtre of ſome Perſons ſerves only to raiſe it, a fine Example of this, 690. b.

Luther (Martin) a great Enemy to Ariſtotle and his Philoſophy, 366. b. A Saying in his Book de Chriſtiana Libertate, the innocent Occaſion of the Sect of the Anabaptiſts, 239. His firſt Conference with the four Heads of Anabaptiſm, in which he is curſed by them, 681. b. What moved him to Marry, when he heard 'twould make every Body and even the Devil himſelf laugh, was that he was reſolved to ſpite the World and the Devil, 675. a. Much dejected at his Marriage in the beginning, ibid. The fierceſt of all his Books was that which he wrote ſoon after his Marriage, againſt Eraſmus, ibid. b. How it might be ſaid there was ſomething Divine in his Marriage, 675. b. His Quarrel with John Agricola, 112. How dear his Reputation in Saxony, ibid. Reputed a Hero by ſome eminent Catholicks, 119. a. A Prophecy concerning him by a Cordelier ſeveral Years before his appearing on the Stage, 1668. a. His Verſion of the Bible ſaid to be naught, 1131. D. Whether the Pope's making Martin Luther magnificent Promiſes by his Nuncio, in caſe he would ſubmit, be true in fact, 1948. a. b. The Expreſſion of Forbes concerning him and Calvin, 1332. a. James Hockſtrat the Dominican's Writing againſt Luthur did him no Diſſervice, 1684. a.

Lutheraniſm; the Schiſms in it for the firſt fifty Years not above ten or twelve, 1751. b.

Lutherans, their Reconciliation with the Calviniſts by the Influence of Guſtavus Adolphus, by whom fruſtrated, 1685. b. They refuſe Chriſtian Burial to thoſe they look on as Hereticks, 111. b. Refuſed to Communicate with the Church of Ireland, 553. a. Why the Attempts of reconciling them and the Calviniſts have always been ineffectual, and why 'tis probable they ever will, 1723. a. A Conference ſet on foot at Ratiſbonne, for the reuniting them and the Papiſts, by whom, and how it ended, 173. b.

Luxury of the Romans in watering their Plane-trees with Wine, 1695. a.

Luz, a ſmall Bone in the Spinal Marrow, according to the Jews, which is the Principle of the Reſurrection, 500. b.

Lycurgus, when he publiſh'd his Laws, 1010.

Lyes, none ſo abſurd but will be handed down from Generation to Generation, 840. b.

Lying-in, a ridiculous Cuſtom of Mens Lying-in inſtead of their Wives in ſome Countries, 2880. a.

Lyons, the Opinion of the antient Naturaliſts, that Lyons have no Marrow in their Bones, contradicted by Anatomical Experience, 57. b. The Carthaginians condemn'd Hanno as a dangerous Man to the publick Liberty, becauſe he tam'd a Lyon, 1579. b. Lyons crucified in Africa to deter others, an Argument for the Liberty of Brute Beaſts, 2610. a.

Lyons (Bank of) by whom firſt ſet up, and at what Intereſt, 1621. b.

Lyre; the difference between the Lyre of Achilles and that of Paris, 636.

Lyſimachus, odd Preſages of his attaining to the Royal Dignity, 348. a.

M A.

MAbillon, P. cenſured on his favourable Judgment of Epiſcopius's Work, 1265. b.

Macedon (Philip, King of) diſmiſſes all Alexander's Confidents upon their giving him a Jealouſie of his Intentions, 58. b.

Macedonius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, how he purged himſelf of Incontinency in a Council of Biſhops, 1665. b. n.

Machiavel, his writing of the military Art compared to a Philoſopher's writing a Book of Hunting, 557. b.

Macriani, a Family in Rome, the Men and Women whereof had a particular Superſtition for Alexander the Great, and had his Head engrav'd on all their Plate, Rings, Bracelets, &c. 2076. a.

Madneſs, a Remedy for Madneſs preſcribed to the Emperor Hadrian by an Oracle, 259. a. Affected by ſeveral great Perſons in Caſes of Danger or deep Deſign, 328. b. This Circumſtance not to be omitted by an Hiſtorian though ever ſo conciſe, ibid.

Maffei (Pere) why he always ſaid his Breviary in Greek, 2406. a.

Magdalen (Mary) her Body removed from Aix to Vezelai upon the Irruption of the Saracens, 1249 b. The Riſe and Progreſs of a great Controverſie upon the Queſtion, whether Mary, Siſter of Lazarus, the Woman who was a Sinner, Luke 7. and ſhe out of whom ſeven Devils were caſt, be one and the ſame Perſon, 1314. b.

Magicians; the difference between them and Sorcerers, 1907. a.

Magick; none have leſs Right to reject it than thoſe who deny the Exiſtence of a God, 1681. a. Noble Youths ſacrificed in the Days of Hadrian and Heliogabulus, that their Entrails might be inſpected by Magicians and Diviners, 272. a. A Magick Ceremony of ſacrificing a wild Bull in Rome for ſtopping a Plague in Hadrian the IVth's Pontificate, 1563. a.

Magiſtrates; it does not become 'em to make uſe of the falſe Colours of Rhetoricians, when the Queſtion is about a Fact expoſed to daily Experience, 909. b. Superior Magiſtrates among the Romans, were not to be impeached by their Subalterns, 149. a. Whether the Magiſtrates have Power to puniſh People for the Sin of Fornication, 176. ΔΔΔΔ. Magiſtrates of Landsberg, why they prohibited the buying of Beer from the Jeſuits, 1746. a.

Magyrus (the Jeſuit) and David Pareus, treat each other with very civil Titles, 2458. a.

Mahomet, the Teſtament or Concordat between the Chriſtians and him ſhewn to be a Forgery, 2103. b. His Vigour as to Women, 2100. b. His Rageo for fortifying the Reins, 2108. b.

Mahomet II. Monuments of his Greatneſs erected by the Chriſtians, 2113. a. His Daughter Fatima, her Titles, and the Prayers addreſſed to her, 1288. a. Great Rejoicings at Rome upon his Death, 2113. b. The Letter which Pope Pius the IId. wrote to Mahomet the IId. condemned by the Proteſtants, and juſtified by the Catholick Authors, 2110. & ſeq.

Mahometaniſm; the Differences between it and Paganiſm, as to the Original of both, 681. a.

Mahometans recommended themſelves to the Prayers of their Saint Fatima, and at the ſame time make Wiſhes for her, 1287. b. Leſs rigorous to the Chriſtians than thoſe to Hereticks, 2362. a. Their great regard for Ariſtotle, 364 a.

Maid of Orleans; by what Hiſtorians own'd to have been a Counterfeit, 1570. b. m. By whom tutor'd, and taught her Leſſon, 1571. a.

Maidenheads reſtored by bathing in the Fountain Canathus, 1815. a. Ways among the Ancients of diſcovering whether a Girl had loſt her Maidenhead, 1078.

Maignan (Father), the ſame Invention owing juſtly to him and Father Kircker, at one and the ſame time, 2124 a.

Maille (Jaquelin de) an extraordinary Paſſage concerning him in a Battel with the Sarazens, 715. a.

Maimonides; the Honour and Glory of the Jewiſh Nation, 79. b. Allows Beaſts to have Reaſon, and a kind of Free-will, 2606. b. The Conſequences of this Opinion, ibid.

Mainbourg; the Overtures which he pretends were made by King John towards a Reconciliation of Sweden to the Church of Rome ſuppoſititious, 1388. b. An Artifice of his to diſguiſe his Plagiariſm, 1654. b. His Malice in ſaying that Catharine de Bore, Martin Luther's Wife, was very handſome, 674. a.

Maintenon (Madam) how pretended to be deſcended from Joan de Albret, Queen of Navarre, 2348. a.

Maldonat, his Charge againſt the Reformed, that rejecting the Doctrine of a real Preſence leads to Atheiſm, anſwered and confuted, 1940. a.

Malebranch (Pere) his Argument to ſhew that we could not know what Matter is if it were uncreated, 1198. b. His Doctrine concerning our Ideas only a reviving of ſome Objections of Porphiry againſt his Maſter Plotinus, 198.

Malefactors; the puniſhing Malefactors, one of the beſt Arguments for the Liberty of Man, 2609. b.

Malherbe called a Court Pedagogue by Balzac, on account of his Nicety and exact Periods, 2145. a. A Reflection of his on Cain's killing his Brother, 206. b.

Malice; a great Inſtance of it in Cardinal Richlieu, who makes a falſe Quotation to fix a horrible Slander on Beza, 618. b.

Mamre; Oak of Mamre, under which Abraham uſed to ſit; how long it ſtood, 36. b.

Mamonis, his exalted Idea of the Divinity, 1681. a.

Man; the Age of Man according to Heſiod, 1578. a. The Proportion he makes between it and that of ſeveral other mortal Natures, ibid. His Condition alone affords the greateſt Objection to the Manicheans againſt the Unity of God, 2151. a.

Manes, Founder of the Sect of the Manicheans; his Quality and deſervedly Tragical End, 2147. b. Had like to have been killed by the People, while he diſputed publickly with Archelaus, a Biſhop, 2166. a.

Manicheans grow mighty powerful under the Name of Paulicians, and by what Means, 2484. A terrible Slaughter of them, 2485. a. Their Tenet of two diſtinct Principles, whereby they account for the Origin of Evil, not to be refuted by any Arguments, a Priori, 2486. a. Why a Manichean at this Day would be a more terrible Adverſary than in former Times, 2490. a. From whom they borrowed their Tenet of two Principles, one of Good, the other of Evil, 344. Where their Hereſie has at this time the greateſt footing, 2485. a.

Mankind eaſily deceived, and difficultly undeceived in Religion, 96. a.

Manners; an Affectation of the Manners of foreign Countries leads to Ridicule, 150. b.

Mar; a Title of Honour among the Eaſtern People, like Mr. or Monſieur among us, 29. b.

Marble-Table, a kind of a Bar, at which the Princes of the Blood of France uſed to be tried, 766. b. The Dauphin called to it, and Sentence of Baniſhment and Excluſion paſt upon him, ibid.

Marble, Arundelian Marbles, how brought into England, 2698. a. b.

Marca (Peter de la) Archbiſhop of Tholouſe, a Manuſcript of his committed to the Abbot Faget, and publiſhed by him, ſhews he did not differ from the Proteſtants in the Doctrine of the Euchariſt, 2158. b.

Marcus Fabricius, a Proteſtant Profeſſor of Heidelburgh, maintains the Uſefulneſs of Plays, 2320. b.

Mares, their exceſſive Heat, Diſſert. xxix.

Marceſius, a Hugenot Miniſter; his capitulating with Altingius at the Point of Death, about a form of Reconciliation, 191. b. what he got by putting in his Oar among the Janſeniſts and Jeſuits, 2176. a.

Margaret, Queen of Navarre, receives a Box no the Ear from the King her Husband for having heard ſome new form of Prayers from the Hugonot Miniſters in her Chambers, 2337. a. Her Curioſity to have a ſenſible Demonſtration of the Separation of the Soul from the Body, ibid a. Her extraordinary Beauty, 2104 b. She outdoes Katharine de Medicis at her own Weapon, 1636. b. Her Maids of Honour fool thoſe of Katharine de Medicis, ibid.

Margaret of Valois, Siſter of Charles the IXth. and Queen of Navarre, compared her childiſh Actions with thoſe of Alcibiades and Alexander the Great, 2349. a. Her Affectation, when asked by her Mother, whether the King her Husband had conſummated, ibid. Her Brother Charles the IXth, an Oracle, when to wheedle the Hugonots he ſaid he gave his Siſter not only to be a Wife to the King of Navarre, but to all the Hereticks. 2350. a. Does the Office of a Midwife to her Husband's Miſtreſſes, 2351.

Maria Cornelia, Wife of Don John de la Cerda, her Death more heroick and ſingular than that of Portia Cato's Daughter, 1024. b.

Mariana, miſtaken in attributing the Decay of Letters and Learning in Caſtile to Alphonſus's permitting the publick Acts to be drawn up in the vulgar Tongue, 901. a. His Jeſt on Alphonſus, ibid. His wonderful Unconcernedneſs as well at the Cenſures on his Hiſtory of Spain, as at the Apologies made for it, 2179. a. A great Lover of Liberty, and ſevere upon Kings, 2178. b.

Market; Hadrian's Market, where and whence ſo called, 499. b.

Marolles (Abbé de) criticised upon his Translation of Filium cognovit, 811. a.

Vol. II. 801. Marot's Psalms relished by Francis I. 2819. M. ad in. 1007. O. ad med.

Vol. III. 1551. Marriage (The) Contract between Henry IV. of France, and one of his Mistresses torn by Mr. de Rosni before the King's Face, 2910. b.

Vol. IV. 1459. Marriages; how a Minister that has liv'd in Continence 'till 69, may come to fall in Love, and marry at that Age, 1584. b. The Effects of Reconciliation not found to be so sweet in Marriage as Gallantry, 190. b. Its Inconveniences, a Motive of renouncing it unworthy a spiritualiz'd Soul, 698. a. A warning to old Men not to marry young Women, 2146. b. Marrying a Mistress that one has debauched to save her Reputation, is but skinning over the Wound, 987. a. A Reparation of Honour as to the Magistrate, but not as to the World, ibid. The Laws of Athens allowed of Marriages between Brother and Sister on the Father's Side, 986. a. The difference between Solon and Lycurgus upon the point of Marriage, ibid. b. The degrees prohibited in Athens and Lacedæmon, 2674. a. Whether Women are obliged before-hand to acquaint those they are designed to Marry with any bodily Imperfections they may have, 2725. a. The Complaint of Luigi-Groto upon the hard Terms of Marriage, compared with other Bargains, 2726. a. why Recommended to the Clergy by the Visitors in the beginning of the Reformation, 741. a. Marriage makes a sensible alteration in the Voice of Preachers the first Year, 1085. C.

Marrow; the Opinion of the Antient Naturalists, that Lyons have no Marrow in their Bones, contradicted by Anatomical Experience, 57. b.

Marsilius Ficinius; his appearing after Death to Michael Mercalus according to Promise, and attesting a future State, 668. b.

Martial; by whom castrated for the use of Youth, 2730. b.

Martin (St.) a remarkable Trial of Skill between him and St. Germain, 843. b.

Martyr; why the Blood of the Roman Catholick Martyrs in Japan shou'd have no such increase as in the Primitive Times, 1741. b.

Martyrologies, tho' unskilfully Written, wound Tyrants deeper than the sharpest Satyrs, 1281. b. Some Persons who were Anabaptists have found a place in the Martyrology of Geneva, 241. b. Two Martyrologies of the Anabaptists, and each criticis'd by the opposite Sects among them, 241. b. The Origin of the fabulousness of the Popish Martyrologies, 2941. b.

Mary, Queen of Scots, compared to Joan I. of Naples in all her Destiny, 2323. a. Presumptions for the Truth of Cambden's Account of her, in opposition to that of Bucanan, 830. b.

Mary (Virgin) the critical time in addressing Prayers to her, 852. b. The extravagant Honours paid to her by the Roman Catholicks, what they owe their Original to, 1815. a.

Mass; a Mass designed for ending the Difference between the two Religions, 54. The Mass in seven Points a reformed Mass proposed to be introduced by Francis I. of France, 2335. b. What Domitius Calderinus used to say to his Friends when they would make him go to Mass, 809.

Massacre; the reason of the Massacre of the Goats in some part of France, 520. a. b. General Massacre of the Protestants, when and where concerted, 94. b.

Mathematicks; the wonderful Genius of Mr. Pascal for them, 2465. a.

Matrimony; fewer Women commit Matrimony with their Footmen, then Men with their Maids, 1413. a.

Matter; the absurdity of making it capable of thinking, not lessen'd by saying, that this Power is communicated by a special Gift of God, 1827. b.

Maxims and Schemes of Policy form'd by Cardinal Richlieu from Barclay's Argenis, 493. a.

Maxim (A) of Cardinal Richlieu's, that Unfortunate and Imprudent, are but two Words for one and the self same thing, 2897. a. An ill Maxim among Kings, to reward Rebellions, and neglect Faithful Subjects, 944. a.

Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, invited Poets, Grammarians and Rhetoricians to his Court, only to make them beg their way home, 670. a.

Maugars (Monsieur) Author of a Discourse on the Italian Musick, 510. b. n. His great Character of Signiora Leonara Baroni, ibid. b.

Maximilian I. His Expressions against the Popes, 1733. a.

Maximus Tyrius; his Explication of the Origin of Evil, 2495. b. & seq.

Mazarin (Cardinal) a fine Saying of his, 478. a. Reasons of his not answering all the Letters sent to him in the time of his Ministry, 2695. b. The Genealogists derive his Family from the Ancient Roman Consuls T. Geganius Macerinus, Proculus Geganius Macerinus, &c. 2963. a. His great Contempt for them on this Score, ibid.

Mecca; the Grand Signior's Yearly Present to it, 2169. a. The black Stone worshipped there, 98. b. The Cause of its turning black, 99. a.

Medina; the Character of a Priest of the Village of Medina in Spain, during the Rebellion of the Boors, 2442. b.

Medicis; the fabulous Origin of the House of Medicis, as delivered by a most Reverend Prelate of France from the Pulpit, 2666. a.

Medicis (Catherine de) got with Child after a ten Years Barrenness, by the Advice of Fernelius, and how, 1295. b. Was in terrible Frights that she should be divorced on the Score of Barrenness, 1296. b. Outdone at her own Weapons, and her Maids of Honour fool'd by those of the Queen of Navarre, 1636. b. Testimonies of her strong Inclination to become a Calvinist, 2770. a. b. How the Leprosy was derived to her Children, 1295. b. n.

Medicis (John de) afterwards Leo X. was made a Cardinal at 15. 692. a.

Medicis (Lorenzo de) his Generosity to the Learned Hermolaus Barbarus, 490. b.

Medicis (Mary de) wherein compared to Penelope, 2512. b.

Melancton; his Narrative about Castellan's destroying Bigorius with Francis I. by representing him a Republican and Aristotelian, false and groundless, 624. a. Disapproves the Predestination of Luther and Calvin, 2739. a. b. Censures the Divines of Geneva, as if they had introduced the fatality of the Stoicks, 2740. a. His Moderation, 2741. a. Is invited into France by Francis I. 1027. F.

Melquites; a Name of Reproach given to the Catholicks, why and by whom, 2362.

Memnon (General of Darius) his Answer to a Soldier who reviled Alexander, 553. b. n.

Memory, a false Definition of it ascribed to Aristotle, 2518. b. An Instance of a prodigious Memory, 1694. b. Local Memory, by whom first applied and improved, 2734. a.

Menage (Mr.) called the French Varro, 1188. b. Wherein he excelled his Original, ibid. n.

Menagiana; an excellent Lesson out of it for Superannuated Poets, 1065. b.

Menelaus; what disarmed the Cuckold when he was just a going to kill Helena, 1589. b.

Mental Reservation lessened in one of Euripides's Plays, for which he was brought into Trouble, 1268. a.

Merit; superiority of Merit sometimes an obstacle to Preferment, 943. a. In what Cases a high Merit may be a just Bar to one's Preferment, 276. b.

Messenians were not allowed to say that Aristodemus killed Theopompus, but only that he wounded him, 213. b.

Metamorphosis (Ovid's) less absurd than that of the Quietists, 707. a.

Metan; Inventer of the Golden Number, 1580. b.

Metempsychosis; the Belief of it produced a perfect indifference to Life, 1408. a. A Resolution, by whom so called, 41. b.

Mezerai; his Slander of Beza unbecoming a judicious Historian, 614. a. Answers to his own Objection about the Praises Homer bestows on Penelope very ill, 2512. a. He hath such Faults, that if there arose good Censurers, it may be wondered how he ever made himself esteemed, 2236. b. The first Edition of his Chronological Abridgment in 4to. why more valuable than the after Editions corrected by himself, 250. b.

Midwives (Men) first introduced in France, 1666. a.

Milan; the various Changes of its Government and Governors in the space of about seventy Years, 2723. a. b. 2724. b. How it came to the Kings of Spain, ibid.

Millenarians render the Reformed Religion odious to the supreme Powers, 2175. b.

Millennium; supposed to have been presaged by the Conjunction in Sagittarius on the 11th of December, 1662. by Serrius, and other Fanaticks, 2175. b.

Minerals; several Learned Men of Opinion that they are produced by Intelligent or Spiritual Beings, 2614. b.

Minerva; a passionate expostulation of Demosthenes with the Goddess Minerva in the Hour of his Adversity, 2544. b.

Ministers (Hugonot) denied the Title of Pastors, 1304. a. That of Verbi Divini Minister in the Title Pages of their Works, or under their Prints, ended in Paul Ferri, and was never allowed any other Minister after him, 1305. a. Several of them who received Pensions from the Court of France vindicated as to their Honesty, 1310. a.

Miniſter (Eccleſiæ) not uſed as a Title by any before Luther, 1344. a.

Miracles, the Non-converſion of the Places where they have been wrought, no Argument againſt the certainty of their having been wrought in thoſe Places, 1047. a. A Jeſt of the Romiſh Prieſts on the Greek Prieſts, upon a pretended Anniverſary Miracle of the latter, 1163. b. Miracles wrought in the Temple of Venus on Mount Eryce, according to Ælian, 1163. a. An Hypotheſis, ſhewing how certain Miracles may be in Vogue in one Age, and ceaſe in another, 1180. b. Credulity multiplies them, and the multiplying Diſcredits them, 67. a. The Conduct of the Church of Rome, much like that of Paganiſm, on this Head, ibid.

Mirtle, why Sacred to Venus, 1735. b.

Miſery. The Miſeries of Human Life an indiſpenſable Topick of Conſolation in certain Caſes, 1028.

Miſna, from whoſe Writings Compos'd, 138. b.

Miſſal, an Ancient Romiſh Miſſal, publiſh'd by Flavius Illyricus, a Lutheran Divine, makes againſt his Sect, 1749. a. & ſeq.

Miſtreſſes, the Miſtreſſes of Modern Poets never praiſed in Verſe after once they become their Wives, 2682. b. The difference between the Ancient and the Modern Poets in this Point, ibid.

Mneſitheus, The Son of Iphicrates, the Reaſon he gave, why he lov'd his Mother better than his Father, 1035. b.

Mob, The Fury of the Mob againſt an Excommunicated Hugonot Miniſter, 1308. a.

Moderation, how it comes to be miſconſtrued Treachery, and by whom, 1310. a. Moderation in Opinions, its Fate, 565. b. Moderation of the Council of Trent in their condemning of Arius, 368. b.

Modeſty, when once turn'd out of Doors, ſeldom returns again, 699. b. Inſtances of a ſenſe of Modeſty in the Actions of the Lewdeſt and moſt Diſſolute Perſons, 2304. b. A rare Inſtance of Modeſty taken from Bernia, 89. a.

Moliere. His Amphitrion prefer'd to that of Plautus, 221. a.

Monarchs, Not ſo much Idoliz'd by the French as People imagine, 2021. A. The Character of Monarchs above a Jeſt, 2961. a.

Monluc (John de) Biſhop of Valence, his great Character of Calvin, 820. b.

Monpenſier (Dutcheſs de) the Cauſe of her Hatred for Henry III. 1623. a. The movements ſhe gave her ſelf to be reveng'd of him, ibid. Us'd to ſhew the Cizars with which ſhe intended to clip Henry III. when the League deſign'd to thruſt him into a Monaſtry, 812. b. What provok'd her, ibid.

Monk, a Paſſage of an Hermophradite Monk, who got himſelf with Child, 1639. a.

Montagne, his Compaſſion for the hard Fate of Learned Men, 891. a. His Judgment on the old Writers of France, 556. b. Thought the Prieſts ſquare Caps very ridiculous, 689. b. His Reflection on the giving of Peter Aretin the Title of Divine, which no Writer before him had but Plato, 338. b. Cenſures Guicciardine for attributing to ill Motives all the Actions related in his Hiſtory, 1679 a.

Montefabro (Count of) a famous Engineer in the XVIth Century, built the Citadels of Antwerp and Turin, 1439. a. b.

Montmorancy (Anne de) Conſtable of France, could not write his own Name, 558. a.

Montmorancy (Conſtable of) Author of the moſt diſadvantageous Treaty that ever France made, 1613. a. The Reaſons which mov'd him to this, 1617. Why the Head of this Family Style themſelves the firſt Chriſtian Barons, 266. b.

Monuments, pretended publick Monuments confirm Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm, 694. b.

Mony; the defaming Contempt of Mony, a Wile of the Devil, according to St. Chryſoſtome, 225. a. Reckoned by him among God's good Creatures, ibid.

Moon, an Anſwer of the Spirit Floron to Cicchus Æſculanus, about the Spots in the Moon, 984. a. By which of the Ancient Philoſophers believed to be an Inhabited Country, 3094. b. By whom firſt diſcovered to borrow her Light from the Sun. 1407.

Morality, much Stricter even among the Pagans in the 2d Century than in our Days, as to the outward behaviour, 305. b. According to Taſſo, it is not a Poet's Subject, 899. b.

Moriæ Encomium (Eraſmus's) very well receiv'd by the Publick, and eſpecially by Perſons of Quality, 1215. K.

Mornac, The Leaps of Mornac and Montbriſſon, the meaning of it, 540. a. b.

Mornay (du Pleſſis) the ſtreſs he lays on the Poet Dante's Invectives againſt the Court of Rome, 1051 a. Excuſed on his alledging Facts againſt the Papiſts without good Grounds, by ſaying that People were not over-nice in thoſe Days, 2746. a. b.

Morton, Anſwers the Slanders againſt Beza in the firſt Edition of his Apol. Cathol. by ſaying, dum Papiſta fuit, Hircus fuit, but Corrected this in the ſecond Edition, 914. b. n. The Reaſon of this, ibid. b.

Moſes, his Song in the 15th of Exodus exceeds all that ever were compos'd, in Poetical Beauty, 2185. b. What Body he appear'd in, according to Mr. Poiret, at the Transfiguration, 2611. b. Impieties touching the Miracles of Moſes, and generally touching the whole Scripture, 728. B. Oppos'd and contradicted by Joſephus, 30. a.

Moſque, No Place where a Turkiſh Moſque has been built, is to be deliver'd up by any Treaty, 1776. a.

Mothers, by a Law of Henry II. of France, in what Caſe reputed to Murder their own Children, 2478. b.

Motion. The ſuppos'd Effect of Bodies to remove from the Center of Motion overthrown by an Experiment, 1125. a.

Moulin (Du) his generous Refuſal of a Penſion from the Court of France, 1310. b.

Munſter (Treaty of) Anathematis'd by the Pope, 971. a. Canons of Munſter prove their Nobility by ſixteen Deſcents, 2647. a. An Epitaph upon the Tomb of a Canon, importing, That he Died a Captain in the Wars, ibid.

Murder. A Book ſhewing that there are thirty four Caſes in which a Man may innocently commit Self murder, 2641. a.

Muſcovy (Czar of) the manner of chuſing him a Wife, 1371. b. n. Why more fear'd by the Turks than any Chriſtian Potentate, 2107. a.

Muſes, why Conſecrated in the Temple of Hercules at Rome, and put under his Protection, 1649. b. 1650 a. Cardinal Richlieu exceeding Liberal to them, 1422.

Muſicians, have better luck among the Great Ladies and Princeſſes than all the other Profeſſions of the ſame Rank put together, 2398. a.

Muſick, which was the firſt Compoſition Set to Muſick, 2185. b. The ſix Notes of it Ut, re, mi, &c. by whom Invented, 336 By whom was the Gamut firſt Invented, 336.

Myſteries, the beſt way of Explaining them, is to keep to the moſt general Expreſſions, 1045. b. unreaſonable to expect the Anſwers of Divines about Myſteries above Reaſon ſhould be as clear as the Objections of the Philoſophers, 959. b. Myſteries of the Cloſe-ſtool, 139 a. Whether the rejecting of Myſteries be a good way to get many Followers, 2757. b.

Mythologiſts, a Cenſure of the ancient Greek Mythologiſts 1580. b.

NA.

Nakedneſs, why ſeveral Chriſtian Sects have gone without Cloaths, and not been aſhamed to diſcover their Nakedneſs, when none but the Cynicks among the Pagans could overcome Natural Modeſty to ſuch a degree, 2927. b.

Names, Two Names given to things in Homer, as Scamander and Xanthus to the ſame River, one according to human Language, the other according to the Language of the Gods, 2682. b. Some Names hard to be ſuſtain'd, as Ariſtotle, &c. 368. a. A Cuſtom of changing Names in the XVth Century, 136. They who were made Citizens of Rome took the Name of him who procured them that Honour, 470. b. The Misfortune of an unharmonious Name, 478. b. n. The Cuſtom of calling Men by their Chriſtian Names in Latin Books breeds a great deal of confuſion, 1402. a. The Benefit of having a Name that will fit in Rhime, 1264. a.

Naudé, his Opinion of four Books, written with the greateſt Art of any, 652.

Nantes (Edict of) had never been Ratify'd by the Parliament of Paris, if Henry the IVth had only made uſe of mild Entreaties, 1713. a.

Naples (Joan of) The barbarous Murder of her Husband Andrew, and the ſuppoſed Cauſe of it, 2321. a. Informations Exhibited againſt his Murderers, by Order of Clement VI. 2325. The way Joan of Naples [illegible] to diſcover her Paſſion for Caraccioli, Grand Seneſchal of her Kingdom, 815. a. Mary Queen of Scots compar'd to her in all her Deſtiny, 2323. a.

Natural Right, not admitted by ſome Philoſophers, 339. b.

Nature (Human) how ſuſceptible of the worſt Turns, 141. b.

Navarre (Antony King of) lured off from the Proteſtants by a vain Proſpect, 1634. b.

Navarre (Joan Queen of) her Heroick Courage in Childbirth, 2340. b. Her Marriage of Conſcience with a Gentleman of her Court, by the Approbation of her Proteſtant Miniſters, to whom ſhe had confeſs'd ſhe could not contain, ſhewn to be without any Grounds, 2348. a.

Navarre (Margaret Queen of) receives a box on the Ear from the King her Husband, for having heard the new Prayers from the Hugonot Miniſters in her Chamber, 2337. a. Her Curioſity to have a ſenſible Demonſtration of the Separation of the Soul from the Body,

Vol. II. 801. Vol. III. 1551. Vol. IV. 1439.

2337. a. Her extraordinary Beauty, 2104. b. She outdoes Katherine de Medicis at her own Weapons, 1656. b. Her Maids of Honour foil thoſe of Katherine de Medicis, ibid.

Nazianzen (St. Gregory) his Teſtimony of the Councils of his time, 2361. a.

Necklace; a Necklace fatal to all that wore it, 813. a. What Materials it was made of, ibid.

Needle; an attempt to prove its uſe among the Ancient Egyptians, and its being worſhipped under Hieroglyphicks as a Diety, 1656. a.

Neapolitan Horſes; Princes of the Houſe of Lorrain compared to them, 850. b.

Nepenthes; what it was, 1595. a.

Nepos (Cornelius) a Dilemma very hard for him to get over, 1051. b. His Life of Conon and that of Ageſilaus, look as if compoſed to confute each other, ibid.

Nero; the firſt Roman Emperor that had his Speeches made for him, 1554. a.

Neſtorianiſm; why favoured by the Mahometan, and other Infidel Princes, 2362. a. b. It is only a Diſpute about Words, 2359. b. Father of the Oratory at Mons, accuſed of renewing the Hereſy of Neſtorianiſm, 2363. a. Suppoſed to have favoured Neſtorius, upon which a Book of his was ſuppreſſed, 2365. a. n.

Neſtorian, and other Hereſies, would have overſpread the World; but for the Authority of the Emperors and Imperial Laws, 2562. a.

Nevers (Duke de) his inſolent Behaviour to Henry II. from a regard to the Glory of France, 1615. b.

News; an inſtance ſhewing how cautious Ambaſſadors ought to be in Writing News to their Principals, 2651. a.

New-Year's-Gift; of what kind made to the Footmen of a great Miniſter, 1584. a.

New Jeruſalem; which Town in Europe, according to the Prophecies of the Anabaptiſts, was to be the New-Jeruſalem, 689. b.

Nice (Council of) their Moderation in condemning Arius, 368. b.

Nicephorus; a fabulous injudicious Writer, 1760. b.

Nicholas I. Pope of Rome, deſerved the Title of Moſt Great, 928. a.

Nicolle (Mr.) his Objection againſt the Proteſtants Rule of Faith, leads directly to Scepticiſm, 2372. b. All his Arguments retorted, ibid.

Nidhard (Father) Confeſſor to the Queen of Spain, Wife of Philip IV. The ground of his great Favour in her Court, and his Elevation to the Cardinal's Cap, 2378. a. The honourable manner of diſmiſſing him from Court, 2376. b.

Nigidius; why he had the Sirname of Figulus, according to St. Auſtin, 2380. b.

Niſmes; the Fury of the Mob of Niſmes againſt an Excommunicated Hugonot Miniſter, 1308. a.

Nobility; the Ancient Chriſtians towards the IVth Century frequently mentioned the Nobility of their Birth, 1599. b. The Canons of Munſter prove their Nobility by ſixteen Deſcents, 2647. a.

Nogeut (Count de) his knack at reviving a Languiſhing Converſation, 539. An inſtance of it, ibid.

Nonconformity; a Crime; who the Invention of it is aſcribed to, 2886. B.

Noſe; a good Noſe one Mark of the true Meſſiah, according to the Jews, 501.

Novellæ; a Commentary on the Decretals of Gregory IX. by John Andreas, why ſo entituled, 255.

Novels (Gallant) by whom firſt brought in Faſhion in France, 1743. a.

Nudities; looking at them by whom reckon'd ſometimes a venial, and at other times a mortal Sin, 88. b.

Number (Golden) by whom ſettled, and when, 1580. b. 1581. a.

Numen; a Jeſuit cenſured on his blaming the uſe of this Word to the Holy Virgin, 670. b.

Nuns; their exorbitancy at Genoa, 692. a. Why they don't deſire a penetrative Virginity, ibid. The Mark which thoſe have in Death who have lain with a Nun, 2177. a. Thoſe who have been in any part of their Lives Lewd, were to be ſequeſtred from thoſe who had been always Chaſt, according to the Opinion of the Fathers, 1325. a.

O A.

OAk of Mamre, under which Abraham uſed to ſit, how long it ſtood. 36. b.

Oaths; the Form of the Oath exacted by the Turks, when they enter into an Alliance with Chriſtian Powers, 1352. a. Euripides brought to Trouble for leſſening the Religion of an Oath, and teaching Mental Reſervation in one of his Plays, 1268. a. Falſe Oaths of Lovers are forgiven, according to Plato, 1341. b.

Obedience (Paſſive) a Scotchman beaten in France for Preaching it, 835. b. By whom Paſſive Obedience was Preached up among the Proteſtants in France, 505. A ſhort Apology of an Engliſh Divine for Paſſive Obedience, 1409. a.

Obſcenities, whether Caſuiſts may be ſuppoſed capable of treating Caſes extreamly Obſcene without unchaſt imaginations, 2668. b. Why the obſceneſt Latin Poets are not put into the Liſt of forbidden Books, by the Inquiſition, 656. a. An Apology for the ſeeming Obſcenities, merry Tales, and Smut to be met with in this Dictionary, 1194. b. 1195. a.

Obſcurity of the Scriptures, a Notion of it, 1219. a. Obſcurity of Satyrical Writings, 17. Obſcure Paſſage in Plautus, how Diſcover'd, and by whom, 1401. b.

Ochinus (Bernardin) falſly ſaid to be the Author of the Book de tribus Impoſtoribus, 2391. Would never have quitted the Habit of his Order, being a profeſs'd Capucin, if he could have preached the Proteſtant Doctrines without hazard of his Life, ibid.

Octavia, Daughter of Claudius, and Wife of Nero, the Anſwer of one of her Maid-ſervants, who had the Queſtion given her to make her confeſs Octavia guilty of Adultery, 2398. a.

Offence (common) the difference between it and a Privileg'd Caſe, 147. a. n.

Olivarez (Count and Duke of) fomented the Amorous Inclinations of Philip IV. whoſe Governour he was, 455. b. His Reaſons for it, ibid.

Ophites, a kind of Heretick, who had a particular Veneration for Serpents, and very Blaſphemous Thoughts about them, 1251. a.

Opinions, of two Opinions, neither of which has any Foundation, one may be beſt for the Pulpit, 81. a. The Broachers of New Opinions, hardly ever know where to ſtop, 445. b.

Oracles, which were the famouſeſt of the Heathen Oracles, 216. b. All the Pagan Oracles did not ceaſe upon the Preaching of the Goſpel, 219. b. The Oracle of Apollo more Infallible than that of Jupiter; the latter compar'd to the Infallibility of the Pope ex Cathedra, according to the Gallican Church, the former to the Infallibility of a Council, 105. a. Pythian Oracle, in what kind of Verſe moſt uſually given, 1263. b. What Oracle ſubſiſted in the Days of Conſtantius the Son of Conſtantine, 28.

Orange (William, firſt Prince of) a Politick fetch of his, which coſt Don John of Auſtria his Life, 454. a.

Orange (William, Prince of) The Example which encourag'd Gerard to Aſſaſſinate him, 1785.

Orators, their repreſenting an Impiety as Succeſsful, repugnant to Decency and may prejudice good Manners, 871. b. The difference between the Language of an Orator, and that of an Hiſtorian in certain Caſes, 1019. b. Orators and Poets, not knowing when to give over, a great Fault, 99. a. b.

Oratory (Father of the) at Mons, accuſed of renewing the Hereſie of Neſtorianiſm, 2363. a.

Ordeal, a Memorable Inſtance of a Trial by Ordeal, 314.

Origen defends the Goſpel Precepts in Perſecution of Flying from one City to another, which Celſus Scoff'd at, 395. b.

Original of Evil, Simplicius his Thoughts about this Queſtion, 2498. b.

Orleans (Pere de) modeſt in his account of Anne Bullen, 662. a.

Orleans (Maid of) by what Hiſtorians own'd to have been a Counterfeit, 1570. b. n. By whom Tutor'd, and taught her Leſſon, 1571. a.

Oromaſdes, The Name of the Deity which the Perſians, and after them the Manicheans acknowledge as the Principle of Good, 344.

Orpheus, his Notion concerning the Origin of the Gods, 231. b.

Orthodox Principles often through Perſecution are quitted out of Diſlike for the Perſons of their Perſecutors, 2997. b.

Orthodoxy, Perſecution indiſpoſes ſome Men for it, and forces them out of the Orthodox Paths againſt their Inclinations, 2997. b.

Oſtentation, how indecent to Learned Men, 868. b.

Otho, Emperor, Convicted of Murder upon a Trial by Ordeal, and his Head demanded in a general Aſſembly by the Widow of the Perſon Condemn'd upon his Sentence, 314.

Ottoman, In which of their Race the Title of Grand Signior did begin, 2113. a.

Oven, A Cuſtom in the Convent of Spain for a Monk to ſhut himſelf up in a hot Oven, which paſſes for a Miracle, 1677. b.

Overtures, pretended to be made by King John towards a Reconciliation of Sweden to the Church of Rome ſuppoſititious, 1388. b.

Ovid, leſs abſurd in his Metamorphoſis, than the Quietiſts in theirs, 707. a. Condemn'd and Criticiz'd on his deſcription of the Paſſion of Biblis, 620. 621. a.

Oxford (Catalogue of) an Error mark'd in it, 2481. b.
Oyl, by whom Invented, 351. b.
Oysters, sent fresh from Rome to Parthia in the Days of Trajan, 289.

P A.

PAciotti (Francis) Count of Montefeltro, a famous Engineer in the XVIth Century, built the Citadels of Antwerp and Turin, 2459 a.b.
Paganism; the Philosophers the only Men who wrote in Defence of it against the Christians, 198. b. The difference between Mahometanism and Paganism, as to the Original of both, 681. a.
Pagans prefer'd the Ideas of Virtue before the ill Example of their Gods, 1825. b. Their Notions of Divinity a true Atheism at bottom, 1830. a. Believed the Divine Nature subject to Ignorance and Caprice, 105. a. What Considerations led them to lay all the blame of their evil Actions on the Gods, 1596. a. Annexed Fatality to certain inanimate things, 829. a. Their Invectives against Fate, 2536. A. They boasted in several of their Cities, that they had the same holy Relicks, as others do now in our Days, 1006. a. Much stricter in their Morals in the second Century than in our Days, as to the outward Behaviour, 305. b. Their Oracles did not all cease upon the Preaching of the Gospel, 219. b.
Pain; the Dispute between the Stoicks and Peripateticks, about the Nature of Pain, a meer Dispute about Words, 1611. a. One may feel Pain without having ever felt Pleasure, 2485. E. ad in.
Painters drew the Goddesses after their own Mistresses, or after the famousest Courtezans, 1323. b. Christian Painters guilty of this Licentiousness in drawing the Virgin Mary, ibid. Those Pieces of theirs which remain unfinish'd by reason of their Death, more admired than their best finish'd Pieces, 2897. b. Ancient Examples of this, ibid. Hannibal despised the Painter who drew him with two Eyes, and rewarded him who drew him in Profil, 519. b.
Paintings, an Instance of the great value of Paintings by the best Hands in ancient Rome, 1695. a. What Pieces a Prince may be allow'd to paint with his own hand, 2327. a. A singular Instance of its bewitching Power over some Minds, ibid. The excessive Price paid by Julius Cæsar for an Ajax and a Medea, 2896.
Palavicini (Cardinal) angry at Father Paul's saying that the Reception of Zuinglius's Doctrine was an Argument that a higher Cause than Zuinglius was concern'd in it, 100. b. He accuses those of Rashness, who judge of the Providence of God, ibid. Forc'd to change some Elogies of Alexander VIII. in his History, after it had been printed off, upon a change of that Pope's Dispositions for his Family, 968. a.
Palmyra; a Description of the Cruelties committed at the Sacking of it, 445. a. b.
Pamphlets, their Authority shewn by an Instance, 948. a.
Pantomimi, their Original, and first Inventers in Rome, 521. a. Reckon'd among the Causes which shook the Roman Empire, ibid.
Papyrius Cursor, design'd by the Romans to Command against Alexander the Great, in case he should have turn'd his Arms against Italy after the Conquest of Asia, 2077. a.
Paquier, rectified in his Notion about the Talents of Persons compar'd with the Occasions and Circumstances of Action, 928. a.
Paracelsus believ'd that our first Parents had not the necessary Parts for Generation before they sinn'd; but that they afterwards grew out like Excrescences, 78. His ridiculous Notion about the Nature of Serpents, 1251. a.
Paraclet, a great Dispute among the Ecclesiasticks about the pronouncing this word, 2454. a. A Priest suspended by his Bishop for pronouncing it Paracletus in the Mass, ibid.
Paraclet (Monastery of the) used the Term Panem nostrum Supersubstantialem, instead of Quotidianum, and why, 1600. b.
Parasites, the hint of a famous Parasite, cited from Paul Jovius, 965. a.
Parchment, its Original and Occasion, with the Reason of the Name, 2521. a. b.
Pareus (David) a foreign Protestant Divine, his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans burnt by the hands of the Common Hangman, by Order of King James I. 2456. b. Letters between him and Magyrus, a Jesuit, address'd in very civil Titles, 2458. a. A Prophecy of his trac'd, 950. a.
Parisians (The) refused to make Bonfires for the Treaty of Ryswick, 'till compell'd to do it by Menaces, 1626. b.
Parliaments of France, their Power of rejecting the King's Edicts most pernicious to the State, 1714. a. Their Power humbled by Michael del Hôpital, Chancellor of France, 1711. a.
Parnassus Reform'd, a bold Falshood invented by its Author, to found a Criticism on the Romance of Theagenes and Chariclea, 1599. a.
Parpaillot, a Nick name for the Hugonots in some Parts of France, 1036. b.
Parrhasius painted Hercules from an Apparition of him, 1646. b.
Parrot, maintain'd by Scaliger the Father, against Cardan and all the Poets, to be an ugly Bird, ibid.
Party; Accounts of an opposite prevailing Party not to be highly believed, 88. a.
Pascal (Mr.) his Notions about Government, 2468. a. His wonderful Genius for the Mathematicks, 2465. a. How he stood with relation to the Jansenists towards his latter End, 2471. b.
Pasquier (Stephen) censur'd on his founding his Plea against Maldonat upon this, that he had attempted to prove the Existence of God by natural Reasons, 2139. a.
Passion of Byblis; Ovid commended and criticis'd on his Description of it, 620, 621. a.
Passions; we must watch the proper Seasons for curing them, 1032. a. Their Tyranny over us, and swaying against all the Ideas of Virtue and temporal interest, a Gulph to the Pagan Philosophers, 1597. a.
Passive Obedience, a Scotch Man drubb'd in France for Preaching it, 833. b. By whom it was preach'd up among the Protestants of France, 206. A short Apology of an English Divine for Passive Obedience, 1409. a.
Pastors; Actions commenc'd against the Ministers of France in their qualifying themselves Pastors, 648. a.
Paterculus (Velleius) his History, how near being lost to the World, 1474. a. He is quoted but by one Writer among the Ancients, ibid.
Patricians, when first bound by the Plebiscita, or Ordinances of the People of Rome, 1693. b.
Pattins; a Husband cheated half in half in Person by his Wife's Pattins, 1055. a.
Paul (Father) his Maxim about Self-murder, 2647. a. Noted for a Mistake about the Persons who presided as Legates in the Council of Trent, 186. b. His relating that the Pope made great Promises to Luther by his Nuncio, in order to bring him over, and the heroick Answer which he puts in Luther's Mouth, a meer Fiction, 1948. a. b. Disobliges Cardinal Palavicini, by saying, that the Reception of Zuinglius's Doctrine was an Argument that a higher Cause was concerned in it, 100. b.
Paul (Saint) whether his meaning in a certain place be, that the Husband may dispose of the Body of his Wife in favour of another Man, 70. b. Charged with making use of extravagant Expressions, 83. b. Compar'd to a swelling Sea, which overflows its Banks, 86. b. Treated very irreverently by the Italians, 87. a.
Paulinus (St.) his retiring from the World and turning Hermit, rallyed by his Master Ausonius, 450. a.
Pausanias, his tragical Adventure with Cleonice, 1000. a.
Peieresc (Mr.) his Obsequies are celebrated by the Academy of Humourists in forty several Languages, 2501. b.
Pederasty; Laius the first that is said to be guilty of it, 972. b.
Pelusiota (Isidorus) his whimsical manner of solving the Text of our Saviour's being three Days and three Nights in the Bowels of the Earth, 140. a.
Penance; extreme Severity of the Jewish Penance, 74. b.
Penelope; Mary de Medicis compared to her, in what, 2512. b.
Penitentiaries, of Paris, inform the first President, that in a Year's time six hundred Women had confess'd they had Murdered their own Children, 2475. b.
Pensioners; the Fate of old Court Pensioners, 1422. b.
People; their Flatterers would perswade us that there's nothing to fear from them so long as a Prince governs well, a false and dangerous Maxim, 694. b. A Maxim concerning them, 213. Why Seneca would never endeavour to please the People, 351. a. Their Power in France over their Kings alternatively maintained by the Protestants and Papists, 1719. a.
Perdiccas, King of Macedon, a singular Piece of Tyranny in his Court, 1259. b.
Perefixe (Archbishop of Paris) receives a visit from a Protestant Minister, tho' he had let him understand before hand, that he could not call him My Lord, 206. a.
Perfection; the highest is to bear Reproof and Praise with indifference, 629. b.
Peripateticks; their Tenet that Prayers and Sacrifices were useless, 362. b.

Vol. II. 801.
Vol. III 1551.
Vol. IV. 2239.

Perron (Cardinal) by a deſign concerted between him and a Hugonot Miniſter, who were to diſpute before Henry IV. the Miniſter ſuffers himſelf to be worſted, 1610. a. His Compliment to the Queen mother of France, when the Gout had obliged him to receive her ſitting, 534. a. The malicious Turn he gives to ſome Apologies of the Proteſtants for Violences grounded on the Practice of eminent Roman Catholicks, 1310. b. His extravagant Judgment on Q. Curtius, 1536. a.

Perſecutors muſt renounce the Title of Conquerors, 1614. b.

Perſecution; the Goſpel Precept in Perſecution of flying from one City to another, ſcoffed at by Celſus, and how defended by Origen, 365. b. One curſed Effect of it, that it ſometimes makes Men quit the Orthodox Principles out of diſlike for the Reaſons of their Perſecutors, 1997. b.

Perſia; the Care of the King of Perſia for improving his Country Language, 1418. a.

Perſians; their Pretence for making War upon Greece, 1593. b. They honoured thoſe much who could bear a great deal of Wine, 1054. a.

Petavius exalts the Authority of St. Auſtin above that of all the other Fathers, 437. b. His Reaſon for not replying to a piece of a Hugonot Miniſter, 1039. a.

Peter (St.) his Keys thrown into the River Tyber, 1788. a.

Peters (Hugh) plundered Laud's Library, and ſuppoſed to have made away with Cambden's Papers, 832. b.

Petrus Valleclauſa; Theophilus Rainaud calls himſelf by this Name in ſome of his Works, 2320. a.

Phalaris; curious Reflections on the Letters of Phalaris, in a Book printed in Germany, in one thouſand ſix hundred ninety nine, 333. b.

Phanaticiſm; a remarkable Inſtance of its turning the Heart againſt God and the Magiſtrate, 1552. a.

Pharamond, but little Certainty whether there ever was ſuch a Man, 1572. b.

Pharſalia; what paſſed betwixt Pompey the Great, and Cratippus the Philoſopher, upon the Subject of Providence, after the Battel of Pharſalia, 1030. a.

Phengites; a white Stone of Cappadocia, hard as Marble, and tranſparent, which ſerved inſtead of Glaſs, 845. b.

Phenix, his Speech in the ninth Book of Homer, unworthy the Majeſty of an Epick Poem, 61. a.

Philip of Macedon diſmiſſes all Alexander's Confidents upon their giving him a Jealouſie of his Intentions, 78. b.

Philip the Iſt of France, twice excommunicated on account of marrying Bertrada, Wife of the Earl of Anjou, 1325. a.

Philip the IId. loſt the Netherlands by his Jealouſie againſt Don John of Auſtria, 454. a. What hindred him from proceeding againſt his Father Charles the Vth, as an Heretick after his Death, according to Amelot, 867. b. croſſed in his Deſigns againſt England, by Pope Sixtus V. 1172. a.

Philip IV. his amorous Inclination fomented by Duke de Olivarez, his Governor, 455. b. His Reaſons for it, ibid.

Philo, his Embaſſy from the Jews of Alexandria to Caligula, what it principally related to, 292. b. How oppoſed and fruſtrated by the Artifices of Apion, ibid.

Philoſophers, when they left off their Habit in the Roman Empire, 1775. a. The ancient Greek Philoſophers ſeeming ignorant of the Exiſtence of a God accounted for very ingeniouſly, 231. a. The difference between their banaying the Truth, and the ſharing the Oyſter in the Fable, 974. C. They were wretched Writers about the third Century, 198. b.

Philoſophers (Pagan) the Uſefulneſs of repreſenting their moſt beaſtly and abominable Practices in the ſtrongeſt Terms, 1671. b. Expelled Rome by a Law, an. urb. 592. under the Conſulſhip of C. Fannius, 1278. Who was the firſt of the Heathen Philoſophers that admitted a Spirit diſtinct from the Body, 1827. a. The only Men who wrote againſt the Chriſtians in defence of Heatheniſm, 198. b. The old Philoſophers had the ſame Diſputes about Predeſtination, that the Jeſuits, Auguſtinians and Remonſtrants have now, 864 b. Some Philoſophers allowed Brutes to have a Senſe of God and Religion, 2606. b. Which of them believed the Moon to be an inhabited Country, 3049. b. Uſed to purge their Brain, and quicken their Wit with Hellebore, 863. a. The Contempt of Philoſophers in Longinus's Time, 198. Some of them would not admit of natural Right, 339. b.

Philoſophiſing; in Religious Matters compared to corroſive Powders, which, together with the proud Fleſh, eat away the ſound Parts, 75. a.

Philoſophy (Peripatetick) how it tends to foment Diſputes in Divinity, 1748. b. Generally claſhes with Religion, 366. b. The ſecular Power always ſides with the latter, ibid. Who was the firſt that brought Philoſophy to Athens, 321. b. The diverſity of Opinions in this Point reconciled, ibid. A Motion made for baniſhing it out of the Univerſities of Germany, as repugnant to the Truths of Theology, 1657. b. They who quitted the Study of it for further Amuſements; why compared by Ariſtotle to Penelope's Lovers, 2911. b. How long a Courſe of Philoſophy uſually laſted in the 17th Century, 2136. a. Lactantius raiſed Arguments with a deſign to overthrow all Philoſophy, but is examined and anſwered, 310. a. b. Martin Luther, a great Enemy to Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, 366. b.

Philoſtratus tranſlated in the Camp of Mathias Corvinus for that Prince's reading, 670. a. His affirming that the Oracle of Amphiaraus was in Reputation in the time of Apollonius, contradicted by Plutarch and Clemens Alexandrinus, 216. a.

Philtre; the Root of Eryngium, or the hundred headed Thiſtle, reckoned a moſt powerful Philtre among the Ancients, 2672. b.

Phlebotomy reckoned mortal of old in Perſons before fourteen, 427. b. The Opinion of the Ancients about it in a tender Age, ibid.

Phlegon, Freedman of Hadrian, why he fathered the Hiſtory of Hadrian's Life on his Maſter, tho' written by himſelf, 1556. a.

Phocion, Inſtances of his generous Behaviour, 1582. a.

Photius quotes Joſephus wrongfully, 273. b.

Phyſick; a Law in Athens againſt the Study of Phyſick by Women or Slaves, 1665. a. A memorable Caſe, which occaſioned the repealing this Law with reſpect to the former, ibid. b.

Phyſicks; who was the firſt that is ſuppoſed to have written Phyſicks, 167.

Phyſicians; the exorbitant Fees that ſome Phyſicians demanded in the 13th Century, 299. b. 300. a. Their Privileges with the Ladies, 311. b. Who was the firſt Phyſician that ever came to Rome, and in what Year of the City, 880. b. Aſcribed much to the Influence of the Stars in diſcourſing of the Diſtempers of their Patients about the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, 1802. a.

Picture of a Battel won by Selym, Emperor of the Turks, painted by his own hand, preſented to the Senate of Venice, which is ſtill kept by them, 2327. a. Picture of Calumny by Apelles, 287. a.

Picus Mirandola, his blind Submiſſion to Cardinal d'Ailly's Calculations, 131. a.

Pillars; the Pillar of Fire which moved before the Iſraelites cannot be compar'd to a Fire which Timoleon ſaw in a Dream, 2889. b.

Pin (Monſieur du) his Book ſuppreſſed on a Charge of his favouring Neſtorianiſm, 2365. a. n.

Pindar; his Digreſſions take up more than three fourths of his Odes, 1661. b.

Pinedo; upon the Queſtion, which was the wiſeſt, Adam or Solomon, and which is decided in the favour of the former, Pinedo excepts Politicks, 79. a.

Pius II. his Letter to Mahomet II. condemned by the Proteſtants, and juſtified by Catholick Authors, 2110. & ſeq.

Piſa (Council of) called at the Requeſt of the Emperor and King of France, in oppoſition to Julius II. afterwards ſhamefully deſerted by the ſame Princes, and ſacrificed to the Council of Lateran, called by the ſame Pope, 1789. a.

Plagiariſm; two memorable Inſtances of it in the Perſon of Tortellius, 337. b. In what Caſes privileg'd, and in what not, 1184. b. Artfully diſguiſed by Mainbourg, 1654. b.

Plague; an Antidote againſt it, 431. a.

Plane-trees watered with Wine in the days of the Roman Luxury, 1695. a.

Planets, in what Conjunctions of them are Prayers infallibly heard, according to Aſtrologers, 300. C.

Planudes, a huge Blunder of his in the Life of Æſop, 1233. a.

Plato, a very tender Diſtich of his, 101. a. His Opinion about the knowledge of Brutes, 2520. b. His Opinion of Eternal uncreated Matter not to be diſguiſed, 1660. b. His high Eſteem of Æſop's Fables, 1234. b. The Reaſon of his going about to burn all the Books of Democritus, 1084. P. How he is to be underſtood when he ſtyles Sappho the Wiſe, 2672.

Platoniſts might eaſily be reconciled to the Doctrine of the Cainites, which ſuppoſes that the Genius of every Man forms its own Body, 807. a. Their Opinion that God was not able to form the World without the Concourſe of uncreated Matter, how confuted, and by whom, 1660. a. Platoniſts nonpluſs'd upon their Syſtem, by the Objections of Epicurus againſt God's forming the World, and a Providence, 1196. a. b. 1197. a. b.

Plautus;

PL

Plautus; can't be ſuppos'd to falſify a Point of Hiſtory to keep up the Character of an Illiterate Perſon on the Stage, 2503. a. The ſenſe of an obſcure Paſſage in him how diſcover'd, and by whom, 1401. b. His Amphytrion not comparable to that of Moliere, 121. a.

Plays; Their Uſefulneſs maintain'd by M. Fabricius, a Proteſtant Profeſſor of Heidelberg, 1320. b. Their Authors not chargeable with the impious Maxims of Perſons repreſented, 1269. b. Made uſe of to repreſent the Abuſes of Popery, 2690. a.

Pleaſure; in what ſenſe the Summum Bonum, or Happineſs of Man, 1190. b. A Diſpute between two Beggars wherein conſiſts the Pleaſure of Life, 2895. b.

Plebeian; a Quality not inconſiſtent with that of Noble in ancient Rome, 1693. a.

Pliny; how ſmall a thing in his Belief would change Fate, 809. b. An Error in him about the Aſſyrian Learning, 460. a. An over-refin'd Thought of his, 1228. a.

Plutarch; His Miſquotations, and the reaſon of them, 1816. b. Tax'd with miſrepreſenting a Character, and calling that Liberality, which is truly Squandering, 177. b. Omits a very ſingular Fact in the Life of Mark Anthony, 278. a. Criticiz'd on a Conſolatory Argument to a Mother on the loſs of her Son, as alledg'd by him, 218. b. Made himſelf ſuch a Maſter of ſome Facts, that he could turn 'em ſometimes one way, and ſometimes another, 53. b. Of Opinion that it were better of the two, that Jupiter ſhould be defective in point of Power than Goodneſs, 2491. b. Confutes the Opinion of the Stoicks, about the uſefulneſs of Vice very ſolidly, 2492. a. Contradicts himſelf about the Death of Caſſius, 877. b. Tells the ſame Story ſeveral ways, and fathers it on ſeveral Perſons, 1226. a. How much given to Quotations, 1188. b. Fathers the ſame Story upon ſeveral Perſons, and tells it ſeveral different ways, 1266. a. Differs from Cicero in his Judgment of the Writings and Wit of ſome Authors, 2885. b.

Poems; The ridiculous ground of a certain Pope's conſidering all Poems (tho' on Sacred Subjects) as Heretical, 2705. b. 2706. a.

Poets; Poets and Orators not knowing when to give over, a great Fault, 99. a. b. Happier on Laſcivious than on any other Subjects, 2204. b. Several of the ancient Greek Poets burnt and deſtroy'd at the Inſtigation of the Primitive Chriſtian Clergy, 2359. a. A Heteroclite Poet of the Court of France, his Excellency and Talents, 2369. b. What Judgment is to be made of them from the graveſt Maxims ſcatter'd in their Works, 1385. b. An excellent Leſſon for Superannuated Poets, out of the Menagiana, 1065. b. Inſtances of the Poverty of Poets, 2917. b. A Poetical Parliament call'd upon a certain Poet's purchaſing a Houſe to live in, 2918. b. Poets, Rhetoricians, and Grammarians invited to Court, by Corvinus King of Hungary, with no other deſign than to make them beg their way home again, 670. a. The Miſtreſſes of Modern Poets never prais'd in Verſe after once they become their Wives, 2682. b. Latin Poets are not put into the Catalogue of Books forbidden by the Inquiſition, 646. a. Poets ſpeak of Providence in Metaphors too bold, 1015, 1016.

Poetry; The wonderful Taſt of an Aſs for Poetry, 209. The French Poetry in high Reputation about the XIIIth. Century, and made a Model by the Italians, 2873. b. Moſes's Song in the 15th of Exodus, exceeds all that ever was Compos'd in Poetical Beauty, 185. b.

Poles; ſolicit Pope Sylveſter IId. for the Title of King, under the Reign of Boleſlaus only, ad majorem cautelam, 662. b.

Policy; ſometimes makes uſe of the moſt ridiculous Pretences, a memorable Example of this, 43.

Politick (A) Fetch of William, firſt Prince of Orange, which coſt Don John of Auſtria his Life, 454. a.

Polixena; compar'd to Anne Bullen, in one Circumſtance of their Death, 661. a.

Politian; an Epigram of his on Domitius Calderinus, 809. a.

Pollio (Aſinius) his Judgment of Cæſar's Commentaries, 930. b.

Polycarp (St.) his Staff grown into a wild Cherry-Tree, now to be ſeen at the Gate of the Fortreſs of Smyrna, 1647. b.

PO

Polygamy; The Chriſtian Laws againſt it, ſaid to hinder the Converſion of Infidels, 1120. b. When made Capital in France, and by whom, 1621. b.

Pompey (Count) his turning Proteſtant gave ground for ſuſpecting that Alexander the VIIth. was inclin'd to Hugonotiſm, 979. a. b.

Pompey (the Great) why oppos'd in his ſuing for a Commiſſion, giving him a Command over all the Seas, when the ſame Commiſſion had been granted before to Marcus Antonius Creticus, without the leaſt Oppoſition, 276. a. The Honours done to Poſidonius the Philoſopher by Pompey, 2128. b. n. What paſs'd between the Philoſopher Cratippus and him, after his Miſfortune at Pharſalia upon the Subject of Providence, 1030. a. What his Miſtreſs Flora remembred him by, 1320. b. The Qualities which ſecur'd him the Love of his Wives, and even of Julia, tho' young when he was growing old, 1321. a. b.

Poneropolis; a City built by a Macedonian King, for the reception of all ſcandalous and flagitious Perſons, 806. a.

Ponet (Fryar) his ſeditious Sermons againſt Henry III. 1626. b.

Pontignan; his unuſual Adventures with a Couple of Ladies of Curioſity, 1329. a.

Pontius (Conſtantinus) Preacher to Charles V. what that Emperor ſaid of him, when he heard he was turn'd Heretick, 868. a.

Popery; expos'd to ſome Hazards by a certain Perſon, rather than he wou'd loſe the opportunity of ſhewing his Eloquence, 96. a.

Pope; ſacrifice the Intereſt of the Romiſh Religion to their private Intereſt as Sovereigns, 1172. a. Said to be the Whore in the 17. of the Revelations by the Poet Dante, 1051. b. The neceſſary Qualifications of a Modern Pope, 566. a. Pope's Bull for Confirming of Biſhops, a great Scandal to the Court of France, 2133. a.

Pope; ſaid by Dante the Poet to be the Whore in the Revelations, and Rome the Seat of Antichriſt, 1051. b. Not allow'd by John de la Roquitaillade to be Antichriſt, 2603. b. The Expreſſion of Maximilian I. againſt the Popes, 1733. b. A Diſcourſe of Guicciardine's concerning the Manner how the Popes came to be Temporal Lords of Italy, left out of his Fourth Book, where now to be found, 1791. b. Always in their Difference force Princes to cringe to them, 1788. b.

Populace; its Character from Livy, 1678. a.

Porcus Trojanus; what it meant among the ancient Romans, 2908. b. n.

Pork; the Reaſon of the Jews abſtaining from it, 90. b.

Porphiry; did not deny certain Matters of Fact alledg'd by the Chriſtians, the reaſon of this, 545. a. Had the ſame Thought concerning our Ideas that Father Malebranch has, 198.

Portia; the Daughter of Cato, and Wife of Brutus, ſwallow'd Live-Coals to kill her ſelf, after the Death of her Husband, 1024. b. Her Death not ſo Heroick, nor ſo ſingular as that of Maria Cornelia, the Wife of Don John de la Cerda, ibid.

Portroyal; The Gentlemen of Portroyal, and the Janſeniſts, and the French Nation in general, clear'd from M: Jurieu's Charge of Socinianiſm, 2762. a. b. 2763. a. b.

Portroyal (Meſſieurs de) their Cenſure of Boccace, 645. a.

Portroyal; The Deſcendants from the Jews not permitted to depart from thence without the King's ſpecial Leave, tho' they have been Chriſtians for ſome Generations, 72. b.

Poſidonius the Philoſopher, honour'd by Pompey the Great, 2128. a. b.

PO

Poſſevin (the Jeſuit;) procures a Condemnation of Machiavel's Prince, though he had never read it, 2681. a.

Poverty; Death preferable to it, 630. a.

Power; of Kings irreſiſtible, when it is join'd with that an Eccleſiaſtical Party, 111. a.

Power; of Love, a great Inſtance of it, 1413. a.

Pox; who is the Patron Saint among the Catholicks of thoſe who have the Pox, 1761. b. How a Pox circulated in the Court of France, which kill'd Francis the Firſt and his Queen, 1349. a. b. a. The Saying of an Italian as he was dying of the Pox, 1334. b. Donna m' ha fatto, & Donna m' ha diſfatto.

Poyſon; The Athenian Law whereby Criminals were to execute themſelves by a Poyſon'd Draught, abrogated by Chriſtianity, 2180. a.

Praiſe; The love of Praiſe ſtronger than that of Riches and Dominion, 842. a.

Prayers; In what Conjunctions of the Planets infallibly heard, according to ſome Aſtrologers, 300. b.

Præadamites; how to frame a Præadamitical Syſtem which ſhall not claſh with the Scripture Account, 2639. A Book wrote to prove Præadamites, 2500. The Reparation made by the Author, ibid. b. A General Account of him, 2501. a.

Preachers; compared to Æolus, 69. a. The Jealouſy which reigns between your Top Preachers is equal to that of Poets, or Celebrated Beauties, 1695. a. The nominating of Preachers for the Pariſhes of Paris, when taken from the Sorbon, and given to the Archbiſhop, 2335. b. Reproach'd with their running into Digreſſions upon Death, when they have nothing elſe to ſay, 237. a. Four kinds of Preachers exemplify'd by Four kinds of Dogs, 2126. a. A Senſible Alteration in their Voice the firſt Year of their Marriage, 1085. C.

Predeſtination; the Diſputes about it between the Jeſuits, Auguſtinians, and Remonſtrants had a Being among the Old Philoſophers, 864. b. Predeſtination; of Luther and Calvin condemned and diſapproved by Melancton, 2739 a b.

Predictions; not to be ſolved by any Syſtem of Philoſophy, 912. a. The Prediction of a Fortune-Teller notably accompliſhed, 1426 b. A Prediction by which Lewis XIV. was to be General of the 144000 Seal'd Perſons in the Revelations, 2169. b.

Prefaces; Three or Four much admir'd, and which be theſe, 815. a. n.

Prelatures; obtain'd by Methods not to be nam'd, 178. b.

Preſages; promiſing a long and glorious Settlement to the Labadiſts, and yet they ſoon came to nothing, 956. b.

Preſence; (Real) by whom defended againſt Berengarius, 336. This Defence printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, ibid. Phraſes made uſe of by Calvin in his Catechiſm ſeem to admit a Corporeal Real Preſence, 2703. a. n. The occaſion of theſe Phraſes, ibid.

Prieſts; the Title of Antiſtites giv'n ſometimes to ſimple Prieſts, 2705. b The danger of deſpiſing the Prieſthood on account of Perſonal Defects, repreſented in a Paſſage of the Siameſe Theology, 2767. a. More dangerous to offend them in their own Perſons, than in the Perſons of their Gods, 363. a. A Prieſt ſuſpended by his Biſhop for pronouncing the Word Paracletus in the Maſs, 2454. a.

Princes; more Princes dethron'd for being too good than too wicked, 213. b. Almoſt always forc'd to cringe in their Differences with the Pope, 1788. b. The Power of the People over their Princes alternatively maintain'd in France by the Proteſtants and Papiſts, 1719. a. More at a loſs than meaner Folks what to do with their Horns, 2355. a. No Hiſtorian can be ſincere, who writes of Princes during their own or their Sons Life-time, 2474. a. Their Influence irreſiſtible, when join'd with that of an Eccleſiaſtical Party, 111. a. At what Age Religion comes upon them, 628. a. In what Caſes their Requeſt is a Command, 450. a. Princes who are expelled for their Lewdneſs carry on their Gallantries abroad, 514. In Good Policy no Princes ſhould favour the Rebellions of one anothers's Subjects, 886. a. No Converſation ſo much to be feared by Learned Men as that of Princes when they love Learning, 897. b. Petty Princes compared to the little Devils in Rabelais, who deſtroy only Cabbages and Parſly, 243. a. A Maxim with them to reward Rebellions, and neglect their Faithful Subjects, 949. a. Their Gentleneſs and Over-eaſineſs more prejudicial to the State than the greateſt Harſhneſs and Rigors, 1650. b. The difference between their Reſentments and thoſe of Private Gentlemen, 1427. b. More ruin'd by Condeſcenſion and Good Nature, than by Tyranny and Iniquity, 1156. a. The Services which are above their Acknowledgment, render them ungrateful, 1154. b. A Good Conſcience and Juſt Claim but poor Reſſources for them in Civil Wars, 1156, b. The greateſt Benefits of one Prince to another, don't oblige againſt the Laws of Good Politicks, 1169. a. b. Why ſo many of them love Wars, 1216. a. Their Impurities the Cauſe of the Murther and Ruin of many of them, 326. What Pieces a Prince may be allowed to paint with his own Hand, 2327. a.

PR

Princeſſes; all their Precautions to prevent a ſuſpicion of impoſing falſe Children uſeleſs againſt Ambition, 1612. b.

Principles (Doctrine of two) one Good, the other Evil——Its Origin, 2496. b.

Print; mighty fondneſs of ſome Perſons for appearing in Print, 2521. b.

Printers; An Inſtance of the Miſtakes Learned Men are led into, thro' the Faults of Printers, 261. b. Their Faults of what Importance, and how grievous to an Author, 1152. a. b.

Printing; a Grammar of Donatus's on Vellum, and another Book call'd Confeſſorialia, were the firſt Books printed by John Fauſt, Citizen of Mentz, and Inventor of that Art in the Year 1456, 53. a. 53. b. By whom brought in uſe firſt in Naples, 2129. b.

Privileg'd Caſe; The difference between it and a Common Offence, 147. a. n.

Proceſſion; a Solemn Proceſſion to thank Heaven for the Death of John Calvin, 818. a.

Proclus; of Opinion according to the Doctrine of Plato, that the Souls of Brutes are but Images or Simulacres of the Rational Soul, 2520. a. He deprives them of Thought, without depriving them of Feeling, ibid. 6.

Proculus; his mighty Feats in Love, 1631. b.

Profeſſors (Royal) in Paris, made an Attempt in that Univerſity toward a Reform in the Pronunciation of Latin, 2551. G.

Profeſſorſhip; The Vacancy of a Profeſſorſhip of the Greek Tongue, notify'd as Venice by ſound of Trumpet, 162. a.

Prophaneneſs; why it generally changes into Superſtition at the apprach of Death, 627. b. Whether more excuſable in Poetry or in Proſe, 1385 a.

Prophecies; relating to the Turkiſh Greatneſs, and to its Downfall, 2207, a. & ſeq. A Prophecy of the Pagans, whereby Chriſtianity was to be deſtroy'd after a Duration of 363 Years; how accompliſhid, 2108. a.

Prophecy; concerning Martin Luther, by a Cordelier ſeveral Years before his appearing on the Stage, 1668 a.

Prophets; the difference between a Prophet and a Perſon who only receives the Gift of Expounding Scripture Prophecies, 2601. b. The latter more favour'd by God than the former, ib. How a Perſon ſetting up for Prophecy may be reputed a True Prophet in many Things, 2602. b. The Chief Character of a True Prophet, according to Maimonides, 2109. a. Prophet John, a French Popiſh Fanatick, how he extricated himſelf from a conſiderable Difficulty alledged by the Queen of Poland againſt the Truth of one of his Prophecies, 2171. a.

Proportion; between the preſent Extent of the Chriſtian, Mahometan and Pagan Religions all the World over, 2092. a.

Proſperity; how variable an Argument of the Favour of God, 2114.b.

Proteſtants; a General Maſſacre of 'em, when, and where concerted, 94 b. Said of them, That after they had ſhaken off the Pope's Yoke, they found that of the Secular Power as heavy, 170. A Project of a General Re-union among 'em, by whom encouraged, and by whom oppoſed, 1302. b. Prone to Credulity, if not curb'd by a Spirit of Contradiction to the Roman Catholicks, 1230. b. Articles were intended to be drawn up againſt Cardinal Richlieu, in order to his Diſgrace, one of which was his favouring the Proteſtants, 918. a.

Proverbs; The Meaning of the Proverb, He was wrapped in his Mother's Smock, 1773. a. The Original of the Proverb, Græcum eſt non poteſt legi, 51. a. The Ground of that Proverb, Neſcit prædicare qui neſcit Barcellare, 5:2. b. An Account of Authors who have written upon the Origin of Proverbs, 1781. a. b.

Providence; whether the Saducees believ'd a Providence, 1642. b. Conſiderations on the Methods of anſwering ſome Difficulties about Providence, 1629. a. The Anſwer to the Difficulty drawn from the Proſperity of the Wicked, viz. That they are raiſed on high by Providence only that their Fall may be the greater, ſhewn to be impious, 1630. a. Juſtified on the ſame Principles by Chryſippus that Mr. Malebranche has follow'd, 982. b. Men doubt a Providence only when Things do not go well on their ſide, 18. a. The Reaſons of its Choice of the Inſtruments of the Reformation, 111. b. The belief of it ſtops all Criticiſing from the Irregularities in Nature and Morality, 1650. b. In what Reſpects it pleaſes all Parties, 1276. b. The Rule it lays on the Bold and the Wiſe, as a means to reſtrain Wickedneſs, and protect Innocency, 1153. b. The denying a Providence upon the Principles common to Epicurus, with all the other Sects of Philoſophers, leſs abſurd than ſuppoſing it, 1195. b. 1196. a. b. Man's Vanity is the Cauſe of his doubting a Providence, 19. E. An Axiom of a Modern Author about Providence, 72. B. Providence is ſuperior to all our beſt concerted Deſigns, 282. 785. F. ad fin. Whether one may be a Perſon of Probity without the belief of a Providence, 418, 419, & ſeq. ad fin. in Tex. We judge of the Deſign of Providence with too much Temerity, 597. A. ad med. Whether Providence in ordering the State of this World, order'd alſo the Diſeaſes and Vices which reign in it, 982, T. ad in. The Poets ſpeak of it in Metaphors ſomewhat too bold, 115, 116. The Proſperity of Wicked Men never makes us doubt of a Providence when we ſhare in this Proſperity of theirs, or are no ways incommoded by it, 1090, C. ad fin. The Reaſons which are borrowed from Common Life to prove it are not ſufficient to convince all ſort of Unbelievers, Ibid. J. ad fin. The Puniſhment of ſome Perſons notoriouſly wicked ſaid to have been a Sentence of Abſolution to Providence, 1105. N. ad med. It's often ſeen that Perſons who fancy they have had Inſpiration, diſtruſt Providence, 1119. B. Hears not the Sloathful, Ibid. Whether they that deny it are unfit to live in Society, 1186. C. ad in. In what Caſes are People always content with it, 1276. F. Its Decrees compaſs all Things, 1518. C. ad. med. People murmur againſt Providence, on account of the Proſperity of the Wicked, 1579. a. An Opinion which denies it, and even goes further than that of Epicurus, 1741. D. ad med. How it exalts and humbles Men at Pleaſure, 1882. b. The Evil Qualities of Men are often more uſeful to the accompliſhing the Deſigns of Providence than the Good, 2053. a. Whether it may be ſaid that Providence overturns Worldly Greatneſs purely to ſhew her Power, 2535. I. b. ad fin. Is queſtioned on account of the Proſperity of the Wicked, 2635. a. Providence conſider'd in one View is not proper to bring the Children of this World into the Ways of Virtue, 2775. a. How the Doctrine of Providence is capable of making us good, and comforting us in Diſtreſs, 2867. A. Blinds Men ſometimes, 2892. I They are accuſed of Raſhneſs by Cardinal Palavicini, who judge of the Providence of God, 100. b Provincial Letters of Mr. Paſchall, their Elogy, 2469. a. Several Facts concerning them, 2470. a. b.

Prudentius; in his Poem about the Origin of Sin, does not well anſwer the Objections of the Manicheans, 2167. b

Pſalms; the way of ſinging the Pſalms about the Time they were firſt put into Metre by Clement Marot in France, 2205. a. The Singing of Pſalms when firſt prohibited in France, ibid. b. Who was the firſt that ſet them to Muſick abroad, 206 a.

Puccianiſm; a very ſhort-liv'd Hereſy, 2521. b.

Puniſhments of Malefactors one of the beſt Arguments for the Liberty of Man, 26 9. b.

Purum Putum; its Signification, 180. a.

Puteanus (Ergeius) his extreme fondneſs for appearing in Print, 2521. b. Why he affected to write Little Books, ibid. The vaſt numbers of Letters written to him, and preſerved and kept by him in order.

Pyrenees (Treaty of) concluded without the Intervention of the Pope, upon a Miſunderſtanding between him and Mazarine, 957. b. The Limits of Ancient Gaul and Spain ſearched out in the Ancient Geographers, in execution of an Article of this Treaty, 2158. a Pyrrhoniſm (Hiſtorical); may ſtand it out againſt Solemn Oaths and Dying Proteſtations, 660. b. Confirmed by pretended publick Monuments, 694. b.

Pyrrhoniſts; The Doctrine of the Rigideſt Pyrrhoniſts favourable to Virtue, 351. a.

Pyrrhus; his Saying on the Death of his Son Ptolomy, ſlain in one of his Battels, 1001. a. Compar'd to a Gameſter who does not know how to make the beſt of a good Game, 928. a.

Pythagoras; his Rule about a Community of Goods, not ſo perfect as that which Epicurus eſtabliſh'd in his Society, 1186. b.

Pythian Oracles; in what kind of Verſe moſt uſefully given, 1263. b.

Pythionice; a Harlot, Servant to a Piper, and afterwards Miſtreſs to Harpalus; her Tomb in the Eleuſian Way was the fineſt Monument of Greece, 1581. a.

Q.

QUeſtion; a very Ancient one about the difference of the Word Stolidus in Saluſt, 293. b.

Quietiſts; The Agreement between their Opinions and thoſe of the Heathen Brachmans, 706. a. b. Their Monſtrous Notion of the Eſſential Union with God, diſtinguiſh'd by 'em according to the different States of Betrothing, Marriage, and Conſummation of the Marriage, ibid. b. 707. a.

Quotations; which requires the greater Genius, to compoſe with or without them, 1188. a. b. The way of Writing without Quotations from one's own Stock, and that of writing with abundance of Quotations, compared, 1188. a. Much affected by Plutarch, 1188. b. A falſe Quotation made on purpoſe to fix a horrible Blunder on Beza, 618. b. A ſtrange falſe Quotation of Salmaſius from Horace, 288. b.

R.

RAab (Battel of) The French keep a mighty ſtir with the part which they pretend they had in it, 1927. b. ad fin.

Rabbins; the reſemblance between the Style of their Relations, and thoſe of Rabelais, 500. a.

Rabelais; the Judgment of a Modern French Author on his Works, 2511. a.

Raderus, The Jeſuit, cenſured on his blaming the uſe of the word Numen to the Holy Virgin, 670. b.

Ragoo; Mahomet's Ragoo for fortifying the Reins, 2108. b.

Rainaud (Theophilus) calls himſelf Petrus Valleclauſa in ſome of his Works, 2320. a.

Ramus; had like to have been ſent to the Gallies by Francis I. for his Inſolence to Ariſtotle, 624. a.

Rapin (P.) an odd Blunder of his catch'd up and aggravated by Father Vavaſſour, 292, 293. a. A handſome Reflection of his, 478. a. Criticiz'd on his Account of the preſerving Ariſtotle's Works, 2901. a.

Ratisbonne; The Conference of Ratisbon for Reuniting the Lutherans and Papiſts, by whom ſet on foot, and how ended, 173. b.

Ravens (Two) One taught to Congratulate Auguſtus, and the other Mark Anthony, 503, a. n.

Ravillac; Whether he was mov'd to Aſſaſſinate King Henry IV. by reading Mariana's Book about the Lawfulneſs of Murdering Tyrants, 2180. b. 2183. a.

Real Preſence; by whom defended againſt Berengarius, 336. This Defence Printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, ibid. Phraſes made uſe of by Calvin in his Catechiſm, ſeem plainly to imply a Corporeal Real Preſence, 2703. a. n. The occaſion of them, ibid

Reaſon; is a deceitful Guide without the Aſſiſtance of God, 75. a. Sometimes overthrown and dethron'd in one of its Provinces, while it continues Maſter in others, 2170. b. A Reflection on the weakneſs and Duplicity of Humane Reaſon, 1671. a.

Rebels; Clauſes declaring Rebels to have acted for the King's Service, when firſt inserted in Treaties of Pacification in France, 2198. b. Reconciliation between the Lutherans and the Calviniſts, by the Influence of Guſtavus Adolphus, by whom fruſtrated, 1685. b.

Reformation in France; had been abſolutely deſtroyed by Francis II. if he had lived a little longer, 1617. N.

Reformations; how ſoon they riſe to perfection in Morals, and how ſoon degenerate, 1368. a. b. What gave many a diſguſt of it, 511. b. The Honour of the Reformation ſaves ſome of its Miniſters from publick Cenſures, 152. b. The Emulation between Charles V. and Francis I. how favourable to Reformation, 1351. a. Oppos'd in the beginning, by ringing the Town-Bells, upon the Preachers and the Monks ſtopping their People's Ears with raw Silk, 1283. a. The Project of a Reformation given in to the Council of Conſtance, by whom, 131. b. The Reformed Religion render'd odious to the Supreme Powers by the Millenarians, 2175. b.

Reformers; a witty Scandal upon the firſt Reformers, 819. a.

Refugees; hard to be contented, 70. a.

Regicides; encourag'd by the Example of Judith, 1785. a.

Regnier; what he ſays of Favour, 2302. a.

Relations; Hiſtorical Inſtances of their Progreſs and Improvement, from hand to hand, 921. b.

Relicks; ſeveral Cities in the Pagan Days boaſted of having the ſame Holy Relicks as they do now in our Days, 1006. a. The Occaſion of a Book written to prove, That the Spear which pierced our Saviour's Side, is a more precious Relick than the Seamleſs Coat, 2962. b. St. Jerom's Indignation againſt the Prieſt Vigilantius, who Condemn'd the Honour paid to the Relicks of Saints, 2963. b.

Religion des Hollandois, 2785. a.

Religion; The Conveniences and Inconveniences of a Diverſity of Religions, 1120. b. Brutes allow'd by ſome ancient Philoſophers, to have a Senſe of God and Religion, 2606. b. Made a pretence for giving no Quarter, 708. b. What the Religion of a Sovereign is, 103. a. 103. b. Neutrality in Religion, more ſhocking than a falſe Worſhip, 76. a. Great Revolutions in Religion may check Nature for a time, but the Spirit of Wealth and Honour will revert upon its Miniſters, 1006 b. Religion will not admit the Character of an Academick, (viz.) The ſhewing the ſtrong and the weak ſide of an Argument faithfully, 976. a. Mankind eaſily deceiv'd, and difficultly undeceiv'd in it, 99. a. All believe the Truth of their own Religion ſo evident, that they can't conceive how judicious Men can bring themſelves to die out of it, 296. b. Indifference in Religion, why it offends more than a falſe Worſhip, 76. a. Reſiſting high Offers to change one's Religion, how it is a Subject of Elogy, 639 a. The difference between it and a Woman's refuſing a Propoſal of Love and Preſents, 639 b. The Proportion between the preſent Extent of the Chriſtian, Mahometan, and Pagan Religions, all the World over, 2092. a. The difference betwixt the Religion of a Sovereign, as a Private Man, and as a Prince, 946. b. The Chriſtian Religion the only Syſtem to ſolve the Contrariety betwixt what we do, and what we know, 1597. a. Ample Offers made by Pere Audebert, a French Jeſuit, to the Proteſtants, toward a Reunion of Religion with the Roman Catholicks, 205. b. Religion more in danger by Ridicule, than ſerious Refutation, 627. b. A Maſs deſign'd for ending the Difference between the Two Religions, 511. Difference between the Religion of a King as a Private Man, and as a Prince, 946. b. Religion, according to ſome, the only difference between Men and Brutes, 2606. b. The Abſurdities of Religion are not to be remedied by Learning, 2684. It ſubjects Sovereigns to the People, but is far from ſubjecting the People to their Sovereigns, 7. a. Is not a Human Invention, ibid. The Diſputes about Religion are the cauſe of ſtrange Diſorders, 19. E. The early evil Preſage of this, ibid. The Policy of States durſt not truſt the ſupport of it to God alone, 72. B. Indifference in Matter of Religion very odious, ibid. G. Men are eaſily deceived by the Appearances of Religion, 101. a. Decays as it grows old, 176. A. ΔΔΔ. ad fin. Serves often for a Pretext to Informers, 245. a. They who make a Mock of Religion, are very prejudicial to youthful Minds, 627. B. ad fin. Whether it be Praiſing a Man, to ſay he reſiſted Temptations of changing his Religion, 639. b. ad fin. The Evil Cuſtom of Intereſting Religion in the Diſputes of the Learned, 776. b. We muſt not judge of its Goodneſs by the good or ill ſucceſs of a Battel, 754, 755. in Text. What Charron ſays of it, 958, 959. O. ad med. A Touch of the Parallel and Conformity between Religions, 961. in Text. A Man's witty Saying for or againſt Religion, does not plainly prove that he has, or has not any, 1105. N. People ſuffer Exile for it without forſaking their Vices, 1776. E. ad med. Inconveniences of Unity in Religion, 1820. Y. ad. fin. Diſputes in Holland concerning Religion, 1831. a. Maxims of a Latitudinarian on this Occaſion, 1898. b. There are Nations that have no Religion, 1917. Y. Whether great Revolutions in Religion ought to be imputed to the Conjunction of the Planets, or not? 2616. X. Δ. Falſe Religions in ſome reſpects, depreſs Men to the Condition of Beaſts, 2684. a. Some Men have their Religion in their Head, and not in their Heart, others have it all in their Heart, and none in their Head 2789. H. ad med. Euripides is brought into Trouble for leſſening Religion in one of his Plays, 1368. a. The greateſt Truths of Religion are by Strabo treated as if they were meer Fables, 705. Romance introduced into Religion by Superſtition 132.

Remedy for Madneſs, preſcrib'd by an Oracle for the Emperor Hadrian, 259 a.

Remond (Florimond de) the lowneſs of his Credit as a Hiſtorian, 822. b.

Reprobation; Spinoſa ſaid to have a Character of Reprobation in his Face. 2799. b.

Reproof; the bearing Reproof and Praiſe with Indifference, a Character of the higheſt Perfection, 629. b.

Republicks; apt to envy Men of a diſtinguiſh'd Merit. 1019. a.

Reputation; a high Reputation as dangerous under an ill Government as a bad one, 23. b.

Reſidence; Reaſons offer'd in the Council of Trent, for diſpencing with the Reſidence of Biſhops, 1772. b. A good Saying upon it of a Miſtreſs to her Gallant, who was a Prelate, 1161. a.

Reſurrection; an Eſſay of Cavalier Borry's towards a Reſurrection by Chymical Operations, 685. b. The Reſurrection of the Body ſuppos'd poſſible by Chryſippus, 982. b.

Revelations; Calvin commended for not meddling with them, 818. a. A Rock that all Fanaticks and Viſionaries ſtrike upon, 108. b.

Revenge; Neglecting Occaſions of gratifying our Revenge from a regard to Almighty God, a Worſhip more acceptable to Almighty God, than Prayer or Church Aſſiduity, 852 b.

Revolution; compar'd to falſe Miracles, 1159. a. One Revolution in a State paves the way to a ſecond, and that to a third, and ſo on, ibid. The Nature and Springs of State Revolutions, 1906. b.

Rhetoricians; expell'd Rome by a Law, 1278 Invited to Court by Corvinus King of Hungary, only to make them beg their way home again, 670. a.

Rhetorick; its Privileges almoſt as large as thoſe of Poetry and Painting, 306.

Rhime; The Benefit of having a Name that will fit in Rhime, 1264. a.

Richelet; his Letters the fineſt French Letters upon all kinds of Subjects, 2469. a. n.

Riches (Love of) and Dominion, not ſo ſtrong as the Love of Praiſe, 842. a.

Richlieu (Cardinal) trump'd up Bolſec's Slanders of Calvin, when the fierceſt Catholick Writers beſide him had rejected them, 666. a. His haughty Carriage to thoſe who belong'd to his Family, 713. b. What Lewis XIII ſaid to him the Day that Mareſchal d' Ancre was Aſſaſſinated, 1015 b Suſpected by the Court of Rome of deſigning to erect an Independent Patriarchate in France, 2155 a. His indefatigable Application to the Improvement of his Mind, 2168. b. A Paſſage in his Methode pour convertir, moſt injurious to the Memory of John Calvin, ſuppos'd to be foiſted in by the Publiſhers, 602. b. Makes a falſe Quotation, to fix a horrible Slander on Beza, 618. b. Form'd all his Schemes and politick Maxims from Barclay's Argenis, 493. a. Articles deſign'd to be exhibited againſt him, in order to his Diſgrace, one of which was his favouring the Proteſtants, 918. a. His Choice gives an advantageous Idea of the Perſon, 951. a. Backward in giving any thing to thoſe who ask'd, 1575. a. n. Exceeding liberal to the Muſes, 1421. His Endeavours to reconcile both Religions might have ſucceeded, if he had not dy'd ſo ſoon, 1302. a. Battels loſt in in his Miniſtry to ſpight him, and others ſent to court him, 1323. a. b. His Maxim, that Unfortunate and Imprudent are but two Words for the ſame thing, 1897. a.

Ridicule ; more dangerous to Religion than ſerious Refutation, 637. b. Ridiculous Pretences ſometimes made uſe of in Politicks, 43.

Right (Natural) not admitted by ſome Philoſophers, 119. b.

Ritual (Roman) Ceremonies of Abſolving Perſons Excommunicate, taken from the Practice of the Ancient Romans in the Enfranchiſing their Slaves, 694. a.

Rivet ; his Converſation with a Jeſuit about the Obſcenities in Sanchez, affectedly innocent and impertinent, 1669. b. Goes on a falſe Suppoſition to deſtroy the Story of Calvin's Devotion for St. Hubert, 819. a. A better Caſuiſt than St. Auſtin, in the Point of Adultery, 70. b.

Rochefoucault (Duke de) his Memoirs preferable to Cæſar's Commentaries, 930. b.

Rochelle ; An Account of a Comedy acted at Rochelle in the beginning of the Reformation, expoſing the Monks, and exalting the Hugonot Miniſtry, 1341. a.

Rohault ; his Explication of Tranſubſtantiation, according to the Carteſian Hypotheſis ſhewn to be faulty, 2122. a. Miſtaken in ſaying, that Hipparchus made no other Obſervation on the fix'd Stars, than that they had a Motion from Eaſt to Weſt, 1673. a.

Romance ; Writers of Modern Romances, how they differ from the Ancient Mythologiſts, 1676. b. Superſtition has introduc'd it into Religion, 132.

Rombouillet (Houſe of) The Court that met there preferr'd to that of the Louvre, 1422. b.

Rome (Ancient) why they concealed the Name of their Tutelar God, 2769 a. b. The Latin Name of Rome induſtriouſly concealed, and why, ibid. Its Citizens, who were made Free, took the Name of him who procured them that Honour, 470. b. What ſaid to be one of the Cauſes which ſhook its Empire, 521. a.

Rome ; ſaid to be the Seat of Antichriſt by Dante, and the Pope the Whore of the Revelations, 1051. b.

Rome (Biſhops of) their Luxury reprehended betimes, by a Pagan Hiſtorian, 2160. a.

Rome (Church of) the Ancient State, and that of the preſent Church of Rome, under the ſame Circumſtances, 110. b.

Rome (Court of) how it could condemn Janſenius, and preſerve St. Auſtin in all his Glory, 436. a. Its Avarice and Rapaciouſneſs, 1338. a.

Rome ; its Rejoicings upon the Death of Mahomet II. 2113. b The Difference between it and Ancient Rome in this Particular, of Rejoicing at the Death of an Enemy, ibid.

Rome (Church of) her Conduct much like that of Paganiſm on the account of Miracles, 67. a.

Romans ; The Ceremony uſed by the Ancient Romans in Tranſlating the Statues of the Gods and Goddeſſes from the Conquer'd Cities to Rome, 1816. b. What Rights they reſerved when they beſtow'd a Kingdom or Principality, 1007. a. Whether they ever ſent an Embaſſy to Alexander the Great, 2077 a Romiſh Religion ; its Intereſt ſacrificed by the Popes to their private Intereſt, as Sovereigns, 1172. a.

Romuald (St.) a ſtrange Blunder of his, 812. b.

Roquitaillade (John de la) a Fryar, and notable Apocalyptical-Prophecy-Expounder in the XIV. Century, 2601. His famous Apologue to ſhew that the Princes, who enrich'd the Church of Rome, ſhould ſtrip her in a ſhort time, 2602. b. He does not hold the Pope to be Antichriſt, 2603. b.

Roſe ; Romance of the Roſe, whoſe Work it is, 24. b. The Original of the Roſe according to the Turks, 2108. b.

Roſe (Roman de la) falſly aſcrib'd to Peter Abelard, 1601. a.

Roſni (Mr. de) tears the Contract of Marriage between Henry IV. of France, and one of his Miſtreſſes, before the King's Face, 2910. b.

Rufinus ; Favourite of the Emperor Theodoſius, a Deſcription of his Baptiſm reputed a Maſterpiece, 2628. a.

Rycaut (Sir Paul) Criticiz'd upon a Point about the Battle of Clauſemberg in his Hiſtory of the Turks, 285. a. Miſtaken in ſaying the Turkiſh Women have no hopes of Paradiſe, 1575. b.

Ryſwick (Treaty of) The Pariſians refuſed to make Bonfires for it, till forced by Menaces, 1636. b.

S.

Sacrifices (Heathen) when they ceaſed, and under what Emperor, 1775. a. Held uſeleſs by the Peripateticks, 362. b.

Sacrifices of Noble Youths in the Days of Hadrian and Heliogabalus, that their Entrails might be inſpected by the Magicians and Diviners, 471. a.

Sacrilege ; a Sophiſm, proving that all Thieves commit Sacrilege, and yet no Thief can commit it, 529. b.

Sadduces ; their Antiquity and Original, 1641. b. Confounded with the Samaritans, as to one Point, 1645. b. Caiphas ſuppos'd to have been a Sadducee, 1646. a. Whether they believed a Providence, 1645. b.

Sagittarius ; A Conjunction in Sagittarius on the 11th of December, 1662. never parallel'd but by the Conjunction in Aquarius, which preceded the Deluge, 2175. b. Suppoſed to have preſaged the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Millennium, by Serrius, and other Fanaticks, ibid.

Sainthibal ; a famous Unbeliever, complain'd that his Soul had not the Gift of Final Perſeverance, 627. b.

Saints ; Debated at Rome whether thoſe of the Old Teſtament ought to have the Worſhip of Canoniz'd Saints, and Altars erected to them, 1761. b. An odd Argument for the Invocation of Saints, 2385. a. There have been Saints of all Profeſſions, but that of an Attorney, 2467. b. Invocation of them practis'd a long time among the Jews, 1230. b. Invocation of Saints condemn'd anciently by the Paulicians, 2485. a. The Church miſrepreſented, as worſhipping the Saints as ſo many Divinities, ibid. The Honour paid to Saints condemn'd by the Prieſt Vigilantius, in the Vth Century, 2963. St. Jerom's Zeal for them, his Indignation and Invective on their ſcore againſt Vigilantius, ibid. b. The Patron Saint among the Catholicks of thoſe who have the Pox, 2761. b.

Sales (Francis de) his Advice to the Pope and Cardinals, ſtops the Deſign of Aſſaſſinating Beza, 6 3. a.

Salmacis ; a Fountain that rendred thoſe who drank of it Effeminate ; The Moral of this, 2660 a.

Salmaſius ; his Notion of the Obſcurity of the Scriptures, 1229 a.

Salmaſius ; a ſtrangely falſe Quotation of his from Horace, 288. b. Sadly puzzled by the Title of one of the Emperor Hadrian's Books, 1556. a.

Salt ; The Præternatural Quality of the Salt of Agrigentum in Sicily, 1464 b.

Salvian ; his Opinion touching the Impurities of the Stage —— a lively Idea given in the modeſteſt Terms of the Impurities of the ancient Stage in Rome, 2669. b.

Saluſt ; A very ancient Queſtion about the difference of the Words Stolidus and Vanus in him, 293. b. Tax'd with Affectation in retaining old Terms, and of the contrary in coining new, 49. b. n

Sampſon ; A Diſſertation, ſhewing that the Scripture-Phraſe, that the Philiſtines made Sampſon grind, ſignifies, That they made him lye with their Wives, to get a Breed of brave Men, 2666. b. 2667. a.

Sanchez ; King of Caſtile —— An Exception to Saluſt's Maxim concerning Uſurpers, 901. a.

Sanchez (Thomas) reckons the looking at one's Nudity a Venial Sin, and the looking at the Nudity of others a Mortal Sin, 88. b.

Sanctuaries, and Privileg'd Places in the Roman Empire, enquir'd into and reduc'd, 2522. a.

Sannazar ; A bitter Invective of his againſt Leo X. 1909. a.

Sappho ; Authors divided about her Beauty, 2672. How Plato is to be underſtood when he ſtiles her the Wiſe, ibid. Criticiſms upon the Epithet Maſcula, as apply'd to Sappho by ſome of the Ancient Poets, 2671. b. Original Medals of Sappho ſtill extant, 2673. a.

Sarah ; her Diſſembling commended by the Fathers, 29. b. Her Conduct towards Agar, an Argument with St. Auſtin for Perſecution, 97. a.

Sardinia ; reckon'd a deſolate unhealthy Iſland in the Romans Days, whether State-Offenders were frequently baniſh'd, 879. b.

Sarracens ; a ſtrange Example of a Sarracen's Eſteem for the Valour of his Enemy, 715. b. Honour'd the Stone as a Relick, on which Agar granted Abraham the laſt Favour, 98.

Satyr ; An Inſtance of its Terrible and Tragical Effects, 331.

331. a. Its Tragical Effects on ſeveral Perſons, 1675. a. As ſubject to the Laws of Right Reaſoning as the Graveſt Writings, 2187. a. Satyrs want to be commented upon by Contemporaries to their Authors, 1581. b. Satyrical (Writings) grew obſcure, 57. Satyrical Republican Pamphlets— when firſt burnt in Rome, 883. a Satyrical Deſcription of the French Ladies Naked Breaſts in the XVI. Century, 1050. a.

Satyriſts Should lay out a great deal of Money on Spies, 585. b

Savaron; a Miſtake of his in ſuppoſing, That Democritus and Epicurus held that God was the Efficient, and the Atoms the Material Cauſe of the World, 211. b

Savoy; (Duke of) his Treacherous Invaſion of the Marquiſate of Salluces, 1623 a. The Medal ſtruck by him on that Occaſion anſwered in Coin by Henry IV. ibid. b.

Sayings; Wiſe Sayings appear with different Views according to the Degrees of the Hearers Senſe: How People may be too ſilly to be deceiv'd by them, 2737 a. Fine Sayings, the Reaſon why they are ſo variouſly related, 236. a. Saying of an Italian as he was dying of the Pox, 1334 b. A Fine Saying of Cardinal Mazarine, 478 a Fine Sayings of wonderful uſe in Human Life, 357 a b.

Scaliger; The Father— his Spirit of Contradiction, 857. a. Maintained againſt Cardan, and all the Poets, that a Parrot was an ugly Bird, ibid.

Scaliger; (Joſeph) thought no Man worthy his Good Word, 818 His Raſh Judgment of Bellarmin, 565. a. His Senſe of the Chronology of Scripture, 597. a. His Pretended Nice Taſte of the Style of the Ancient Latin Authors fairly diſprov'd, 2914 a.

Scaliger; (Julius) his Indignation againſt Gabriel Attilius, who ſlighted the Muſes when he got a Mitre, 187 b. Conjectures at the Cauſe of his Error in calculating the weight of the Coloſſus of Rhodes, 910. a. b.

Scamander; Contrary Modern and Anciet Authorities about the Bigneſs of this River, 2684. b.

A Witty Scandal upon the firſt Reformers, 819. a Scandalous and Flagitious Perſons provided for in a City Built by a Macedonian King for that purpoſe, 806. a.

Scanderberg; his Siege of Belgrade, the moſt unſucceſsful of all his Enterprizes, 2331. b.

Schauartz; (Berthold) a German— ſaid to be the firſt who put Fire-Arms in practice, 147. b.

Schiſms; the beſt Means of preventing them, 553. b. Schiſms in Lutheraniſm for the firſt Fifty Years not above Ten or Twelve, 1751. b.

Scholars; their horrible Inclination to Debauchery, 113. b.

Schomberg; (M.) prevents Henry IIId*'s Deſign of declaring the Son of the Duke of* Lorrain for his Succeſſor, 8627. b.

Scioppius; (Gaſpar) his Picture in Miniature, from Mr. Baillet, 2698. a. His Bitter Satyr againſt King James I. of England, 2523, b. Who ſuſpected to be the Author of it—upon its coming out, 2524. a. He acts the Divine ridiculouſly about a Point of Fortune, 978. a.

Scotiſts; their Doctrines of Univerſals, Diſguiz'd Spinoziſm. 19. b. Their Doctrine of Univerſals agreeable to the Chimara of Spinoziſts, 927, a.

Scotland forces the French to capitulate at Leith, and for ever to quit it, 722. in Tex. ad fin. The French render'd themſelves very odious in Scotland, Ibid.

Scribere; a Criticiſm on the Word, ſhewing that it imported publiſhing ones Works, 274 b.

Scripture; the Rule to be taken where Scripture is alledged to maintain Contrary Opinions, 2664 b. Scripture alone ſufficient to refute the Hypotheſis of two Principles, and all the Objections of the Manicheans and Zoroaſter, 2152. b. A Doctrine which attacks the Authority of the Holy Scripture, 83. D. ad med. Whether it furniſhes Materials and Principles for all kinds of Arts and Sciences, 85. in Tex. Whether the reading of it has not been interdicted by the Laicks, according to the Spirit of the Church of Rome, 385, 385 O Δ ad med. The Simplicity of the Style diſguſts St. Auſtin, 434, 435. in Tex. ad B. It's Interpretation ought to be accommodated to the Times, according to ſome Controvertiſts, 478. H. Whether its Divinity may not be proved, 545. C. ad in. Not ſo obſcure in Salmaſius's Judgment as Eſchylus, 1259. N. Unworthily treated by ſome Roman Catholick Doctors, 1703. A thought of the Hiſtorian Matthieu about the manner of teaching it, 1730. E. ad in. The manner in which a Viſionary would have it read to the People, 1849. A. There are Things in it capable of unhinging all Metaphyſicks, 2597. b. What Libertines ſay of the Spirit which dictated it, 1684. c ad med.

Seamleſs; Coat of our Saviour, 1965. b.

Sectaries; hate one another more in the beginning than the Stock from whence they ſeparated, 108. a.

Sects; not governed by a Principle of Authority, muſt neceſſarily be divided into ſeveral Branches, 241. How much Sects ſuffer by Apologiſts of imaginative conceited Wits, 974 b. Each Sect aſcribes all the Objection made againſt themſelves to Fleſh and Blood, 544. b Compar'd to Man, who is only innocent in the Cradle, 177. b. In Thirty or Forty Years very unlike their Founder, 88 a. How ſeveral Sects of Chriſtians charge each other with making God the Author of Sin, 2490. a.

Selym; Emperor of the Turks, preſented the Picture of a Battel won by him, and painted by his own Hand, to the Senate of Venice, which is ſtill kept by them, 2327. a. His Epitaph deſigned to out-do that of Mahomet, 112, 117. b. n.

Senault; (Pere) his Fine Deſcription of Baniſhment, 1635. b.

Seneca; a Groſs Miſtake of his about Ariſtides, 357. a. In what Senſe he allows that Jupiter darts his Thunderbolts, 1036. b. Either forgot, or did not know there was ſuch a Book as Phædrus's Fables, 1236. b. The Uſe he makes of a Thought of the Poet Agatho, 100. a. b Would ſay, That the Romans had never apply'd themſelves to compoſe Fables, 1236. b. Why he would never endeavour to pleaſe the People, 351. a.

Senef; There were Battels of Senef among the Ancient, where both ſides claim'd the Victory, 1276. a Sens; (Council of), 1140. Made Deciſions in their Cups, 582. A Deſcription of their Good Fellowſhip by Berengarius, 583. a.

Senſes; The Pleaſure of the Senſes, or Senſual Pleaſure of a Spiritual Nature, and Bodily only by accident, 1191. a. Inſtances of thoſe who have loſt their Judgment and Common Senſe, with regard to ſome Particular Things, whilſt they have been entire and excellent, with regard to all others, 2915.

Sentences and Fine Sayings of wonderful uſe in Human Life, 357. a. b Books of Sentences, whether that burnt under the Name of Peter Abelard be the ſame with that of Peter Lombard, 586. a.

Sermons; The extraordinary Effects and Power of a Sermon, 2332. b. Seditious Sermons preached by Fryar Ponet againſt Henry the IIId. of France, 1626. b. Not ſo powerful over the Ladies of France, as a Hint from Lewis XIV. 1017. a.

Serpents; an Affectation of ſeveral of the greateſt Perſons of Antiquity to be thought to have ſprung from the Embraces of Serpents, 2405. a. A particular Sect of Hereticks who had a great veneration for Serpents, and very Blaſphemous Thoughts about them, 1251. A ridiculous Notion of Paracelſus about the Nature of Serpents, 1251. a.

Severity; Hereditary in the Family of the Caſſii in Rome, 875. a.

Severus; what his chief Conſideration was in chooſing a Wife, 1795. b. Why he bore the Adulteries of his Wife with ſo much Patience, 1797. a.

Sextus Empiricus; his Inſtance to ſhew that the Common Practice is not founded on an Immutable Law of Nature, 1670. b.

Sforza; (Bonna) Widow of Sigiſmond King of Poland, her Lewd Letter, and finely deſcribed by Thuanus, 314, 315. a.

Sforza; The Original of this Sir-Name, 2721. a. n.

S F.

Sforza (Lewis) his Wickedness and Cruelty to his Nephew John Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, 312. b. 313. b.

Shame; The power of Shame stronger than the fear of a Gibbet, 2476 b.

Siam; alledg'd as an Instance, that the Belief of God's Existence, without the Belief of a Providence, is an Inducement to Vertue, 2764. a. b. A short System of their Theology, 2765, 2766. b. 2767. a.

Siamese; believe Spirits, and the Immortality of the Soul, without acknowledging the Existence of a God, 2634. a.

Sickness; Nothing has been the Subject of more false Reports, than the Sickness and Death of Illustrious Men, 68. a.

Silence; equally a Sign of Guilt and Innocence, 603. b.

Silenus; his Thought of Human Happiness, 2927. a.

Silk; a Pound of it in the Emperor Aurelian's Days, worth a Pound of Gold, 441. b.

Simon (Father) his Judgement of Calvin's Commentaries on the Bible, 818 a. A Despiser of St. Austin's Commentaries, 436. b. Preferr'd St. Chrysostom's Interpretation to his, 437. a. His Opinion of Leo Allatius, 183.

Simplicius; his Thought of the Question about the Origin of Evil, 2498. b.

Sin; ascrib'd to an incorrigible Vice in Matter thereby to clear God from being the Author of it, 978. b. How the several Sects of Christians charge each other with making God the Author of Sin, 2490. a. What Answer is to be made to those who ask, Why God permitted Man to Sin, 2495. b.

Sisters; their hatred greater than that of Brothers, 491. b.

Sixtus V. his bitter Satyr on Henry III. of France, 1625. b. Envy'd Queen Elizabeth the felicity of being able to strike off a Crown'd-Head, 1772. a. Cross'd the Designs of the King of Spain against her, ibid.

Slavery; how some Towns of Italy fell into Slavery, by too industriously endeavouring to avoid it, 2714. a.

Smell; knowing by the smell whether an accused Person be Guilty or Innocent, a Test of the Messiah, according to the Jews, 501, 540. b.

Smithfield; The Price of Wood raised by the Executions in Smithfield, 213. a n.

Smut; Valentinian, tho' a chast and vertuous Emperor, lov'd a smutty Jest, 450. b.

Society; Disturbers an Essential Part of it, 641. a.

Socinianism; why Princes are never likely to embrace this Sect, 2757. a The Jansenists and Abbots, and in general all the French Nation clear'd from all Suspicions of Socinianism, 2762. a. b. 2764. a.

Socinians; Their settled Doctrine, that it is not lawful to take up Arms against one's Prince, 2755. b. Yet praise in the Hollanders a Conduct which their Founder Socinus had expresly and particularly condemn'd, 2756. a. Their Tenets concerning the Souls of Brutes, the Degrees of Reason and Liberty in them, 2607. a. Their denying God the Prescience of Contingent Events, does not remove the Difficulties they propos'd by it, 2490. a. By the same Principles on which they reject the Gospel-Mysteries, they are constrain'd to deny the Creation of the World out of Nothing, 1198. a. Some of them have turn'd Spinozists, upon the Difficulties of conceiving a Material Principle, self-existing and distinct from God, ibid. b.

Socrates; his Answer to a Question of Faith of the Pagan Religion, 681. b. Returns Presents from three Great Princes, and refuses to visit them, because he thought them worthless Persons, 324. b. His requiring demonstrative Proof, that each particular Body in the Universe is in the best State it could possibly be in, shewn to be unreasonable, 237. a. b. 238. a. His Answer to a young Man, who desir'd his Advice about Marrying, 224. b. The wicked Courses of two of his Disciples, Alcibiades and Critias, one of the Grounds of the popular Prejudice against him, 1034. a. How vindicated by Xenophon on this Point, ibid. His Advice to his Disciples, with regard to Women, 1327. b. The reason of his turning Æsop's Fables into Verse after his Condemnation, 1233. b. Surpriz'd by Alcibiades as he was playing with his Children, 234. a.

Sodomy; Whether the Petition said to be deliver'd to Sixtus IV. for the Commission of Sodomy during the 3 hot Months of the Year, and granted by him, is a Fact that a prudent Writer against Popery might alledge, 2746. a. b. It's Punishment by Justinian's Laws, 1336 a.

S O.

Soissons (Council of) the reason of their Condemning Peter Abelard without hearing him, 583. a.

Soliman (the Magnificent) his Kindness to the Infant Son of Isabella, Queen of Hungary, and his Respect for the Queen, 1728. a. b.

Solipses; a Name for those Communions, who believe themselves alone in the way of Salvation, 408. b.

Solitaries; their Humane Figure alter'd in time, as their Sentiments, 88. a. Their insensibility to Women, ibid.

Solon; his Answer to a Comforter, who told him his Tears for his Son's Death were insignificant, 1335. b.

Soothsayers; All the Natives of a certain City in Asia born with natural Dispositions to Soothsaying, 146. Of old as necessary in an Army as a General, 808.

Sophism; a strange one about Sacrilege, 629. a.

Sophists; not allow'd to plead Civil Causes in Athens, 2709. a.

Sophisters; the Character and Practice of the ancient Rhetorician Sophisters, 975. b.

Sophocles; his Answer to all those who would know, why the Characters of the Women in all his Plays were good, and those in Euripides's all bad, 1265. a. Wherein he excell'd Euripides, 1263. a. b. The difference between the Characters of his Plays, and those in the Plays of Euripides, 1265. a.

Soracte (Mount) sent forth a Vapour fatal to Birds, 1677. a.

Sorbon; its Censures of the Book of Mary d' Agrada too mild, 109. a. Books upon this Censure, ibid. They durst not publish it without a Preservative 110. a. Charg'd with selling their Opinion in favour of Henry the VIIIth's Divorce, 119 b.

Sovereign; what is his Religion, 103. a. 103. b. One main Article is to caress Hereticks abroad, and persecute them at home, 556. a.

Souls; The Immateriality of the Souls of Beasts, and their being by Nature as Immortal as the Human Soul, by whom maintain'd, 2712. b. How this Doctrine was received, ibid. & 2713. a. Soul of Man, its Essence according to most of the Ancient Philosophers, 1827 a. Whether the Immortality of the Soul was taught by Aristotle, 361. b. 365. a. The Doctrine of the Propagation of the Soul, how long it subsisted in the Church, 269. b. Whether St. Austin admitted a Spiritual Substance and Soul in Brutes, 2614. b. The Antiquity of the Opinion, That Brutes have Rational Souls, 2605. b. The Immortality of the Soul oppugn'd, in a Book expresly written against it by Acosta, 73. The Imperfection of the Soul ascrib'd to an incorrigible Vice in Matter, to clear God from being the Author of Sin, 978. b. Chrysippus's Comparison of the rolling of a Cylinder, insufficient to acquit Fate from the Defects of the Soul, 978. a. Human Souls-----, how dispos'd of after they leave their Bodies, according to the Cynicks, 2515. a. The Opinion of the Stoicks, particularly Seneca, concerning the Essence of all Souls, whether Human or Brutal, and the Properties of the latter, 2516. b. The Intellectual Soul the same in all Men, according to Averroes, and distinct from the corruptible Soul, 427. b. Different Kinds and Characters of a strength of Soul, 956. a. Arguments for its Spirituality, weakned by the distinction between Bodies and Extension, according to some Peripatetick Protestants, 955. a. n. How it may suffer the Pains of a Real Fire in a State of Separation, 1191. b. The Antiquity of Mr. Descartes's Opinion about the Soul of Brutes, 2516, a. Souls of Brutes are but Images or Simulacres of the Rational Soul, according to the Doctrine of Plato, 2520. a. Immortality of the Soul learnt by the Jews from the Greeks, and not the Greeks from them, according to one Doctor's Opinion, 2641. b. What the Stoicks attributed the Imperfections of the Soul of Man to, 978. b. A Sensible Demonstration of the Separation of the Soul from the Body, 2337. a.

Sozomen; convicted by Baronius of Stupidity, 1219 b.

Spain; its Zeal in rewarding those who wrote against France, upon its making Alliances with Protestant States, how contrary to its own Conduct in after-times, 1738. a. The reasonable Offers it made to the Low-Countries, 1374. a. Why rejected by the Prince of Orange, ibid. The Aſcendancy of its Genius over that of France in the Reign of Lewis XII. and Alphonſo I. of Naples, 2329. a. How Milan came to be annexed to it, 2723. a. b. 2724. b.

Spanheim; what Judgment may be made of his and Mareſius's Hiſtory of Pope Joan againſt Blondel, 637. a.

Spanheim (Frederick) wrote in defence of the Hiſtory of Pope Joan againſt Blondel, 637. a.

Spaniards; ſhamefully protected and rewarded thoſe who made Panegyricks on the Murderers of Kings, 696. b. Had generally the better of France in Treaties of Peace, 1636. a.

Sparta; The Executioners here would not obey the Order of putting their Kings to death, 213. b. See Lacedemon.

Spear; that pierced our Saviour's Side, 2961. b.

Speech; uttered without a Tongue, 925. b.

Spinoza; his Syſtem and Notion of a Deity agreeable to that of Thales and Anaximenes, 1856. b. No Syſtem built on mere Reaſon can leſs diſpenſe with the Suppoſition of Good and Bad Angels, 927. a. The abſurdity of his Notion of God equal to that of the Heathen Divinities, 105. a. A Liſt of thoſe who have held the ſame Opinions that he has vented, 2782. a b. & ſeq. A Liſt of thoſe who have confuted him, 2789. a. b. 2794. b. God and Extenſion are the ſame Thing according to him, 2790. a. His Shifts and Equivocations, ibid. He deprives us of a Principle without which there is no ſuch Thing as Reaſoning, 2804. b. Whether he had any ground to deny the Exiſtence of Fantoms, 2796. M. Said to have had a Character of Reprobation in his Face, 2799. b.

Spinoſiſts; no Syſtem ſo neceſſarily ſuppoſes the Exiſtence of Intelligences as theirs, 808. a. Frighted at a Conſequence from their own Hypotheſis, 982. a.

Spirit; who was the firſt of the Heathen Philoſophers that admitted a Spirit diſtinct from the Body, 1827. a.

Spoleto; (Theobaldus Marquis of) his way of Treating the Priſoners taken by him in a War with the Greeks, 1336. b. The Expoſtulation of one of his Priſoner's Wives againſt his Caſtrating War, 1337. a.

Staff of St. Polycarp grown into a Wild Cherry-Tree, now to be ſeen at the Gate of the Fortreſs of Smyrna, 1647. b.

Stage; very ſerviceable in the introducing the Reformation in England and the Low-Countries, 2690. b. The Stage in Athens not permitted to vend Immoral or Irregular Maxims, 1268. b. Salvian's Opinion touching the Impurities of the Stage, 2669. A Lively Idea given in the Modeſteſt Terms of the Impunities of the Stage of Ancient Rome, ibid.

Stars; feigning the Souls of Departed Perſons to be changed into New Stars, a Flattery common to the Greeks and Romans, 272. b. 273. a. In what Country People began firſt to conſider the Stars, and make Obſervations upon them, 1407. Whether we ought to attribute to them any part in the great Revolutions of Religion, 2616. X △. Who firſt diſcover'd the fix'd Stars to have a Motion from Eaſt to Weſt, 1673. a.

State; (a Future) aſſerted by a Perſon's appearing after Death according to Promiſe, 668. b. Abuſes in the State in many Peoples Opinion better tolerated than Remedies apply'd which may endanger the Conſtitution, 897. a. State-Offenders, to what Place baniſh'd by the Romans, 879. b. State-Revolutions, one paves the Way for a Second, and that for a Third, and ſo on, 1559. a. The Nature and Springs of them, 2960. b.

Stoicks; What they attributed the Imperfections of the Soul of Man to, 978. b. They were the Phariſees of Paganiſm, 1190. Their Doctrine touching Fate made God the Author of Sin, 972. B. ad med. & ad fin. They are very ſolidly confuted by Plutarch in their Opinion about the uſefulneſs of Vice, 2492. a. They and the Peripateticks diſputing about the Nature of Pain, is a mere Diſpute about Words, 1611. a.

Stone; a Stone fal'n from Heaven, 234. a. The black Stone worſhipp'd at Mecca, 98. b. The cauſe of its turning black, 99. a.

Stories told ſeveral ways, tho' the ſame Stories; and father'd on ſeveral Perſons by Plutarch, 1226. a.

Stouppe; A French Miniſter of the Savoy in London, afterwards a Brigadier-General in the Service of France, and kill'd at the Battel of Steinkirk, 1785. a. Author of a Book Entitled, Religion des Hollandois, ibid.

Strabo; treats the greateſt Truths of Religion as Fables, 705. Of Opinion, that Legiſlators ſhould adopt the Tales of Poets as neceſſary for imprinting Religion in the Minds of the People, 1235. a.

Strada (Famianus) The Low-Country Editions of his Hiſtory varied from the Italian Editions in ſome places, in favour of ſome Illuſtrious Families, 150. a. His Judgment on Q. Curtius, preferr'd to that of Cardinal Perron, 1536. a. He and Lipſius Criticize Cornelius Tacitus, on a Point of the Roman Hiſtory, 837. a.

Strasburg; The New Jeruſalem, according to the Prophecies of the Anabaptiſts, 1689. b. The Indulgence of the Magiſtrates of Strasburg, for Maids who are got with Child, 176. b.

Stratagem; none more ſecure than the General's ſpreading a ſincere Report of his Deſign, 102. a.

Stile; Inſtances of the Illuſions of Proofs drawn from the Conformity of Stiles, 1216. b.

Subjects; Extraordinary Services turn to their Ruin, more thro' their own Ignorance than the Ingratitude of Princes, 1154. b. Subjects in France at this time more enſlav'd, and quieter than ever heretofore, 1021. A.

Subſtantial Forms; A Reflection on this Doctrine, 106. Inexplicable Difficulties in this Doctrine, 1437. a. Into how many Abſurdities it leads thoſe who maintain it, 2259. a. Pernicious Conſequences that may be drawn from it, 3061. a.

Succeſs; of great Affairs, owing as much to the Faults of one Party, as to the Prudence of the other, 454. a.

Suetonius; can't be deny'd the Character of a good Abbreviator, 2398. a. The Intervals and Diſtinctions of Events do not always appear in his Works, ibid.

Suicide; They who had committed it, were by the Heathen Religion refuſed a Funeral Pile, as by the Chriſtian Church they are refuſed Chriſtian Burial, 128. b. A Book ſhewing that there are Thirty Four Caſes, in which a Man may innocently commit Suicide, 2647. a.

Suidas; full of incompatible Intricacies, 1233. b.

Sun; by whom firſt diſcover'd to give light to the Moon, 1407. The Opinion of the Motion of the Earth round the Sun, conſtrued Irreligion among the Ancient Greeks, 348. b.

Superſtition; has introduc'd Romance into Religion, 132.

Supper (Lord's) how call'd in the beginning by the Hugonots. 2335. b.

Swans; The Reaſon of their Singing at Death, 2337. b. Why Tranſlated into a Cœleſtial Sign, 1592. b.

Swiſs-Cantons; The Title of Defenders of the Eccleſiaſtical Liberty given 'em by Julius II. 1789. a.

Switzerland (Ambaſſadors of) their free manner of Expoſtulating with the Treaſurers of France, upon the Management of Sums due to them, 1622. b.

Sword; A Naked Sword ſtuck in the Ground, worſhipp'd by the Alains, 1401. b.

Sybilline Books; The Reaſon of Flatterers for not conſulting them, 442. b.

Sylla; by what Means he came to know the Lewdneſs of his Wife Metella, 1601. b

Sylveſter II. (Pope) ſollicited by the Poles for the Title of King under the Reign of Boleſlaus, only ad majorem cautelam, 662. b.

Sylvius (Æneas) his judicious Reflection on the force of Vain-Glory, 842. a.

Synergiſts; A Party among the Lutherans, who ſtickled againſt the rigider ſort for the Rights of Human Liberty, 1784. a.

Synods; how their Sentences or Condemnations are obtain'd, 551. a.

Syſtem; of a pre-eſtabliſh'd Harmony between the Soul and Body of Animals examin'd and diſcuſs'd, 2615. a. b.

T.

Tacitus (Cornelius) Criticiz'd by Lipſius and Strada on a Point of the Roman Hiſtory, 837. a.

Tales (Merry) an Apology for the ſeeming Obſcenities of them, 1194. b. 1195. a.

Taliſman; A Taliſman engraved on the Door of the Shambles of Toledo, to keep out the Flies, 1647. a.

T A.

Talmud ; the vast Expence of printing it, 666. b.

Tanaquillus Faber ; criticis'd on his Account of Anacreon, 522. b.

Taſſo ; (Torquato) cenſur'd on his maintaining from his Paſſion for Eleonora d' Eſte, that Charity was the Virtue of only ordinary Women, 2328. b. His Opinion, That Morality was not a Poet's Object, but barely diverting the Reader, 899. b.

Tekely ; (Count) the Intrigues between him and the Court of France, how and by whom carried on, 136. b.

Telemachus ; martyred for interpoſing to ſtop the Gladiators in the heat of their Exerciſe, 183. a.

Tennis ; by whom ſuppoſed to have been invented, 2328. a.

Terebinthus ; the Fair held there the Ancienteſt in the World, 500. a. The Reaſon of the Horror the Jews have for that Fair, 499. b.

Terence ; who is the Author of the Verſes which ſtand before his Comedies, 293. a.

Terra Auſtralis ; an Account of its Inhabitants, their Manners and Religion, 2639. a. b. Who is the true Author of this Account, 2641. a.

Tertullian makes uſe of the Story of Achilles's curing Cleonymus in a Dream, and divers other Facts of that kind, againſt the Epicureans, who would acknowledge nothing Supernatural in Dreams, 65. b. His miſtakes about the Time of Marcion's coming to Rome, 2162. a. Why the Atheiſtical Notions advanced in Marcus Varro's Books were judg'd more dangerous than ordinary by Tertullian, 255. a.

Teſticles ; a Treatiſe proving that a Man may be a ſufficient Husband without any Viſible Teſticles, highly commended for its Wit and Learning, 2530. b. to 2533.

Teſtament ; of Mahomet, being a Concordat between the Mahometans and Chriſtians prov'd to be a Forgery, 2103. b.

Teſtament ; (New) James le Fevre's Judgment on the Greek and Vulgar Editions of the ſeveral Books of the New Teſtament, 1315. b.

Texts of Scripture of our Saviour's being Three Nights and Three Days in the Bowels of the Earth, whimſically ſolv'd by Veleuſiota, 1110. a.

Thales ; explain'd the Generation of the World without the Direction of a Divine Intelligence, 1826. b.

Theagenes and Clericlea ; a Romance criticis'd upon, 1599. a.

Theft ; all manner of Thefts allow'd in Ancient Egypt, 359. b.

Themiſtocles ; prais'd by his Countrey for putting the Greek to death, who durſt interpret the Imperious Command of the Perſian Ambaſſadors, 996. b.

Theodoſius repealed a Cuſtom of puniſhing Adultery, which was worſe than the Sin, 456. b.

Theognis ; his Reaſon for preferring Death to Poverty, 630. a.

Thevathat ; the Name of a Subordinate Deity among the Siameſe, Brother to their Supreme Deity, 2766. b. Why they take him to be the ſame with Jeſus Chriſt, 2767. a. n.

Thevet ; a French Cordelier, juſtifies Anne Bullen's Innocence, in his Coſmographie Univerſelle, 660. a.

Thiſtie ; (Hundred-headed) reckon'd a moſt powerful Philtre amongſt the Ancients, 2672. b.

Thomaſſin (Pere) a very fine Thought of his about the ſeeming Ignorance of the Ancient Philoſophers, as to the Exiſtence and Providence of a God, 231. a. Of Opinion that the Neſtorian, Iſene and other Hereſies, would have overſpread the World, but for the Authorities of the Emperors and Imperial Laws, 2562. a.

Thomaſius ; a Correction of his in the Text of Lactantius prov'd to be a falſe and wrong Correction, 277. a.

Thomiſts ; their Phyſical Predetermination perfecting the Liberty of the Will, not comprehended even by themſelves, 2167. It overthrows St. Baſil's Anſwer to the Manicheans, 2168.

Thou ; (Mr. de) laments his having been oblig'd to follow Bucanan for want of having Cambden's Inſtructions about the Affairs of Scotland and England, 830. a. His Averſeneſs to the ſpeaking of Latin, 2406. a. His Judgment on Amyot's Verſion of Plutarch, 201. b.

T H.

Thucidides ; his Conciſe Sententious Style followed by few or none of his Contemporaries, 1036. b. Hobbs's Deſign in tranſlating him, 1677.

Thule ; of the Ancients falſly ſuppoſed by ſome to be Iſland, 1677. b.

Thunder ; its falling on Tombs look'd upon as a glorious Accident to the Deceas'd among the Ancient Greeks, 1266. b.

Tiberius ; what he envy'd in Priam, 2143. a. Stifled by Macro's Orders, his Captain of the Guards, after he had recover'd from a Fit, in which he had been look'd upon as dead, 3087. Expell'd all the Jews from Rome on a Sacrilegious Fraud of a few, 1173. b.

Timotheus ; his Anſwer upon his being reproached with his Mother's Incontinency, 1020. a.

Timotheus, the Muſician, his reproaching Archelaus, King of Macedon, with Stingineſs as he ſings to his Lute, and Archelaus's Anſwer to him, 315. a.

Title ; of Conquerors renounc'd by Perſecutors, 1614. b. Title of Antiſtites, given ſometimes to Simple Prieſts, 2705. b. Title of Divine given to Peter Aretin, which no Writer before him had but Plato, 338. b. Montaign's Reflection on it, ibid.

Tobacco ; why call'd Santa Croce in Italy, 2658.

Toleration ; the Arguments for Toleration ſaid to be unanſwerable, and the principal Books on this Subject named, 2660. a. An Anſwer to the Charge of thoſe who pretend that all who are for a Toleration favour the Socinians, ibid. Arguments againſt it, why compar'd to the Invention of Bombs and Carcaſſes, 609. a. The Toleration given by the Mahometans compar'd with that given by the Chriſtians, 2103. a.

Tongue ; a Remarkable Paſſage of a Boy who ſpit out his Tongue in Coughing, and ſpoke as well after as he did before, 925. b. Speech uttered without a Tongue, 925. b.

Topknots ; (Womens) a Collection of Curious Learning about their Antiquity, where to be found, 260. b.

Torments ; (Hell) the Eternity of them cloſes with Reaſon, and with the Ideas of Infinite Goodneſs, 2760. b.

Torricellius ; the Invention of his Phyſical Experiments, by whom claim'd, and falſly pretended to, 2090.

Tortellius ; Two Memorable Inſtances of his Plagiariſm, 337. b.

Traditions ; attribute Natural Properties of what kind to Miraculous Cauſes, 1823. a. The Diſagreement of the ancient Fabulous Traditions, 353. b. Traditions kept up for Ages together, without the leaſt Proof but the Vogue of a prejudic'd deſigning Party, 830. b. Tradition a ſufficient Argument of the Exiſtence of a Deity, according to Plutarch, 1269. a. An Inſtance of the Folly of Traditions preſerved in great Families, 2916, 2921. a. Fabulous Traditions in ſome great Families, 1134. A.

Tragedies ; He that has a Genius to write Tragedies, is of courſe a Maſter of Comedy, 99. b. A Definition of Tragedy, 2737. a. Controverſies againſt the Roman Catholicks, written by way of Tragedy, and repreſented in ſome Towns of Germany, 2320. a.

Tranſlating ; in what Caſes eaſy, and what difficult, 2704. a.

Tranſlations ; the different Judgments about the Tranſlations of Ariſtotle's Works, 344. a. b.

Tranſlators ; ought never to change the Senſe of the Original, 629. a. Sowers of Diſcord, why, 163. a.

Tranſubſtantiation ; A Letter of St. Chryſoſtom to the Monk Ceſarius expreſly againſt it, 623. b. Condemn'd by Peter d' Ailli, a Member of the Council of Conſtance, 131 b. Rohault's Explication of Tranſubſtantiation, according to the Carteſian Hypotheſis, ſhewn to be faulty, 2122. a.

Treachery ; how it comes to be miſconſtrued Moderation, and by whom, 1310. a.

Treacle ; by whom firſt Invented, 261.

Treaſon (High, againſt the Life of a King of England, how puniſh'd, 1338. b.

Tree ; of Knowledge of Good and Evil, what the Prohibition of Eating of this Tree imports, 1255. a.

Tremoville (Duke of) in France, deſcended in a direct Line from Frederick, laſt King of Arragon, 2332. b. Sends Plenipotentiaries to the Treaty of Munſter, Nimmeguen, and Ryſwick, to aſſert his Right, but his Claim is rejected, ibid.

Trent; (Council of) its Character by the Abbot St. Cyran, 58. a. An Argument to prove its Deciſions binding, taken from the Conduct of the Synod of Dort, 2126. b. Its Solicitude about finding Terms in Controverted Caſes, which might fit all Parties, 540. b. Complains of the Pope's naming the Officers of their Aſſembly, and have liberty to chuſe their own Secretary, 1317. b. What the Abbot of St. Cyran ſaid of it, 58. a. Reaſons offer'd in this Council for diſpenſing with the Reſidence of Biſhops, 1772. b. A pleaſant Saying upon it of a Miſtreſs to her Gallant, who was a Prelate, 1161. a.

Trimmer; an example of a Trimmer from Macrobius, who taught Two Ravens, One to congratulate Auguſtus, the Other Mark Antony, 503. a. n.

Trinity; Whether Ariſtotle acknowledged the Myſtery of the Trinity, 365. a. The illuſtrating the Doctrine of the Trinity by a Parallel of Three Propoſitions in one and the ſame Syllogiſm, condem'd in a Council held at Soiſſons, as tending to Triheiſm, 22. b. Fewer Inconveniences in this Parallel than in the Three Dimenſions of Body, ibid.

Triumphs; of Love a great Inſtance of them, 1413. a.

Truths; a Coruption of the Heart is not what always hinders Men's perceiving the Truth, 2506. a. The Obſtacle is ſometimes in the Things themſelves, 2507. a. Truths which are reckoned Maxims, as contradictory as Truths and Errors, 603. b.

Tubal-Cain; a Reaſon for imagining him the Inventor of Chymiſtry, 640. b.

Turenne (Mareſchal) his conciſe way of Dining complain'd of by the Foreign Officers, 2663. b.

Turin; its Cittadel, and that of Antwerp built by Francis Facioti, Count of Monteſabro, a Famous Engineer, 2439. a b.

Turks; a Maxim of Religion with them not to deliver up any Place by a Treaty where a Moſque has been built, 1776. a. They keep no Treaties unleſs written in their own Language, 966 b. Modeſty of the Turkiſh Women, 2098. b. The Privileges of the Turkiſh Wives in this Life, and their Unhappineſs in the next, 2099. a. Not deſtitute of Books and Libraries, 1417. a. Their Cuſtom of ſolemnly curſing the Chriſtians in their Moſques on certain Days of the Year, 2909. b. The Reaſon of this, ibid. Prophecies relating to their Greatneſs and Downfal, 2107. a. & ſeq. Their Women have Hopes of Paradiſe notwithſtanding what Sir Paul Ricaut ſays, 1575. b. They hate the Jews more than any People in the world beſides, 2014. a. The Reaſon of this Hatred, ibid. They tolerate Uncarved Images in the Greek Churches, 2116. b. The Form of the Oath exacted by them when they enter into an Alliance with Chriſtians, 1352. a. Their Original of the Roſe, 2108. b.

Turonenſis; (Gregorius) a Lively Hint of his Credulity, 193. a.

Tutelar-God, why the Ancient Romans concealed the Name of it, 2769. a. b.

Tyranny; who was the firſt Founder of Tyrannical Government, 2527. a. Tyranny of our Paſſions over us, and ſwaying againſt all Idea's of Virtue and Temporal Intereſt, a Gulph to the Pagan Philoſophers, 1597. a. A Singular Piece of Tyranny in the Court of Perdiccas, King of Macedon, 1259. b. Tyranny does not ſo often drive Kings from their Thrones as Gentleneſs, 694. b 1156. a.

Tyrants; Dread to have their Infamous Actions expos'd to Poſterity, a Memorable Inſtance of this, 2832. a. Wounded deeper by Martyrologies, though unskilfully written, than by the ſharpeſt Satyrs, 2181. b. Whether Mariana's Book about the Lawfulneſs of Murdering Tyrants mov'd Ravillac to aſſaſſinate Hen. IV. 2180. b. 2183. a.

Tyrius; (Maximus) his Explication of the Origin of Evil, 2495. b. & ſeq.

V.

VAin Glory judiciouſly reflected on by Æneas Sylvius, 842. a.

Vair; (Du) His Anſwer to Henry IV. of France, when ask'd his Opinion about legitimating the Duke of Vendoſme, and ſetting the Crown of France on his Head, 1429. b.

Valentinian; tho' a moſt Chaſt and Virtuous Emperor, lov'd a Smutty Jeſt, 430. b. 'Twas by his Order that Auſonius wrote his Scandalous Cento Nuptialis, ibid. a.

Valerian; his Reaſon for not making Aurelian Governor to his Son, 441. a.

Valerianus; (Pierius) His Fine Satyrical Poem on the Elevation of Hadrian VI. to the Pontificate, 1559. b.

Valerius Maximus; the only Author who ſays that Caſſius ſaw the Spectre of Julius Cæſar in the Battel of Philippi, and turn'd his Back, 878. a.

Valette, (Duke de) his Execution in Effigy, and Flight into England, on a Diſgrace wilfully ſuffer'd by him to the Arms of France, to ſpight Cardinal Richlieu, 1323. a.

Vandome, (Abbot of) his Letter to Robert d'Arbriſſel, againſt his going into Bed to his Nuns by way of Mortification, prov'd not to be Spurious, 1329. b.

Vanity; The Cauſe of a Man's doubting of Providence, 19. E.

Vannozzi; his Method of tranſmitting to Poſterity only the Glorious Actions of Great Men without the Suſpicion of Faltery, 519. a. His General Rule in writing Hiſtories, ibid. b.

Varillas; cenſured for his making the Dutcheſs d'Eſtampes a Calviniſt, and the Motive he aſſigns of her Converſion, 1243. a b. Criticiz'd on his prefering Caſtalio's Style to Calvin's, 891. b. His Miſtakes and Inconſiſtencies concerning a Charge of Plagiariſm againſt Peter Alcionius, 161. b. His Falſe Account of Blandrata, 633. a. His Miſtakes about a Book written by John Calvin, 714. a. So enormous they are as enough to make one renounce Hiſtory, ibid. Particulars out of him about Calvin, which do not deſerve to be refuted, 819 a. A Remarkable Paſſage left out of his Manuſcript of his Hiſtory of Francis I. 819. b. His Equitableneſs to the Proteſtants in France commended in One Inſtance, 2618. b. His fine Deſcription of Two Rival Ladies, Iſabella of Arragon, and Alphonſina of the Houſe of Iſle, 313. a. Criticiz'd on his aſcribing to James Bongars an Anſwer to a Bull of Sixtus V. injurious to the King and Kingdom of France, 673. b.

Varro; (Marcus) why the Atheiſtical Notions advanc'd in his Books were judg'd more dangerous than ordinary by Tertullian, 255. a.

Varro; (the French) Mr. Menage ſo call'd, 1188. b. Wherein he excell'd his Original, ibid. n.

Vaſquez; of Opinion that Magicians are tolerated by God to prevent Atheiſm, 146. a.

Vaſſals; when ſold in France with the Lands as a Dependance, 904. a.

Vavaſſour; (Father) catches up and aggravates an Odd Blunder of Rapin, 292, 293. a.

Vendoſme; (Duke of) deſign'd for the Crown of France by Henry IV. 1422. b.

Venery; what Months and Seaſons People are moſt inclin'd to Venery, 2747. a. b.

Venetians; their Title to the Iſland of Cyprus how grounded, 1352 a. Their Wiſdom in oppoſition to the Folly of the French, 2020. N.

Venice; (Senate of) an Inſtance of their Rigorous Maxim, in not ſuffering their Miniſters to receive any Preferment at the Court of Rome, 489. Pleas'd with the Diſſolute Manners of their Clergy, becauſe it deſtroys their Power with the People.

Venus; of the Heathens had been the Whore of Cyniras, King of Cyprus, according to Clemens Alexandrinus, 990. b

Venus Anadiomene, Riſing out of the Sea, Appelles's Maſterpiece, 287. What Auguſtus paid for it to the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Coos, 288. a. The Myrtle ſacred to her, and why, 2735. b. the Invoking by her Lucretius in the beginning of his Poemis acknwledging a Providence, and overthrows the Doctrine of Epicurus about the unconcern'd State of the Gods; 1192. b.

Verſe; (Hexameter) the only Meaſure known among the Greeks for Six hundred Years 332. b.

Vertue; Reflections on the Admirableneſs of being vertuous, without deſiring to appear ſo, 217. a. b. The Belief of the Exiſtence of a Deity without the Belief of a Providence, no Inducement to Vertue, 2764. a. b. The Opinion of a Natural Connexion between Vertue and Happineſs, Vice and Miſery more operative than the Perſuaſion of a rewarding and puniſhing Providence, 2765. a. b.

Vervins (Treaty of) the only Treaty between France and Spain for a hundred Years, that had been advantageous to the former, 1636. a.

Veſpaſian; Several Authors of Opinion, that he was the Boar of the Foreſt of which David ſpeaks prophetically in the 79th Pſalm, 1960. b. He and his Son Titus Types of Antichriſt, ibid.

Veſtals; when oblig'd to leave their Cloyſter by Sickneſs, had Ladies of the higheſt Quality to attend them, 1278. a.

Villains; We are forc'd to admire ſome Villains on the ſcore of ſome Greatneſs of Soul in their very Crimes, 1368. E.

Villamarina (Iſabella) Princeſs of Salermo, her Extraordinary Accompliſhments and Elogy, 841. b.

Villanies; as few carried to the height as Heroical Vertues——— Mezrai, 1153. b.

Virgil; Criticiz'd upon a Paſſage relating to Dido, 1000. b.

Virgin (Bleſſed) her Image made after a Picture of Alexander the VIth's Siſter, who was very handſome, tho' not ſo vertuous, 1323. b. France put under her Protection, when and by whom, 2126. b. The Monks are not the only indiſcreet Votaries of the Virgin, 27. A Work concerning the Virgin ſtuff'd with the extravaganteſt Viſions, 108. a. Why it has not yet been advanc'd that ſhe alone Governs the World, 109. a. The danger of diſapproving the Errors which extend her Worſhip, 110 b. The Epithet of the Mother of God leads to ſtrange Conſequences, ibid. Conjectures on the Cauſes of the extraordinary Progreſs of her Worſhip, 2366. b. The Proteſtants give her the Title of Mother of God, as well as the Catholicks, 2368. b. Their prudential Reaſons for not uſing this Expreſſion ordinarily in their Books, 2369. a. A Fraternity of the Virgin kept in Boiſleduc, where Proteſtants are admitted as well as Papiſts, 2174. b. A Diſpute about the Lawfulneſs of this between Mareſius and Voetius, laſted Eighteen Years, 2175. a. Said to be a Fourth Perſon in the Godhead, 684. b. A Regular Brotherhood of the Bleſſed Virgin tolerated in Boiſleduc, into which the Proteſtants enter themſelves, 1174. b. An Apology for this Brotherhood by Mareſius, and a fierce Diſpute thereupon between him and Voetius, ibid. The Charge of giving her Titles too ſublime, how retorted on the Proteſtant Miniſters by a Biſhop of France, 364. A. ad. fin. Painters guilty of a great Licentiouſneſs in painting the Bleſſed Virgin after their own Miſtreſſes, or ſome famous Courtezan, 1323. b.

Virgin; Several among the Turks pretended to be Born of Virgins, and endu'd with a Miraculous Vertue to cure Diſeaſes, 2359. b. A Reflection on the Jewiſh High-Prieſts not being allow'd to Marry unleſs with a Virgin, 417. b.

Virginity; a Penetrative Virginity, the Meaning of it, 699. a.

Viſion (Ratified) what is meant by it, 702. b.

Uncertainty; The Hypotheſis of Uncertainty, by whom carried to the higheſt Pitch, 318. b.

Underſtanding; The difference between Underſtanding and Soul, according to the Platoniſts, 2520. a.

Univerſal Grace; The Doctrine of the greateſt Reformed Divines of France, 104. b. How it diſcovers it ſelf in great Wits, and how in ordinary Wits, 2466. b. The Doctrine of it, a Sea without Bounds or Bottom, 1785. a.

Univerſals; The Doctrine of them agreeable to the Chimera of the Spinoziſts, 927. a. The Scotiſts Doctrine of Univerſals, nothing but diſguis'd Spinoziſm, 19. b. The care the Romans took to make their Language Univerſal, 995. b. 996. a.

Univerſities; The Scholars in all Univerſities horribly Debauch'd, 113. b.

Vopiſcus; his Diſtinction between a Prince who is neceſſary, and a good Prince, 445.

Voſſius; his Civility and Moderation to thoſe whom he reprov'd, 514. a.

Voſſius (Iſaac) of Opinion that Beaſts can communicate their Thoughts to one another, ſooner and more happily than Men, 2607. b.

Urban VIII. his Epigram in Praiſe of Aldobrandus highly commended, 169.

Urbino (Duke d') preſſes Machiavel, who had written very judiciouſly of the Art of War, to draw up a Regiment before him, but all in vain, 2081. b.

Uſher; Whether ever Fitz-Simon the Jeſuit diſputed with him, 3009. C.

Uſurpers; An Exception to Saluſt's Maxim concerning them, 91. a.

Utrecht (Philip of Burgundy, Biſhop of) his exceeding Beauty, 1396. b.

W.

WAgers; They who lay Wagers deciſively, that ſuch a thing is not to be found in any Author, ſeldom fail to loſe.

War; A War againſt Women Explain'd, and Expoſtulated about, 1337. a. The prolonging a War one main Point of a General's Conduct, 142. b. a.

Wars (Civil) The good Effect of them, 445. a.

War (Art of) how much improv'd from what it was three or four hundred Years ago, 129. They that are ignorant of the Art of War, hardeſt to be dealt with by Great Captains, 102. Generals love to protract War, 927. b.

Watchings; Devotional Watchings in the Primitive Church, why ſuppreſs'd, 2871. b

Weights, Meaſures, and Land-Marks, by whom firſt Invented, 805. Whether their Invention proceeded from a Knaviſh Heart, 806. a.

Whore; and Concubine, two diſtinct Characters, 852. a

Widows; forbid by the Laws of Ancient Rome, to to Marry in Ten Months after the Death of their Husbands 2394. b A Comical Paſſage between Clement VII, and three young Widows of the Court of France, at the Interview between that Pope and Francis I. at Marſeilles, 2748. a. b.

Wife; The Liberty of Wives in ancient Rome, as great as that of Paris or London now, 1670. a. Reſtrain'd in ancient Greece, as in Italy at this time, ibid. A Diſcourſe of Henry IV. about the Qualities of a perfect Wife for a Prince, 1633. b. The greateſt Privileges of thoſe who have had bad Wives, according to the Hebrews, 628. b. Unlucky Wives commonly the Fate of Great Men, 651. A Cuſtom of Lending Wives among the Perſians and Lacedemonians, 1697. a. Whether there be any Sin in chuſing a handſome Wife, 674. a. The Caſe of a handſome and a homely Wife not parallel to that of a well-dreſs'd Partridge, and a piece of ruſty Bacon, ibid. b. A Wife's bearing chearfully with the Infirmities of a Husband admir'd by all the World, 96. b. Wives, why compar'd to the Fountain of Hammon, 2936. b. Chief Conſiderations of Severus in the Choice of a Wife, 1795. b. The manner of the Czar of Muſcovy's chuſing a Wife, 1371. b. n.

Winds; What ground there is for ſaying they are ſold to Paſſengers in Iſland, 1767. b.

Wine; Foreign Wine prohibited in Rome by a Decree of the Senate, 1278. b. Who firſt taught Men to mix Water with their Wine, 221. b. In Perſia they are moſt honour'd, who can bear moſt Wine 1054 a.

Wings; An Experiment of Artificial Wings in a Town of Italy, 1000. D.

Wiſe; The wiſe have not the Art of pleaſing, as many fools have, 1052. b.

Wiſdom; ſometimes it is the greateſt Wiſdom to counterfeit Folly, 2910. a.

Witchcraft; what kind of Poſtures were taken for Charms and Witchcraft among the Ancients, 165. a. Witchcraft of Gaming, a fearful Inſtance of it, 538. b. The Antiquity of Images in Witchcraft, 2635. a.

Wittemberg (the Divines of) the beginning and the end of their Opinion on the Divorce of Harry VIII. not eaſily reconciled, 506. b.

Witneſſes; Falſe Witneſſes in Cappadocia accuſtom'd themſelves to Tortures, and gave one another the Queſtion by way of Eſſay, 845. b. A Cuſtom of borrowing Falſe Witneſſes there, received in a Province of France, ibid. To be a credible Witneſs of the Truth of ſeveral Facts, there needs no more than the Truth of the Relation, 56 A. ad med.

Wits; Examples of great Wits that had been remarkably dull in their Childhood, 1208. b. Not the fitteſt Men to make Soldiers, 2445. b. Capital Cities take it ill that any ſhou'd ſet up for Wits, that have always liv'd in the Country, 2443. a. A great ſpice of Folly always enters into the Compoſition of great Wits, 856. F. ad in.

Wits (Great) the reaſon of their forging more Chimera's than other Men, 429. a. Their Works pleaſe at firſt for their Novelty, and at laſt for their Antiquity, 429. b.

Wolves; who was the Inventor of Traps and Snares for Wolves, and other wild Beaſts, 552. b. Hanging them on Gibbets, as they do in Germany, an Argument for the Liberty of Brute Beaſts, 2610. a.

Women; when cruel and ambitious, exceed Men in their Vices, 1261. a. Are ſureſt to overcome by a Running-Fight, 1327. b. The Misfortune of thoſe who are married to Old Men, ibid. Their Touch to be avoided (according to St. Jerom ) like the Bite of a Mad Dog, 1328. a. Why ſo apt to run after Religious Hypocrites, and Setters up of Conventicles, 1560. a. b. Their Gratitude to an Author, who wrote in Praiſe of the Sex, 1361. According to Ariſtotle, not made by Nature, but reſulting from an Imperfection in Matter, which prevents the formation of the Male, 1393. b. How divided about the Book, proving that Women have no Souls, 1394. a. The Queſtion whether they are Human Creatures, debated in a Council, 1393. b. Whether their uſing Men-Midwives in this Age, ſhews a greater Immodeſty than other Actions of the Women of Antiquity, 1665. b. The vertuouſeſt Women fancying there are Conjunctures, in which they may neglect the Surface of Honour, provided they preſerve the Subſtance, a dangerous Principle, 903. a. Why thoſe that are Unchaſt, have the greateſt power over their Husbands, 2087. b. No Women ſlander'd ſo much as by thoſe who have been their Slaves, 646. b. Women the cauſe of Wars from the earlieſt Times, 18. b. Are eaſily gain'd by Rhimes and Muſick, 21. a. A Woman that proſtitutes her Honour, to ſave her Husband's Life, 73. a. St. Auſtin's looſe Morality in this Point, ibid. a. The ſeveral Reaſons of their taking Abortive Potions, and murdering the Fruit of their Womb before, and after their Delivery, 2478. b. & ſeq. Infallible Signs, whereby to know whether Women have had Children, 2479. b. The unreaſonableneſs of lodging the Sovereign Authority in Women, 2404. a. The prodigious height of their Head-Dreſſes call'd Hennis, about Three hundred Years ago, 1017. a. A Point of their Conduct much approv'd, 971. b. n. A Woman between Thirty and Forty, will ſecure her Conqueſt better than an Artleſs Beauty of Fifteen, 812. a. They can forgive an Affront done their Honour, ſooner than the revealing a ſecret Imperfection, 812. b. When allow'd Funeral-Orations in Rome, and for what Merit, 836. b. A ſevere Order of Innocent XI. againſt their going with Naked Breaſts and Arms, 1758. b. The Morality of ſome Heathens, how Auſtere with regard to Women, 1785. b. Women dreſs for their own ſatisfaction, without a deſign to pleaſe any Man, 693 b. Their Luxury in Dreſs and Attire in St. Jerom's Days, ibid. They are aſſaulted even under the Appearances of the moſt Myſtical and Illuminated Theology, 699. b. Their Reign greateſt, when Luxury is in Faſhion, 106. The honeſt Deſign of a Diſſertation ſuppoſed to be written by Acidalius, that Mulieres non ſunt Homines— 1392. A. The Proportion of Pleaſure that Women have in Enjoyment above Men, 2894 b. How, and when formed, according to Ariſtotle, 1393. b. Fewer Women commit Matrimony with their Footmen, than Men with their Maids, 1413. a. Are forbid on pain of preſent Death, to be preſent at the Olympick Games, 586. b. The Reaſon of this, ibid. Whether they, or Men, ought to make the firſt Attack in Love, 2660. b. Socrates's Advice to his Diſciples, with regard to Women, 1327. b. The Characters of all the Women in Sophocles's Plays were good, and thoſe in Euripides's all bad, 1265 a. A Collection of curious Learning about their Topknots, where to be found, 260. b.

Wood; The Price of it rais'd by the Executions in Smithfield, 213. a. n.

Word; The difference between the Word of a Gentleman, and the Word of a King, 103. b. The Ancient Roman Authors complain'd of the want of Words in their Language, 2674. b.

World (The) Its Author compar'd by the Brachmans to a Spider; and its Creation and Annihilation explain'd by the Spider's ſpinning the Web out of its Bowels, and drawing it in again, 707. a. b. The requiring demonſtrative Proof that all its particular Parts are in the beſt State poſſible, ſhewn to be unreaſonable, 238. a. What Proof is ſufficient in this Caſe, ibid. b. Its Generation explain'd by the Ancient Philoſophers before Anaxagoras, without the Direction of a Divine Intelligence, 1826. b. The Eternity of the World taught publickly in Alexandria, by a Pagan Philoſopher in the VIth. Century, 211. b.

Worſhip; a Worſhip which conſiſted wholly in Weeping, 89. E. Its Penances in Acts of Joy, 891. J.

Writers; A Vice of Voluminous Writers, 477. b. Several are apt to brag of their Familiarity at the Univerſity with Writers who begin to have a great Reputation, an extraordinary Example of this, 832. a.

Writers; of Modern Romances, how they differ from the Ancient Mythologiſts, 1676. b. The Judgment of Montagne on the old Writers of France, 556. b.

Writings; How far a Conſequence may be drawn from a Man's Writings to his Morals, 2931. a. b.

X.

XAnthus; Two Names given to this River by Homer, viz. This, and Scamander; the one according to Human Language, and the other according to the Language of the Gods, 2682. b.

Xenocrates; his affected Chaſtity reprehended by Ariſtotle, 89. a.

Xenophon; Vindicates Socrates on account of the popular prejudice againſt him, occaſion'd by his two Diſciples, Alcibiades and Critias, 1034. a.

Y.

YOung Men; A perfidious Example of the Jeſuits ſeducing them into their Order, when their Education is committed to them, 134. Lipſius's Advice to them concerning a Stile in Writing, 48. a.

Z.

ZAchary; the Reaſon of his being ſtruck Speechleſs, according to a Legend cited by St. Epiphanius, 1760. a.

Zapolina (John) King of Hungary, dies of a Drinking-Bout on the News of the Birth of a Son, 1727. b.

Zeal; The prevalence of it begets an Indulgence for the bittereſt and moſt violent Writings, 192. b.

Zoroaſter; The Signification of the Word, and to whom attributed, 939. b. Held two diſtinct Eternal and Independent Principles, one Good, the other Bad, 2149. b. The Names he call'd them by, ibid. A ſuppoſed Diſpute between him and the Philoſopher Meliſſus, upon the Queſtion of two diſtinct independent Principles, one Good, and the other Evil, 2151. b. & ſeq.

Zozimus; his Contradiction, 1690. b.

Zuinglius's Doctrine; Father Paul diſpleas'd Cardinal Palavicini, by ſaying, That the Reception of Zuinglius's Doctrine was an Argument, that an higher Cauſe than Zuinglius was concern'd in it, 100. b.

17 JY 63

FINIS.